the navigating interest. He said, if that interest had any advantages, they were the result of their own industry and enterprise; they only asked to be left free to depend on these advantages. The coasting trade, he said, was not generally carried on by merchants, but by a poor and laborious class of people. He denied that any protection had been extended by the Government, from its establishment to the present day, to the navigating interest; their ships were built at greater expense, for labor and materials, than those of any other nation; they were the pack-horses of the nation; they were made the collectors of the revenue for the Government. This bill, he said, not only laid a tax on the article of duck, but also upon the raw material from which it was made; thus rendering it impossible to manufacture the article. It had the same operation in relation to wool. The tax imposed by this bill would amount, on a moderate computation, to three millions of dollars per annum, on the people. The gentleman from Massachusetts says, (and he may be more accurate,) that it will amount to six millions.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, said, this item increased the duty upon this article 100 per cent. He proceeded to state the quantity of duck imported, with the amount of duty which had heretofore been levied upon it; and to make a comparison between those duties and that proposed in this bill. He denied that any encouragement had been extended to the commercial part of the community, except in regard to the coasting trade, and in relation to that it was merely nominal; he had never known any man to make a fortune by the coasting trade. If the restriction were removed, no foreigner could partake of this trade. Mr. L. spoke of the difference in expense, in building ships in this country, and in other countries. The object of the bill was not revenue; it was for the encouragement of manufactures, and yet it was proposed to tax some articles which were not manufactured in the country. He proceeded to remark further, in relation to the balance of trade, which had so often been said to be against the country, and answered the arguments drawn from the present prices at which cottons were afforded in the market, by showing that the war prices and the peace prices were taken in comparison, and that the difference between the machinery formerly employed and that now used, was not estimated. Mr. L. replied to the argument that the stock, evidences of debt, &c., were passing into foreign hands. Upon this point we could not hear his remarks.

Mr. DICKERSON opposed the amendment. He was willing to reduce the duty proposed upon duck, but did not see any reason why Russia sheeting should be included. He reviewed the course that had been taken by the Government in levying duties upon duck. He said that as fine duck was made in America as floated on the ocean; and stated that a considerable amount of capital had been expended in manufactories for this article. He said the manufacturers only asked for the benefit of the home market. The commercial interest had as much encouragement as

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

this. Mr. D. adverted to the remark that we were adopting the Chinese policy, and spoke of the depressed situation of commerce, in consequence of its being overdone. Too much capital and too much labor had been invested in it. He asked what would have become of this capital, and the industry and enterprise of which the gentleman from Maryland had spoken, if the Government had not extended a helping hand to it when it was depressed to the earth? He then adverted to the former situation of the navigation of the country; its subsequent prosperity, the causes of that prosperity, and the acts that had been passed, giving exclusive encouragement to our own shipping. He could see no reason why the shipping interest should not bear its proportion of the taxes imposed by the Government.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, explained in reference to an error fallen into by the gentleman from New Jersey, concerning the prices of duck. He read a letter from a distinguished merchant, respecting the relative quality and prices of American and Russia duck.

Mr. DICKERSON made a few remarks in reply.

Mr. SMITH replied to Mr. DICKERSON in regard to the nature of the acts which were stated to have been passed for the protection of commerce. He commented upon the importance of the trade to Russia, and the danger of losing it entirely—one reason, he said, that our commerce was so depressed was, that we were, by our own unwise policy, depriving ourselves of all foreign markets.

Mr. D'WOLF made some statements in relation to the price of duck in Russia, and upon the quality of the American duck.

Mr. HAYNE stated that the clause of the bill under consideration imposed a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem on manufactures of silk, flax, and hemp, being a considerable increase on the present duties, when there could be no doubt these duties are already sufficiently high, and when the country is not prepared for the manufacture of such articles. A motion has been made to except "Russia and Holland duck and Russia sheeting," to which the gentleman from Virginia has moved to add osnaburghs, an article essential to the health and comfort of our slaves, and, in some degree, necessary to the poor in every part of the country. The Senate having refused to except osnaburghs, the same principle must prevent them from exempting duck and sheeting, as it cannot be pretended that those articles depend on different principles. Mr. H. said he should therefore vote against this particular exception, with the view of moving, at a future period, to strike out the whole section, and, by that means, to except not only duck and sheeting, but osnaburghs, and other articles of equal importance (which we do not manufacture) from a heavy and unreasonable tax. Mr. H. expressed a hope that the friends of commerce and of agriculture will unite in protecting the interests of both against the ruinous speculations of the manufacturers and their exclusive advocates.

The question on the motion of Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, was then put, and decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Branch, Chandler, Clayton, Holmes of Maine, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, King of New York, Knight, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Palmer, Parrott, Seymour, Smith, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Benton, Brown, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Elliot, Findlay, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, H. Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, McIlvaine, Noble, Ruggles, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Taylor of Virginia—26.

So the Senate refused to except duck and sheetings from the duty proposed in the bill.

Mr. ELLIOTT, of Georgia, then moved to amend the bill by striking out all the proviso which fixes a minimum price upon which the duties on cotton cloths, and cotton twist, yarn, or thread, are to be calculated.

This subject, said Mr. ELLIOTT, has been so much discussed, both in and out of Congress, that I would not now ask the attention of the Senate, were it not for the vast importance it has assumed as a national measure, and the deep solicitude it has awakened in the minds of those whom I have the honor more immediately to represent. As a national measure, sir, I consider its policy as more than questionable. The power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," was intrusted to Congress principally with a view to the revenue of the country; yet, in the judicious exercise of it, in the imposition of duties on foreign importations, it was intended to subserve the double purpose of augmenting the revenue and protecting the growing manufactures of the nation. These have accordingly been the legitimate objects of the laws hitherto passed by Congress in relation to this subject. The war of 1812 gave astonishing activity to our infant manufactures. Preventing almost entirely the introduction of foreign articles, it left the consumption of the nation to be supplied, in a great measure, by the efforts of domestic capital and labor. The extraordinary demand thus created for domestic articles insured to the manufacturers correspondent profits; and capitalists, forgetting the transitory character of the cause which occasioned this state of things, most improvidently invested large sums in manufacturing establishments. These establishments did well so long as the artificial stimulus under which they were created continued to operate. But the war at length closed, the monopoly was at an end, and ruin seemed inevitable. At this critical moment, sir, Congress interposed; and, although it was not possible to save all—many having paid for their establishments three or four times the value of them, and in some instances too with money borrowed from banks at extravagant rates of interest—yet it was hoped the prudent and the practical might be relieved. Accordingly, the law of 1816 was passed, under the assurance of the manufacturers themselves that they were satisfied with its provisions, but which were made still more favorable to them by the law of 1818, which subsequently passed on the same subject. The result of these acts at this time is a full Treasury and a tax on the consumption of foreign commodities, operating as a bounty on domestic manufactures of upwards of twenty millions of dollars annually! Thus far the nation has gone, if not cheerfully, certainly without excitement; for the wants of the Treasury seemed to justify it, and the depressed state of manufactures, from particular causes, called for something like the new regulations then adopted. But now, sir, our finances are adequate to the annual disbursements of the nation; and if they are not improving, they require not the augmentation of existing duties to sustain them. This, then, is not to be regarded as a revenue bill; its advocates will not succeed in attempting to pass it off on the nation as such. It is too apparent that its sole object is the profit of the manufacturer, at the expense of all those who may find it either convenient or necessary to consume foreign merchandise. And will Congress undertake thus to interfere with the employment of individual capital and labor? Shall we pass laws to regulate and control the private pursuits of the citizens of this free community? Are we prepared to assume the exercise of such a power in the face of the nation? To a revision of the tariff, sir, I should have had no objection. This is an operation which may be advantageously attempted at regular periods; with a view to a judicious distribution of the duties among the various objects of the tax. But, against a periodical increase of the imports of the nation, not called for by the existing state of the Treasury, but induced by the importunity of the manufacturing interest of the country, and for the sole benefit of this particular class, I do most solemnly protest.

I consider this bill, then, Mr. President, as laying the foundation of an odious system of restrictions in this country, which may not readily be laid aside, even after its pernicious effects shall have been ascertained. Its obvious effects will be to induce the investment of much additional capital in manufacturing establishments. And this transfer of labor and capital will continue to be made, until the competition excited shall cause the supply of the various articles produced, to exceed the demand, when a reaction must take place, and new bounties be required to sustain the unnatural system. And, think you, sir, you will then be able to resist the importunity with which Congress will be pressed to afford further encouragement? No, sir; you will probably be told, and that truly, that yours was the fault; you interfered unnecessarily in the private occupations of individuals, and by taxing the many for the benefit of the few, you induced, if you did not force, all the capital and labor employed in the manufactures, to take that direction; and you will be constrained by the amount of this capital invested, and now not to be withdrawn; if you are not compelled by the strength of the manufacturing interest on this floor, to go on with your sustaining measures, until you find the nation involved in all the odious consequences of the British restrictive system. And what, sir, are the equivalent advantages promised you by the advocates of this measure? Domestic manufactures thus encouraged, say they, will render us independent of foreign nations. In one point of view, this is certainly most desirable. But are we not already physically independent? Has not this nation long since been able to produce all that is necessary for her support and defence? And is there any other attainable, or even desirable, independence for civilized communities? Absolute independence belongs not to civilized man; and it can be affirmed of the savage only from the paucity of his wants. The true independence of a civilized man, consists in the power of gratifying his wants; and this power depends on the quantity of consumable articles he can obtain in exchange for his surplus produce or labor. But this quantity will be greater or less in proportion to the extent of the market and the freedom of exchange. For it is from the profits of commercial intercourse, growing out of the mutual wants of civilized society, that enterprise is stimulated to seek out distant markets, where the most advantageous exchanges are to be effected. Every restraint, then, imposed upon him in these particulars, abridges this power, and necessarily lessens his independence.

Again, we are told that this restrictive policy will encourage home industry; and save millions to the nation!

The annual unproductive expenditures of a nation is the amount of its consumption. The cheaper, therefore, any nation can be furnished with the consumable commodities required for the supply of her wants, the less the tax upon her annual resources. If, under the operation of the existing duties, the national consumption is sixty millions of dollars, (I speak hypothetically,) and you add thirty-three and one-third per centum, by a new imposition of duties, will not the annual unproductive expenditure of the nation be increased twenty millions? A part of this sum, it is true, will go into the pockets of the home manufacturer, and may make him richer, but will it not leave the consumers poorer who have paid it? And who are these consumers? Nine tenths of the people; the great mass of the nation. Nine tenths of the people, then, are to be taxed most immoderately, to increase the annual receipts of the other one tenth; and this is called encouraging home industry! Sir, I protest against the use here attempted to be made of "the sacred associations of home." The generous impulses which are ever awakened at the mention of a spot so cherished and revered, should be reserved for great occasions, when individual sacrifices must be submitted to for the attainment of national objects. They should never be called into action for partial purposes; and, least of all, to aid a policy whose obvious effects will be, to diminish the fireside comforts of nine-tenths of the nation.

But how is this measure to save millions to the nation? Are the profits of our manufacturing establishments so much greater than those of commerce and agriculture, as to promise advantages to the labor and capital which may be transferred from the latter to the former? If so, they surely need no protection; but should be called on to furnish aid, if aid were necessary, to the less prosperous branches of productive industry. But, if it be true, as asserted, that manufacturers are so illy paid for their labor and capital, as to require the imposition of a heavy tax on the other branches of national industry to support them, how can the national wealth be increased by forcing more labor and capital into a channel acknowledged to be so unproductive? Should this bill pass, the profits of manufacturers would be great indeed. But as the payment of them must be made for the annual resources of the nation, it would by so much increase the expenditure for national consumption; and the consumption of a nation is a subtraction from, and not an addition to, its annual wealth. I cannot perceive, then, that this measure will add any thing either to the independence, the industry, or the wealth of the United States.

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

But, I do think I can perceive many pernicious consequences which must result from its adoption. What, sir, will be its effects upon the commercial, navigating, and agricultural interests of the nation? These are so intimately connected that, in considering this subject, I choose not to separate them. They are, indeed, so bound together by the strongest ties of mutual dependence and reciprocal advantage, that no one of them can be seriously burdened without inflicting some correspondent injury on the others. The annual surplus produce of agriculture derives its value, principally, from that commercial enterprise which, by the means of navigation, seeks out for it the best markets, however remote—thus securing to it the highest prices, and supplying, in return, the consumable commodities of other countries, which may be wanted, on the lowest terms; while the profits of the labor and capital employed in these transfers, by the merchant and ship owner, gradually advances with the increasing demand for the supplies which they furnish. But the profits of this system of exchange must ever be in the inverse ratio of the restrictions imposed upon it. On the exports of the nation, the Constitution has wisely interdicted all burdens, while, on the imports, it has permitted Congress to lay and collect duties and imposts, as a legitimate source of revenue. And, notwithstanding the heavy losses experienced under the operation of the Milan and Berlin decrees, the disasters of the late British war, the pressure of the embargoes which preceded it, and the no less destructive effects of that unexpected competition which followed, on the sudden return of universal peace, the Treasury of the nation has already received, from this single source, about three hundred and fifty millions of dollars! This fact incontestably proves the value and importance of these branches of the productive industry of the nation, and justifies the policy which would cherish them as the foundation of its wealth and power. But, sir, the bill on your table proposes to protect and sustain an extended system of domestic manufactures, by the imposition of excessive, if not prohibitory duties on imports. It is most manifest, then, that it contemplates additional restrictions on these important branches of industry, calculated not only to lessen their profits, but seriously to embarrass and depress them. As far as the duties approach to a prohibition, the commerce of the country will be suspended, and the shipping employed in furnishing the accustomed supply of the dutied articles be thrown out of employment. In the year 1807, fifteen ships were employed from the town of Salem alone, in the British East India trade, and brought in principally white cotton fabrics, paying an ad valorem duty, and valued at upwards of four millions of dollars; but the laws of 1816 and 1818 imposed a duty so excessive on these articles, that, in the year 1819, two ships only could be maintained in the trade! A similar effect must necessarily be produced by these new regulations, whenever the duties are greatly increased; for, the duty being a tax upon consumption, the consumption will lessen as the tax is augmented. But the consumption will always regulate the supply. No more, then, will be imported than can be consumed; and the business of the merchant and the ship-owner must be abridged in the ratio of the diminished consumption of the nation. Nay, still further, sir—commerce being but the exchange of equivalents, a refusal on our part to receive imports must directly lessen our exports; for, how shall we be paid for our surplus productions, if we refuse to receive those of foreign nations, which are the only equivalents they can furnish in exchange? And may we not calculate, too, on countervailing measures from those nations whose produce we thus exclude from our markets? What has been the operation of the existing duties in this regard? An examination of our commerce with Spain and Portugal, will furnish the answer. Excluding the period of the late war between the United States and Great Britain, we will compare the imports and exports of the years 1810 and 1811 with those of 1817 and 1818; the first being before, and the last after, the imposition of the present duties.

In the years 1810 and 1811, there were imported into the United States, from Spain and her dependencies—

Wines, gallons	-	-	-	-	1,454,012
In the years 1817 and 1818—
Wines, gallons	-	-	-	-	917,201

Difference	-	-	-	-	536,811
------------	---	---	---	---	---------

Spirits from grain, gallons	-	-	-	-	1,577
Spirits from grain, gallons	-	-	-	-	333

Difference	-	-	-	-	1,244
------------	---	---	---	---	-------

From other materials, gallons	-	-	-	-	1,017,653
From other materials, gallons	-	-	-	-	157,038

Difference	-	-	-	-	860,615
------------	---	---	---	---	---------

In the years 1810 and 1811, there were exported

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

to Spain and her dependencies from the United States—

Corn, bushels - - - - - 1,563,509

In the years 1817 and 1818—

Corn, bushels - - - - - 158,888

Difference - - - - - 1,404,621

Flour, barrels - - - - - 855,419

Flour, barrels - - - - - 198,975

Difference - - - - - 656,444

Rice, tierces - - - - - 65,264

Rice, tierces - - - - - 21,989

Difference - - - - - 43,275

Tobacco, hogsheads - - - - - 13,733

Tobacco, hogsheads - - - - - 6,411

Difference - - - - - 7,322

In the years 1810 and 1811, there were imported from Portugal and her dependencies into the United States—

Wines, gallons - - - - - 918,046

In the years 1817 and 1818.

Wines, gallons - - - - - 612,660

Difference - - - - - 305,386

Spirits from grain, gallons - - - - - 54,090

Spirits from grain, gallons - - - - - 431

Difference - - - - - 53,659

From other materials, gallons - - - - - 33,916

From other materials, gallons - - - - - 20,966

Difference - - - - - 12,950

In the years 1810 and 1811, there were exported from the United States to Portugal and her dependencies—

Corn, bushels - - - - - 2,747,484

In the years 1817 and 1818—

Corn, bushels - - - - - 1,557,019

Difference - - - - - 1,190,465

Flour, barrels - - - - - 765,364

Flour, barrels - - - - - 138,493

Difference - - - - - 626,871

Rice, tierces - - - - - 70,963

Rice, tierces - - - - - 2,149

Difference - - - - - 68,814

Tobacco, hogsheads - - - - - 8,779

Tobacco, hogsheads - - - - - 881

Difference - - - - - 7,898

these two nations; by which, at least thirty-five ships engaged in this traffic have been thrown out of employment, and their markets closed against our surplus produce. A similar effect has been produced in Holland, where the diminution of our importations, occasioned by the excess of the duty imposed, has been followed with a correspondent reduction of the consumption of American produce; particularly of tobacco and rice. The direct and obvious tendency, then, of the provisions of this bill, is to destroy our foreign commerce, bankrupt our merchants, and, by confining the surplus productions of agriculture at home, to diminish their value, and impoverish all classes of the community, except manufacturers.

And are you prepared Mr. President to pursue this disastrous course? In this enlightened age, when the wisest statesmen of Europe are yielding to the conviction of the deleterious operation of restrictive systems, and, under the guidance of a more liberal policy, are seeking to establish the intercourse of nations upon principles of reciprocity, will you, regardless alike of your example and your interest, lay the foundation of one of the most exceptionable character? Should you not rather improve the occasion, so auspicious for the purpose, to secure and multiply foreign markets, by increasing the facilities to foreign intercourse? Sir, your foreign commerce, consisting of nearly eight hundred thousand tons of shipping, and employing forty thousand seamen, is worthy of all your care and solicitude. In it is invested an immense capital, not less than thirty-five millions of dollars; whose employment gives the means of support to hundreds of thousands of the poor and laboring inhabitants of your seacoast. From this source also must you look for the strength and efficiency of your Navy. This is the school where seamanship is acquired, enterprise encouraged, and dangers rendered familiar. The hardy and adventurous sailor is to be found only where foreign commerce is duly appreciated and encouraged. Hitherto the commerce of the United States has been fostered and encouraged; and no nation ever boasted of seamen more skilful or patriotic than the American tars. Under the command of our gallant naval officers, what did not these meritorious men achieve for this nation during the last war? They first checked the proud triumphs of the enemy, and broke the talisman of British naval invincibility. They saved your Northern frontier from invasion, by the brilliancy of their victories on the Lakes—and on the Atlantic Ocean, they bore your flag in triumph even to the shores of England! Nay, sir, disdaining confinement within those limits, they doubled Cape Horn, and, with a single ship, created a fleet from the spoils of the enemy in the Pacific Ocean! The American Navy is no longer the theme of contumely and reproach; it has fought itself into the confidence and affections of the people, and is considered by all as an important arm of national defence. Most unwise, then, should we be, if, disregarding the honorable experience of the past, we not only neglect to foster and protect this invaluable establishment, but pass laws like the one on your table,

These facts show the pernicious effects of the duties already imposed on the importations from

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

in direct hostility to its future growth and efficiency.

But, sir, how will the provisions of this bill operate on your revenue? If the assertion I commenced with be correct, that the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, and imposts," was intrusted to Congress principally with a view to the revenue of the nation, it is surely incumbent on us to see that we pass no laws, in the exercise of this power, which shall diminish the revenue. The amount of a revenue derived from imports must always be in the direct ratio of the consumption of the dutied articles; for, the consumption constituting the demand, will ever regulate the supply. But the consumption must necessarily depend upon the means of the nation to purchase the articles wanted. The less the price of these articles, then, the greater the means for their procurement; and, by consequence, the greater the quantity that will be consumed. But this bill proposes a considerable augmentation of the existing duties, which, being a tax on the use of the articles specified, must necessarily lessen their consumption by diminishing the means of payment. To what degree the consumption of the country will be affected by those new regulations, it is not possible to say with precision. Yet it may safely be affirmed, should the bill pass with its present provisions, they must lessen the receipts in the Treasury, after the first year, more than two millions!* And will there be no danger to the revenue from smuggling? The high prices consequent upon excessive duties have in every country produced an illegal supply of the dutied articles, by which the wants of the nation have been relieved, and the revenue defrauded. Could the Government so enforce the execution of this law as to prevent the illicit introduction of foreign goods, most of the new duties might be realized: for, such is the force of habit arising from the long use of particular articles, that more than their value might be obtained from those who could ill afford to pay for them. But England, with her thousand ships of war, and her army of revenue officers, has not been able to insure the execution of her laws on this subject. And the United States, in such a contest with her citizens, where the duties are deemed excessive, must prove equally powerless. Since the formation of this Government, under the wise imposition of moderate duties, there has accrued to the Treasury from imports alone, the sum of $350,000,000! And, greatly to the honor of our merchants, this immense amount has been collected and paid into the coffers of the nation with the loss of less than one-fourth of one per centum! Sir, there is nothing in our history more creditable to our national character than this fact. And what is the lesson which it teaches? It shows you that, when your regulations are necessary for the support of Government, and not intended for partial purposes, the moral sense of the nation will sustain and enforce them. Let your laws, then, sir, be just, having for their object the public interest, and operating as equally as practicable on all classes of our citizens, and you will require no guards to secure to them their intended effect. But you have no right to calculate on the aid of this principle in the enforcement of laws of a contrary character. The reason of the case is totally different, and a moral and intelligent community will not hesitate long in drawing the proper distinction.

But should the revenue be diminished by this speculation in favor of domestic manufactures, the deficiency must be supplied from some other source. And agriculture, already languishing under these restrictions, from a diminution of her markets, must be subjected to additional burdens. In the present state of this cardinal branch of national industry, a system of direct taxation would be ruinous. Yet to such a measure the Government must resort in the event of a failure of the revenue from imports. The measure derived from this source is now adequate to the necessary disbursements of the nation, but the Treasury report shows it is gradually decreasing; and this diminution can be accounted for only from the diminished consumption of the dutied articles, occasioned by the weight of the tax already imposed. The agricultural interest, then, is deeply concerned in the impost regulations which are proposed in this bill; and it becomes those who have been deputed to represent it, to see that no higher duties are imposed than the finances may require, and that these be so distributed among the various objects of the tax as to result in the least sacrifices to the people, and the greatest revenue to the nation. A moderate system of duties, collected under the ad valorem system, has heretofore produced the happiest results in both these respects, and being recommended by the experience of thirty-five years, should not now, without strong reasons, be abandoned. As the duty is the price paid in the first instance by the importer, for the privilege of introducing foreign commodities into the home market, it would seem reasonable, if not necessary, that it should bear a direct proportion to the value of the article at the place where it was produced.

But this bill adopts another principle, and by an arbitrary valuation, twice, and in some instances, three times as high as the real costs, either entirely prohibits the importation, or burdens the consumption with the payment of twice or three times the amount of duty it seems to impose. In the first instance, the revenue is lost by prohibition; in the second, it is lessened by a diminished consumption, occasioned by the weight of the tax. And yet, in neither case does it appear to be the intention of the law to produce these effects. Sir, I protest against this masked legislation, as unworthy of Congress, and not reputable to the nation. The people of this Union are high-minded and honest, and they expect from your measures no more than meets the eye. They will never sanction acts whose designs are covered, and whose effects they cannot calculate.

Another strong objection to this bill is, that it imposes a higher rate of duties on the consumption of the poor than on the rich. Low-priced cottons, such as plaids, stripes, gingham, muslins, and calicoes, are burdened with a higher duty than the finer fabrics which are used exclusively by the rich. And this, too, without any adequate reason to justify it; for the capital employed in the production of these fabrics is receiving at this time greater profits than that invested in any other branch of national industry. But the history of manufactures in England proves that such protection is not necessary to the success of this species of manufacture. Nay, sir, it proves that those flourish most which have been least protected; for her silk and woollen manufactures, which have been so amply guarded and protected by law, have languished, in comparison with her cotton manufactures, which have been left to the intelligence and energy of those who directed their operations. Instead, therefore, of thus unnecessarily increasing the burdens of the poor and laboring class of the community, the committee who reported this bill had much better have provided for the reduction in salt and the cheaper descriptions of tea, with a view to the relief of the necessitous. But by the provisions of the bill as it now is, it is proposed to tax those most who are least able to bear it. And should you enact a law of this character, would the public sentiment suffer it to remain on your statute book? No, sir; I think I hazard nothing in saying it would not long resist the common sense of the nation.

* The bill was modified, and the rate of duty greatly reduced after Mr. E. spoke.

But, sir, I am constrained by the strongest motives of duty, to inquire what will be the probable effect of this bill upon the interests of the cotton growing States. These are entirely agricultural, as well by the habits of their people as the policy of their civil institutions. And their prosperity is of vital importance to the whole Union—for whether this nation is to become a manufacturing community gradually as its wants shall dictate, or more rapidly, by the force of artificial stimulants, the cotton of the South is equally necessary to the profitable employment of its capital and labor. Under our present policy, these States not only furnish the raw material for the cotton fabrics manufactured at home, but give employment to our navigating interest by offering to capitalists an export produce of the value of upwards of twenty millions of dollars, equal to nearly one-half of the whole exports of the United States.

But, if to the value of cotton exported,	$20,445,320
You add for tobacco	6,000,000
For rice	1,820,985
For flour and corn	3,000,000
And for lumber of all descriptions, with naval stores, viz: tar, pitch, and turpentine	1,000,000

Making an aggregate of	$32,266,505
------------------------	--------------

You will have an export produce from the eight Southern States, being but one-third of the whole number of States, of more than four-sixths of the entire domestic exportation of the nation.

The quantity of cotton produced in 1822 was about 600,000 bales of 300 weight each, or 180,- 000,000 of pounds of all descriptions. Of this quantity, not more than 100,000 bales were required for domestic consumption. Five hundred thousand bales, then, or five-sixths of the whole produce, were left on the hands of the growers to seek a foreign market. Of these, four hundred and sixty-eight thousand seven hundred and sixty-five bales were exported to British ports; and the residue to France, Holland, and other places on the continent. From these facts it is obvious that the culture of cotton in the United States is supported principally by the foreign consumption of the raw material. And although the domestic consumption may be expected to increase, yet the capacity of the country to produce the article being equal to any exigency, a correspondent increase of the raw material must inevitably follow the new demand. It is, then, the interest of the States engaged in this valuable cultivation to cherish the subsisting intercourse with foreign nations, that the demand for these productions may not only be secured, but extended. But the continuance of a commercial traffic of this character, will depend upon the mutual profits of the exchanges which may be effected. And as raw materials are required only for manufacture, the most profitable exchanges for the manufacturer are the fabrics produced at his factory. Either, therefore, to prohibit the importation of these directly, or greatly to lessen their consumption by excessive duties, is to weaken the inducements to this traffic, and thereby to endanger the market for American cottons. Were there no other countries from whence cottons could be procured but the United States, no apprehensions of a loss of the market would be indulged. But when this valuable material is produced in the West Indies, in South America, in India, and even in Egypt, in quantities and qualities to suit the wants of the European manufacturer, no difficulty can be experienced in commanding a competent supply. And this supply will be sought in those countries where the consumption of the manufactured articles shall afford the greatest encouragement to the capital and labor employed in their production.

Under this view of the subject, sir, this bill is calculated most seriously to affect the interests of the South, by diminishing the value of its most important staple, and thereby causing the transfer of much labor and capital to other cultivations, now known to be less productive. But the effects of the measure will be felt, not only in the diminution of the receipts of the planter, but in the augmentation of his expenditure. As agriculturists, the inhabitants of the South purchase almost all the manufactures, of every description, which they consume. It is, then, obviously, their interest to procure these wherever they may be obtained on the best terms. And it is not easily perceived, as national is but the aggregate of individual wealth, how it can be the policy of any free Government to counteract the wishes of her citizens in this regard. A tax on the consumption of foreign articles, with a view to the support of the Government, will never be objected to by the people of these States. They cherish too strong an attachment to this Union not to contribute, most cheerfully, their just proportion to the payment of the necessary expenses of the nation.

MAY, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

But, against a rate of duties higher than may be required for this object, and intended to sustain another interest, at their expense, they are bound to protest. This bill, sir, proposes a rate of duties, not only higher than that which is called for by the wants of the Treasury, but so excessive as to threaten a diminution of the consumption of the dutied articles, and, thereby, to impair the public revenue.

Cotton bagging is used exclusively within these States, and, as the manufacture of it requires but little capital and no skill, the new duty upon it is to be regarded as an additional tax on the cotton grower for the encouragement of the cultivator of hemp. The proposed duty, therefore, is objectionable, not only as being excessive, but because it is partial in its operation. Every tax should have for its object the promotion of the public interest, and be so imposed as to operate as equally as practicable on all classes of the community, throughout the various subdivisions of the Union. Nothing could wear an aspect more unkind or invidious than a tax on one subdivision of the Union, by which the profits of its capital and labor should be abridged, for the sole purpose of improving the condition and increasing the gains of another portion. Yet this duty will operate as a tax upon the agriculture of the South, for the benefit of that of the West; and, if the principle be correct, it may be carried into general operation; in which event, the various geographical divisions of the nation would be found arrayed in interests against each other, at the imminent hazard of that peace and harmony which are ever so essential to the public weal.

On the articles of coarse woollens, baize, plaids, and bombazetts, it imposes a duty which, with all the charges of importation, will exceed sixty per centum. But these fabrics compose the Winter garments of a great portion of the poorer classes of the community; and a particular description of them imported for that purpose, is extensively used for the clothing of our black population. And should this excessive duty be paid upon them, it would prove a most burdensome tax upon the consumption of these States. But I am persuaded, sir, its rigid exaction would soon force from our markets the accustomed supply of these goods, for the people could not afford to pay them. And when these shall be thus excluded, is it expected that the manufactures of the East and the West will be received as a substitute? No, sir; the ruinous effects of this restrictive system, if not a just sense of the injury inflicted on the resources of those States, for the benefit of a particular interest, a favored class, will prevent the consumption of any domestic fabrics which are not produced within their own limits. Economy in expenditure, from necessity, will become the order of the day, and no one will be disposed to purchase what he may be able to produce at home. However manufactures, then, may succeed in driving foreign competition from our markets, they will not be successful in their attempt to force the consumption of their fabrics upon us at the extravagant prices this bill will authorize them to demand. We, too, sir, may be taught to encourage home industry, and, if compelled to become independent of foreign manufactures, we may be induced to question the policy which would make us tributary to those of our own country. But, sir, should this bill pass, would it afford the relief anticipated by domestic manufactures? As it is not proposed to loan money to our manufacturers, it is obvious this measure will not directly increase the capital employed. Its only immediate effect will be to increase the profits of that capital. But, it is believed that those who are most importunate for relief, possess least of this capital; while the real capitalists are satisfied with the existing duties; wisely preferring stability in your laws, with certain profits, to those fluctuations inseparable from frequent changes, and whose results defy all calculations. Should this bill become a law, the profits of the capital now employed, under skilful management, will be immense. But this extraordinary management must soon attract so much additional capital and labor into this favored employment, as to overstock the market with the fabrics which would be produced; and, unless sustained by new stimulants, the whole system, like the bloated carcass of an epicure, must sink beneath the weight of its own indulgences. Nor could any relief be anticipated from exportation; for, if our manufacturers are unable to compete at home with foreign fabrics, having the advantage of the existing duties, how can they hope to succeed in other markets without the aid of any duty, and burdened with all the charges of exportation? Those, therefore, who possess but little capital would realize comparatively no benefit from this measure, while such as are in the skilful employment of an adequate sum would hazard the loss of the regular profits which they now enjoy in the vain hope of securing greater. I cannot perceive, then, that this restrictive policy would benefit ultimately, even the manufacturers themselves; and as I entertain no doubt of its deleterious operation on the interests of all other classes of the community, I must be permitted to express a hope that my motion will prevail; and that the bill will finally be rejected.

18th Con. 1st Sess.—22

TUESDAY, May 4.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the President to exchange five arpents of land, on the south side of the public lot at Baton Rouge, for an equal quantity of land on the north side of said lot;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Jacob Slough;" reported them severally without amendment.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the issuing a register to the brig William, of New York; and the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the executors of John B. Mebane to collect certain arrears of tax;" reported them severally without amendment.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, and others," reported it without amendment.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the legal representatives of John Lauderman;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Bradford," reported them, severally, without amendment.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Joseph Firman and others;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Maturin Guichot;" reported them severally, without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. EATON, the Committee on Public Lands were discharged from the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Fry and Spalding," and it was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McILVAINE, from the Committee of Claims, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Thomas L. Ogden and others;" the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Strain;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Landie Richardson;" reported them, severally, without amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Amasa Stetson;" and concurred therein.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Captain Thomas Staniford;" and concurred therein.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Thaddeus Mayhew;" and concurred therein.

The three bills yesterday brought up for concurrence, were severally read twice, by unanimous consent.

On motion, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Brotherton," was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Edward Evans," was referred to the Committee of Claims.

The bill, entitled "An act for the relief of J. Outramare," was referred to the Committee on Finance, to consider and report thereon.

THE TARIFF.

The bill from the House of Representatives, "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," was again taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole.

The question was upon the motion submitted yesterday by Mr. ELLIOTT, to amend the bill, by striking out the proviso, which establishes the minimum upon which the duties on cotton cloths and cotton twist, yarn, or thread, are to be calculated.

Mr. RUGGLES spoke in opposition to this amendment; on the general ground that the manufactures of the country ought to be encouraged; and, in particular, those which were in general use, and of absolute necessity, and for the manufacture of which we possess adequate means.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, spoke as follows:

Mr. President: The honorable Senator who has just sat down has selected the cotton manufacture, as indicating, by its success, both the course we ought to pursue as to the woollen, and even as to the entire system, without discriminating between the facilities attached to cotton, and without taking any general view of the consequences to be expected from the entire bill. Each of its items is said to be a national object, and each of its speculations, however local or selfish, conceals its true character, by assuming an epithet used by avarice to deceive ignorance. There is no better mode of detecting the artifice, and anticipating its designs, than that of reviewing the projects which have heretofore promised national blessings, and inflicted national calamities. Of these I have seen a succession, calculated to raise up a pecuniary aristocracy, at the expense of labor and industry; while each project as loudly protested that it only contemplated the good of the nation, as is done by the several items of this bill.

The first of these projects occurred on the establishment of this Government. The Revolutionary war had thrown into circulation a paper currency, State and Federal, of various denominations, such as paper money, certificates, and final settlements. Every body had obtained some of these currencies, and all had greatly depreciated. Under the pretext of establishing national credit a combination of men was formed, who ingeniously got possession of certain descriptions of these currencies, and effected a conversion of them, both principal and interest, into specie; leaving the great bulk of paper currencies, founded upon assurances equally solemn, and circulated by the same necessity, to perish without redemption. This mass being diffused among the people, the purpose of the proposed national project would not have been effected, had the same degree of justice been rendered to all. Next followed, for the national good, also the assumption of the State debts; but it resulted in giving a specie value to such portions of State currencies as had been monopolized, and leaving the rest to perish. Banking was the next project brought forward, also for the national good; and how far it has fulfilled this profession, or whether it has only effected its real design of transferring wealth from industry to fraud, the Senate knows. A tariff, to introduce and nourish manufactures, was the next national project. It professed a detestation of every mercenary view; and patriots—disinterested patriots—were even dug out of the earth in geological masses. The pension law was the last project which I shall recur to, in order to illustrate the pretext of national good, always used and seldom fulfilled.

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

In order, sir, to display the effects of this succession of national projects, I have prepared an account, every item of which is extracted from, or sustained by, documents from the several departments, but chiefly from the returns of the Senate's resolution on the first day of March, 1823, which I had the honor to propose, for the purpose of obtaining facts to be used upon this subject, expected to occur at the present session.

But, before I adduce the account extracted from these returns, I must premise that the contrast thereby exhibited between nine and seventeen States is by no means intended as a complaint against the former, as States, on account of the great pecuniary advantages they already enjoy. These, so far as they are derived from the legitimate sources of superior skill and industry, do not excite any envy in the Southern States. Far from grudging them their just acquisitions of wealth, we participate in these genuine exhibitions of prosperity, and rejoice in the success of their honest industry. We complain only of legislative frauds, by which our property to a great extent, and theirs to some amount, is transferred from poverty to affluence—from labor to ease—and from industry to idleness. We complain, independently of the gross oppression thus inflicted upon individuals, that this policy is merely a copy of the English combination between the Government and capitalists, and only tends towards the establishment of a pecuniary aristocracy, such as that produced in England by the same process. We complain that this policy, so oppressive to a majority, and so adverse to the principles by which alone a just and free government can be preserved, has already proceeded here with such vast strides as that this legislative giant has become a match—perhaps an overmatch—for agriculture, ship-building, and commerce, united. We believe that this aristocratical pecuniary combination will constitute a more oppressive government here than in England, because there it can only intrigue with a very few interests; whereas here it can enlist geographical and local interests, as instruments to work on its side and provide for its avarice. In England, the agricultural interest is very different from ours—it is that of landlords, united by one impulse, too powerful to be coerced, and requiring equivalencies. Here the agricultural interest is divided by climates and dissimilar products. The legislative pecuniary aristocracy here may therefore enlist auxiliaries by local partialities, which it cannot do in England. It may get votes by indulgences to wool-growers and hemp-growers, and draw recruits from agriculture itself, to fight in its mercenary ranks. This fact forcibly illustrates the intention of the Constitution in giving to Congress a power “to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes;” to use the word commerce in accordance with the principles of the Union and the local independence of the States; to use it in the same sense obviously annexed to it in the cases of foreign nations and Indian tribes. As a pecuniary aristocracy could not convert these nations and tribes into victims for feeding its avarice, in virtue of the word commerce, so that word was never intended to invest it with a power of rioting upon the entrails of devoted States. The uniformity required in the imposition of imposts and other taxes, corresponds with a construction of this word which leaves unimpaired the local justice and security intended to be established by this uniformity, and visibly interdicts the destruction of one of the plainest principles of our Federal Union, by giving to a single word, used in a particular case, and limited to a special application, a meaning which would obliterate substantially the uniformity required, and expose the members of the Union to the frauds and oppressions which this rule was intended to prevent.

I return to the account presently to be exhibited to the Senate. It consists of a retrospective view of the projects called national, by which the nation has been deluded to submit to an unconstitutional tribute, both fraudulent and oppressive. Sir, it is right to follow the example of one of the freest nations commemorated by history, in calling a spade a spade. The capitalists, however, whose welfare is not recited as an object of taxation by the Constitution, have, with wonderful ingenuity, persuaded us that a spade is a punch-ladle; and whilst they are loading us with tools to be laboriously used for their benefit, contend that spades, ploughs, and pitchforks, are instruments of luxury, filled with excellent viands, for the gratification of agriculturists. This exceeds the ingenuity of Lord Peter, in Swift's Tale of a Tub, who contended that a crust of bread was a leg of mutton—both of these might be eaten.

The following account is extracted from official reports, exhibiting the pecuniary advantages of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. The Territories are included under the name of States, to avoid frequent distinctions, and to make the contrast complete.

Impost and tonnage duties annually	- $23,932,114
Deduct the portion collected in the seventeen States	- - - 3,678,736
Collected in the nine States	- - - 20,253,378
Deduct one-third as paid or consumed by the nine States	- - - 6,751,126
Paid or consumed by the seventeen States	13,502,252
Views of Tonnage.
Tonnage, including foreign trade, coasting, and fishery	- - - 1,324,699
Deduct one-seventh owned by the seventeen States	- - - 189,242
Owned by the nine States	- - - 1,135,457
Annual profit of tonnage owned by the nine States at $20 a ton	- - - $22,709,140
Deduct one-third consumed by the nine States	- - - 7,569,713
Annual gain by the nine States from tonnage	- - - 15,139,427

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

Second view of Tonnage.

	Tons.
Foreign trade tonnage reported in 1816	800,759
Deduct one-seventh owned by the seventeen States - - - -	114,397
Deduct one-third as consumed by the nine States - - - -	228,787
Consumed by the seventeen States -	457,575
Annual gain of the nine States at $20 a ton - - - -	$9,151,500

Third view of Tonnage.

May 15, 1822, a committee reported the annual gain of the United States from foreign trade tonnage to be -	$20,000,000
Deduct one-seventh as owned by the seventeen States - - - -	2,857,142
	17,142,858
Deduct one-third as consumed by the nine States - - - -	5,714,286
Annual gain of the nine from the seventeen States - - - -	11,428,572

So far, sir, these facts are stated as a basis for the two first items in the following account; and as from the Treasury report it appears that less than one-seventh of the impost and tonnage duties are collected in the seventeen States, their share of importations and tonnage is apparently rated too high.

Annual imports of the United States about	$77,000,000
Deduct one-seventh supposed to be imported by the seventeen States - -	11,000,000
	66,000,000
Deduct one-third consumed by the nine States - - - -	22,000,000
Balance in favor of the nine States -	44,000,000
Commercial profit on this balance, drawn annually by the nine from the seventeen States at 10 per cent. -	$4,400,000
Annual gain on the balance of tonnage by the nine from the seventeen States	11,428,572
Interest of national debt annually received by the nine States	$5,079,482
Interest received by the seventeen States - - -	563,243
Balance of interest received by the nine States - - - -	4,516,239
Amount of incorporated manufacturing capital in the United States returned - - -	$70,656,500
Add the factory capital of Rhode Island not returned	2,000,000
Add for twenty-eight incorporated factories of unlimited capital in Vermont -	1,000,000
Amount - - - -	73,656,500

Deduct the incorporated capital of the seventeen States	4,466,500
	69,190,000
Deduct a moiety as possibly unemployed - - -	34,595,000
Balance of factory capital in the nine States - -	34,595,000
Annual gain by factories from consumers on this balance if the duties only average twenty per cent. - -	6,919,000
Annual amount of pensions under the pension law - -	$1,334,788
Deduct received by the seventeen States - -	288,052
Annual gain by the nine States at this time—heretofore it was more, hereafter it will be less - -	1,046,736
Annual gain of the nine beyond the seventeen States, by the United States Bank - - - -	146,038
Annual draft by the nine from the seventeen States - - - -	$28,456,585

A few remarks, sir, may be necessary to show the moderation and effects of this statement. No profit is charged to factory owners upon $4,466,500 of incorporated capital in the seventeen States. If one half is unemployed, they receive upon the other half annually $446,650, which, added to the factory acquisition charged, increases it to an annual tax upon consumers of $7,365,650, under the existing tariff.

The whole amount annually drawn by the nine from the seventeen States is $28,456,585 according to this statement. Of this sum, 12,628,014 is imposed by legal contrivances, and $15,828,572 gained by tonnage and importations. Is a policy beneficial to the people of the nine States, by which they are exposed to a risk of losing the income they derive from tonnage and importations, for the sake of extorting a tribute from industry, amounting to $7,365,650, of which they must pay a portion, to be bestowed upon a capitalist interest?

The Senate will observe that the results of the computation are probably too low to a considerable extent. No profit is charged on the advance of duties by the nine States, though, as these are added to the cost of the goods, and long credits given for them, they must produce a large profit. No coasting tonnage profit is charged, though that also must be great. The bounties to the fisheries are noticed. One half of the manufacturing capital is deducted, and the profit only computed upon the other half. The profit made by the nine States from the Bank of the United States is certainly too low. The charge of one-seventh of tonnage and importations to the seventeen States exceeds the reports. And the gain of ten per centum on the commercial business done by the nine for the seventeen States is probably too low, as it includes both the profit made on goods sold,

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

and on products purchased. It will also be discovered, by gentlemen better acquainted with the subject than I am, that sundry items which would have increased the inequality, are omitted in the account.

Sir, the deficiency of tonnage and importations in the seventeen States must arise from some cause. They have water, wood, and iron, and yet are almost without ships or commerce, except at the three points of Baltimore, Charleston, and New Orleans. What can this cause be but the annual drafts from their capital? Before these drafts were carried to their present enormity, the Southern States imported chiefly for themselves and had begun to build vessels. Why is it that the enumerated points suffer less by this defrauding policy than the other parts of the seventeen States? Because Baltimore and Charleston receive a considerable share of the tribute it imposes, and New Orleans is too far from the nine States to have its commerce intercepted. But even these points suffer considerably by the drafts coerced from the people, upon whose prosperity theirs depends, for patronizing a pecuniary aristocracy by fraudulent laws.

Sir, it has been said, that, if the seventeen States did not employ northern importers and tonnage, they must employ British. But this would not follow, unless Britain could prevent them from importing, or building ships, by legislating away their capital, as she did before the Revolution. Factories cannot be built, nor manufactures carried on, it is said, without capital. How, then, can ships be built, or the importing business be carried on, by the seventeen States, whilst exposed to an enormous annual draft from their capital? Protection means only capital or monopoly. Do not commerce and ship building languish in the seventeen States? Why, then, take away protection from them, if capital must be called by that treacherous name?

It is also said that the balance of trade with foreign nations is against us; and this being assumed as a fact, is repeatedly urged as a conclusive argument in favor of the tariff. The argument is, however, generally admitted to be delusive. A commercial balance of trade cannot be measured by money nor by custom-houses with accuracy. The prices at which the exchanged commodities sell, and the difference of labor employed in their production, owing to different climates and soils, go deeply into the subject. As it is impossible to discover these, and many other facts, necessary to bestow certainty upon the estimate, the conclusion assumed is obviously a deception. But, admitting it to be true, how stands the balance of trade between the nine and the seventeen States? If a balance of trade between nations and the United States is ruinous to the latter, will a balance of trade against the seventeen States, and in favor of the nine, enrich the former? There is, however, an obvious distinction between a supposed pecuniary balance arising from commerce, and a pecuniary balance arising from a tribute. Although the former cannot be correctly measured by money, the latter may.

Thus, it may happen that the apparent balance in favor of the nine States may be somewhat diminished by the inexplicable operations of commerce, whilst the tribute paid by one country to another, by a nation to a despot, or by the seventeen States to a pecuniary aristocracy, admits of little or no compensation. The latter constitutes a balance, not of a commercial character, but between industry and oppression, paid by one, and received by the other. It is true that both banking and the tariff, which operate in the same way upon these objects, promise a compensation to industry, as an indemnity for their spoliations, and we have now been in search of this indemnity for above twenty years. Have we found it? Industry relies upon faith alone for salvation, like an ultra Christian, and rejects visible works as wholly ineffectual. The Deity may reward us for our faith; but what proof did a pecuniary project or an aristocracy ever give of a title to this divine attribute? Alas! poor human nature. Where is its boasted intellect or dignity? It wants clothes, and strips itself to adorn an aristocracy. It wants food, and starves itself to feed an aristocracy. It wants drink, and thirsts to drench an aristocracy. It wants a circulating currency, and, to obtain it, pays to an aristocracy annual millions for a fraudulent one. Could it deprive itself of air and water for the same reasons, it would probably give further proofs of its wisdom, and render its manufactory of privations for itself complete. And it is induced to suffer all these privations by the delusion of an imaginary balance of trade with foreign nations.

History offers us many proofs that this balance is imaginary. I shall cite but two. Russia was raised from barbarism and poverty to civilization and wealth, by exchanging her agricultural products for European manufactures during several centuries. The same commerce, previously to their revolution enabled the provinces to subdue a wilderness, and to obtain unexampled prosperity and happiness. This arose from an exchange of agricultural for manufactured products, by which exchange mutual demands were created, and mutual wealth and happiness diffused. It might be difficult to ascertain whether Britain or the provinces flourished most during the period that this commerce was suffered to regulate itself. Then there were no banks nor tariffs to rob agriculture of its income, and enrich an aristocratical order of men; and exchanges, although confined to Britain, embraced such a multitude of individuals, as to endow the provinces with happiness and an ever-growing prosperity. At length, Britain, discerning the rapid acquisitions of the provinces arising from these commercial exchanges, became envious of their wealth, and resolved to fleece them of it by taxing them to enrich herself. She resolved to constitute herself by laws into a pecuniary aristocracy, and supplant the effects of commercial exchanges, by creating the oppressive balance measured by money. Such a tribute would have been precisely similar to the tribute imposed by banks and protecting tariffs, to bestow money on an internal aristocracy. But our gallant and wise ancestors, discerning the difference between a tribute to an aristocracy and commercial exchanges, took up arms to repel the former project in its infancy, and free themselves from the meditated oppression. Can we, their sons, discern no difference between paying taxes to enrich domestic pecuniary combinations, or to obtain the blessings of a just and free Government? Will taxation, for the coffers of wealth, pay the national debt, or transmit the same degree of liberty to our descendants, which we received from our forefathers? Have we so degenerated, as to be blind to that futurity to which their foresight extended?

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

A curious pair of reasons is urged in defence of the protecting tariff project. It is often said that competition will destroy prosperity, and also that it will produce it. In support of the first assertion, the manufacturing factories loudly urge the prosperity they enjoyed in periods of war and embargo. In support of the second, they insist, that competition among themselves will in time produce national prosperity, by recreating the violated justice of a fair principle. But why is this hostage for protecting property, by securing it against the aggressions of legal frauds for transferring it to avaricious capitalists, to be suspended in order to revive it? Why should it be killed now, from a hope of a joyful resurrection?

The regret for the loss of war and embargoes expressed by the factory capitalists, is an illustration of the prosperity to be reaped by a pecuniary aristocracy from the destruction of competition; and the joy expressed by the people on the restoration of their prosperity when these calamities ceased, is a proof of the general prosperity produced by competition. A protecting duty tariff is, in fact, a war or an embargo in disguise, producing partially the very same evils produced by similar causes, under different names. The degrees or extent of these evils, does not alter their nature, however they may graduate the calamity; just as the same cause graduates the fluctuations of quicksilver in a thermometer, partial monopolies produce mischiefs comparative only in relation to complete monopolies, produced by wars and embargoes; but they are founded in the same principle, and, if pushed to their utmost extent, would terminate in the policy of a perpetual war or embargo. They are less expensive to the people, and less destructive of their wealth and happiness than complete monopolies, but, though a more tolerable oppression, they are still oppressive.

The enormous extent of this oppression, in reference to the seventeen States, will be seen, by recollecting the account which I have stated to the Senate. By that it appears clearly, I think, that the capitalists created and nurtured by laws, residing in the nine States, are now annually receiving above twelve millions drawn from the seventeen. This considerably exceeds the taxes paid by the nine States, and therefore, if States were only to be considered in estimating taxation and distributing money by laws, it is apparent that the nine States pay no taxes at all, and are, indeed, receiving a tribute from the seventeen, because the acquisition of the pecuniary aristocracy residing within the nine States, exceeds the sum paid by these States in taxes. The observation, however, does not apply to the people of those nine States, who are not pecuniary capitalists. They are defrauded by their contributions to the legal aristocracy, but not to the same extent with the people of the other States.

I return, sir, to the doctrines of competition, contending that it is both good and bad. The capitalists, whilst courting agriculture for the sake of her fortune, are obliged to advance contradictions by first telling her that protection against competition is necessary for their prosperity; and then, that a destruction of this protection by competition is necessary for the prosperity of all other interests. And agriculture, as if blinded by love, has been for years the dupe of this kind of reasoning. Admitting that competition between nations is a bad thing, and that a national monopoly is a good one, it does not follow that internal monopolies, by which one neighbor robs another, are also good. But, excluding the idea of monopolies inflicted by ourselves upon ourselves, upon the whole industrious class of society, to enrich a very few of its unproductive members; let us admit that it is wise policy in one nation to establish a monopoly which shall bring into its coffers the industry of another, and very foolish policy in the plundered nation to submit, like ignorant savages, to the operation. Here we have twenty-six nations concerned in the scramble for money. If it is wise for nine of them to get it from seventeen, by a long list of tariff monopolies, would it not also be wise for the seventeen to keep their own money, if they have any means of doing so? But how can they do it? By the same means which are used, as is said, to prevent a British nation bringing their manufactures here to get away the money of an American nation. A Virginian nation may use these means to prevent its money from being carried off by a Rhode Island, or any other nation. The notion that the twenty-six States are but one nation, is similar to an assertion that the kingdoms and principalities of Germany, probably as numerous, constitute but one nation, and, therefore, that there would be no harm if some of them could get the money of the others by monopolies or protecting duties. If this was attempted, would not some members of the Germanic Confederation be justifiable in using the means to keep their money, used by others to get it?

Tariffs, operating internally, are simply excises, with only one difference; the former cut off or take away money from some citizens to give it to others; the latter transfer the money to a Government. I remember, however, the case of an excise which happened whilst I was a youth, bearing a great similitude to a tariff. At that time, in the country where I lived, there were great bodies of uncultivated lands called ranges, very convenient for raising hogs. But it unfortunately happened that a race of men appeared who introduced the habit of excising this agricultural product most severely. At length a hog

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

raiser agreed to give the hog exciser ten per cent. of his annual crop of hogs, if he would consent to his keeping the rest for his own use. After a year or two, the hog exciser told the hog owner that he could not prosper without further protection, and the hog owner, thinking it better to save some of his hogs than none, agreed to give him twenty per cent. of his hogs if he would let him keep the rest. But the hog exciser was rendered by this twenty per cent. still more eager for further protection, and demanded thirty, which was also given by the hog raiser. Even this did not satisfy this tariff or excise man, and his demands became so extravagant that the patience of the hog raiser was exhausted, and in great anger he resolved not to submit any longer to the imposition.

Now what is to prevent the States, whose agricultural profits have been excised and excised, time after time, by tariffs upon tariffs, until they are nearly or quite cut off, from using excises, for the purpose of saving these profits. If a thief is in the habit of cutting away the purses of a whole community, surely that community may prevent him from bringing his knife among them. By the Constitution, the States may, undoubtedly, lay excises to prevent the tariff knife from cutting away their purses. They may extend these excises, as a tariff is extended, to prohibitions. If it was patriotic and magnanimous in Patrick Henry to exclaim "we must fight" rather than submit to some trifling tariffs, or excises, or taxes, imposed by England on the provinces, will it be also magnanimous and patriotic in States, which are not provinces, to submit to the perpetual payment of an imposition a thousand fold greater, to obtain the tyranny of a pecuniary aristocracy? It was said, that as God made iron ore, it would be impious not to use it, and that the tariff, as to iron, is necessary to avoid the crime of neglecting to cultivate the design of Providence. God also made the sea. Is it pious to intercept the comforts and blessings which it was intended to distribute throughout the world, by a tariff? To the same divine creation a man is indebted for two hands. Would it be pious to transfer one hand from some men to others? A tariff to enrich a capitalist interest does this, since there is no difference between taking away the hand itself, or what it produces.

But it is fortunate that the States need not fight to prevent the hands of their people from being amputated. They may impose prohibitory excises upon the factory-knives which cut away their purses. They may extend such excises to the four-footed animals coming from those States which have fortuitously concurred in whetting those knives. The latter is indispensably necessary to save the remnant of a perishing agriculture, in the States which receive little or no share of the factory bounties. Although they cannot raise horses, hogs, and cattle, and the tariff principle, which dictates the exclusion of foreign competition to the factories for the encouragement of manufactures, dictates to the suffering States the exclusion of agricultural competition, for the encouragement of their own agriculture, by prohibiting the introduction of all animals which they can raise themselves.

Sir, the trade in live stock has been, and might continue to be, a highly beneficial one to the Western States, and yet they are about to destroy it by impoverishing their customers and compelling them to raise those stocks for themselves, under the notion that the tariff bill will convert the Western people into manufacturers. Europe was led into a competition with the Turks for the Holy Land, by a monk, who is said, by historians, to have been a mighty orator, and, after a vast expense of blood and treasure, the competition failed, because, on the part of the Europeans, it was an effort to break down the laws of nature. So will terminate the fatuity of the Western States. The laws of nature will inevitably frustrate their fanciful competition with the Eastern States, in manufacturing. They are remote from the ocean. Industry is not as necessary to the same extent for their comfort, as to the Eastern States. Centuries will elapse before their population will become sufficiently dense, to create the stimulus of want. And long, long, will it be, and may it be, before a high-minded people shall sacrifice the happiness and comfort of possessing the rich valleys of the Mississippi, and of its tributary streams, spacious enough to constitute an empire, for the purpose of waiting upon spindles, plunging into an hopeless competition, and placing upon a throne the tyrant called a pecuniary aristocracy.

Sir, the Western States have already tried the experiment, and are writhing under its lash. What has the existing tariff done for them? It has for years, with inexorable consistency, taken away the money annually gained, to a great amount, by their live stock trade. Had the Western States, during this period, manufactured for themselves, instead of pursuing the phantom of manufacturing for others, this money would have accumulated, and their distresses have long since disappeared. Instead of this, they have fostered the system of a capitalist or aristocratic privileged interest, and this system has swallowed up both their money and the money of the Southern States, the diminution of whose prosperity diminishes theirs. Severely lashed by the existing tariff, they expect a cure for their wounds from repetitions of the same afflicting experiment. They have engaged in a crusade to acquire wealth and liberty by endowing a pecuniary aristocracy, not attended by the poor equivalent of residing among them, with above twelve millions, annually, already, and now they propose greatly to increase the slavish contribution. They will, ere long, begin to compute and compare their waste money and liberty upon this project, with the money and liberty they will gain by a tax upon hemp and cotton bagging.

For, in truth, this is not a tariff bill to encourage manufactures. It is a bill of bargains, to enrich a pecuniary aristocracy. This aristocracy is a polygamist, and is, by this bill, courting a number of local interests, with a design to marry them for the sake of their fortunes; and, as Spindle attempted with Lady Truman, it proposes to bribe them with small portions of their own estates, to get the rest for itself. Only give me, says the generous husband, about sixteen millions per annum out of your estates, and I will give to one sweetheart, because she is a sturdy lass, and has great influence, two taxes, one upon hemp and another upon cotton bagging, by which means the dear girl may get pin-money, and even depreciated paper. To another gentle shepherdess, I will give a tax upon wool. To a virago, a tax upon iron; and to a seafaring nymph, sundry little intricate trinkets. Well, the courtship may succeed for a time, but I foretell that these marriages will not last long, and that the avarice, infidelity, and insolence of the husband, will, in this inquiring country, very soon bring about divorces. Indeed, he is a species of helpmate who is always ready to repudiate a wife, if he can thereby get another who will bring him more.

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

I do not think that this is a question having any relation to political economy, or that the intricate distinctions upon that subject apply to it at all. On the contrary, it seems to me to be one proposing only two very plain considerations for public attention. Will a pecuniary aristocracy preserve a free form of government? Will it dispense individual justice? Already, by imposing upon ourselves a multitude of privations, we have raised this species of aristocracy to a power so formidable, that our newspapers have almost become its property; our tables groan under its presumptuous petitions; geographical districts are swayed by its patronage; and it is now attempting to impose an oppressive law upon all other interests, for the sake of extorting from them an enormous additional tribute for itself. If this new power, created by our laws, should already prove too hard, either by cunning or corruption, for the other interests of society, the question whether it ought to be submitted to or demolished, will next present itself to the people of every State. Then they will every where consider whether land is not the most valuable of all machines; whether it is not the basis or raw material for a long catalogue of the most valuable manufactures; and whether protection should be withheld from it, and its own capital transferred to the protection of other less important interests; especially when it is notorious that this policy or fraud has been persisted in, until the profit of agriculture is, in some parts of the country destroyed, and in others so greatly diminished, that capital every where flees from land, as if it was a grave yawning to swallow it up.

But there remains a more weighty objection to the system for nursing a pecuniary aristocracy into a political giant. It destroys substantially the essence of representation, and leaves only its form remaining. Wherever the aristocratical influence begins, there representation ceases. If this influence can sway legislative bodies, no effectual representation exists. All writers agree that the despotism of one country or district over another, or a geographical tyranny, is more cruel than a monarchical. Rome and Britain are witnesses to the fact. Our Constitution intended to abolish both geographical and monarchical tyranny. The uniformity of taxation was its precaution against the former. But, if a capitalist interest can influence representation, and mould the laws to enrich itself, representation becomes both its instrument, and a bandage over the eyes of the people. There is no representation unless the representative shall participate in the burdens which he imposes, and is prevented from creating monopolies of which he may share. Under our Constitution neither territories nor representation were intended to be consolidated; or law, geographically partial, to be enacted. It was never intended that the West should be the guardians of the East, nor the North of the South, nor that the specious but false idea of a national representation should be used to abolish a real representation, upon which a republican government must be founded, or finally cease to exist. Will it be said that a capitalist or pecuniary aristocracy have obtained a tribute of twelve millions annually without a revolutionizing influence over representation, and that, without such an influence, it may now add four or five millions annually to this tribute; or will it be said that this influence, compounded of a complication of bargaining between avaricious combinations and deluded geographical districts, between wealth and want, between cunning and ignorance, between fraud and delusion; in short, between the destructive meteor called a capitalist aristocracy, and those whom it bribes, that it may plunder about an eighth part of the globe? Will it be said that this influence is that kind of representation which will preserve republican government, and relieve the universe from tyranny?

When Mr. TAYLOR had concluded—

Mr. HAYNE next advocated the motion to strike out the minimum on cotton cloths. He gave a very precise and detailed statement of the operation of this provision in the bill, upon the various descriptions of goods, and proceeded to expose the impolicy of taxing these articles excessively, in order to gratify a few manufacturers. He contended that the cotton manufacturers were the last class of citizens that ought to come to Congress for assistance, as he knew, by recent personal observation, that they were the most prosperous men in the nation. He stated to the Senate the results of a visit he had made, within the past year, to the great cotton manufactories of the Northern States, to illustrate his position that these establishments were peculiarly prosperous, when carried on with the advantages of skill and capital. Mr. H. proceeded to comment upon the operation of the former duties levied upon cotton goods, and to state the losses of trade and of revenue which had resulted from those duties. He expressed his belief that very much of the distress of the country had been superinduced by the act of 1816, which imposed heavy duties on this article. He then adverted to the very small amount of cotton goods exported from the country, and averred that the manufacturers could not compete with the British, in the South American markets, when they cannot do it in our own, without these excessive duties. He insisted that England would not take our cotton, unless we purchased her goods; and that this act would be followed up by countervailing duties, on the part of the British Government. He alluded to the example of England, in relation to this policy of levying protecting duties, and reverted to the circumstances which had made her a great nation. Her national greatness was not the result of her manufactures alone; but of the gradual and continued growth of all her institutions, and of all her different means of employment. He drew a comparison between the machine labor of England, and the agricultural labor of this country, advantageous to the latter. He spoke of the general course of labor, to seek its own level. Mr. H. then adverted to the frequent remark respecting the encouragement given to commerce, and to show that other national purposes authorized the laws confining the coasting trade to American vessels. The law imposing discriminating duties was merely to put our vessels on a footing with those of foreign nations. He drew a comparison between the protection that the Government had given to commerce, and that which had been extended to manufactures. He spoke of the prohibitory duties which had, from time to time, been imposed in England; a review of which, he thought, would demonstrate clearly the impolicy of encouraging the growth of manufactures by such means. He stated that one hundred different acts, having a view to bounty and restriction, had been repealed by the British Government. He read, from the recent proceedings of Parliament, to support his position; and concluded by begging gentlemen to pause before they adopted this measure in relation to an article of such great importance to the country.

MAY, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

Mr. DICKERSON replied to Mr. HAYNE. He had great confidence in the legal talents of the gentleman from South Carolina, but thought he was not the best person to examine cotton manufactories. A few individual instances in which these establishments were prosperous, he thought, ought not to be taken as a sample of the whole; he spoke of several in New Jersey, which were in a very different situation. He thought the tariff of 1816 had been very beneficial to the country, and proceeded to recount its benefits. He conceived that it would be no injury to the country, if the coarse foreign cottons were excluded from it. No one great employment, Mr. D. said, could give an inordinate profit, for the capital of the country would immediately be invested in it. He alluded to the remarks of Mr. HAYNE in reference to the loss which the country had sustained in its revenue, in consequence of the act of 1816. He hoped the time would arrive when we should not derive such a heavy revenue from importations. He contended that foreigners would always take from us what they want, of cottons and other articles, and no more. He considered the revenue of no importance to this question. He adverted to the general distress and bankruptcy which existed in the country. These bankruptcies had been produced by excessive importations, and the balance of trade being against us.

Mr. MACON next rose. He was surprised to hear persons from the rich and fertile country, in the Western and Middle States, endeavoring to impress upon Congress the necessity of imposing taxes on the poor country in the South. He spoke of the general poverty of his part of the country, particularly in regard to soil. He alluded to early marriages in the West, as a criterion of its prosperous situation. He had always been, individually, a patron of American manufactures; but he wished to be a volunteer in that cause; he had no idea of being forced into it. He spoke of the folly of supposing this nation was to become great in consequence of its manufactures, because England had become so. He had rather see the people living upon their own lands, than pent up in manufactories. He wished to see the people independent in their mode of living. He did not believe that manufacturers were more industrious than other people. He denied that this measure was for the good of the nation. When people used the word nation, on this subject, they generally meant themselves. He said he disliked the tax on cotton bagging as much as this; and he should call the attention of the Senate to that subject again. Mr. M. again recurred to, and remarked further upon, the poverty of the southern part of the country.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, spoke in support of the amendment. He replied to the remarks of Mr. DICKERSON. He believed there had been, at no time, more specie in the country than at present. He spoke of the low rate of interest at which money could be obtained. He asserted that, to the best of his knowledge, the cotton manufactories of New England were generally very prosperous—and spoke, particularly, of that at Waltham; with the history of which he was more intimately acquainted. He related the manner in which that factory was established; and read a minute of the dividends of profits that had been made by the establishment. Mr. L. stated that stock in that factory had recently been sold at sixty-five per cent. above par; this institution, he said, had been established without foreign aid, and he believed but one foreigner had been employed in it.

Mr. D'WOLF rose to speak to the question, but gave way to a motion to adjourn; and the Senate then adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, May 5.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act to allow the bounty to vessels employed in the cod fisheries, in certain cases;" and the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Isaac Collyer and others," reported them, severally, without amendment.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Benjamin King;" the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of James, Jehu, and Nathaniel Brooks, and the representatives of either of them;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Brotherton;" reported them, respectively, without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. MILLS, Amasa Stetson had leave to withdraw such of the documents accompanying his petition as do not appertain to the bill for his relief.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of George Ulmer, made a report, which was read and considered; and, in concurrence therewith, the committee was discharged from the further consideration of said petition.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of William Hall, an invalid soldier of the Revolutionary army," reported it without amendment.

Mr. LLOYD, of Maryland, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the benefit of the Columbian Institute," reported it without amendment.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House disagree to a part, and agree to the residue, of the amendment of the Senate, to the bill, entitled "An act concerning invalid pensions." They have passed a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of Miguel Eslava," in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said bill was twice read, by unanimous consent; and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to authorize the issuing of a register for the schooner Five Sisters;" and a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of certain persons who have paid duties on certain goods imported into Castine;" in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, (Mr. KING, of Alabama in the Chair,) proceeded to consider the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill from the House of Representatives, "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports."

The question was upon the amendment moved by Mr. ELLIOTT, on Monday last, to strike out that part of the bill which establishes the minimum for the calculation of the duties on cotton cloths and cotton twist, yarn, or thread; which proviso is as follows:

"Provided, That all cotton cloths whatsoever, or cloths of which cotton shall be a component material, excepting nankeens imported directly from China, the original cost of which, at the place whence imported, with the addition of twenty per centum, if imported from the Cape of Good Hope, or any place beyond it; and of ten per centum, if imported from any other place, shall be less than thirty cents per square yard, shall, with such addition, be taken and deemed to have cost thirty cents per square yard, and shall be charged with duty accordingly. And that all unbleached and uncolored cotton twist, yarn, or thread, the original cost of which shall be less than sixty cents per pound, shall be deemed and taken to have cost sixty cents per pound, and shall be charged with duty accordingly. And all bleached or colored cotton yarn, twist, or thread, the original cost of which shall be less than seventy-five cents per pound, shall be deemed and taken to have cost seventy-five cents per pound, and shall be charged with duty accordingly."

Mr. BELL rose to ask some information of the gentleman from Massachusetts, in regard to the cotton machinery at Waltham; he had understood that great quantities of machinery, of a very valuable kind, were made at that establishment. He wished for information on that point; and what proportion of the profit had been made from that branch of the business; and, also, whether the concerns of that institution had not been, in some measure closed, and a reserved profit divided, for the purpose of joining their funds with another manufactory at Chelmsford.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, replied, and gave what information he possessed, on the points upon which inquiry was made; and made some further statements in relation to the manufacture of cotton.

Mr. BELL commented on the information which had been given by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. D'WOLF replied, at considerable length, to remarks which were made yesterday, on the subject of the cotton manufacture. He proceeded to show the means by which the Waltham establishment had been made profitable; and remarked upon the necessity of further encouragement to this manufacture generally.

Mr. MILLS replied to Mr. D'WOLF; and made some further explanations in regard to the manufactory at Waltham. Mr. M. had been informed that not one cent of the profits made on the manufacture of machinery, at the Waltham establishment, had been divided; but that the profits on that branch of the business had been reserved.

Mr. SMITH supported the amendment. He replied to some of the arguments which had been adduced in favor of the minimum on cottons; and remarked that every cotton manufactory, which had been conducted with skill and capital, as that at Waltham had, had been profitable to the proprietors. He spoke of an establishment which had been erected in his own State; and which had failed for want of a competent knowledge of the business. The buildings and machinery having been sold to others better acquainted with the business, the establishment had become profitable. He proceeded to comment upon the operation of the Tariff bill of 1816.

Mr. D'WOLF explained, in reference to a remark he had made.

Mr. BENTON then rose. He had been perfectly satisfied, by the remarks of gentlemen on this subject, that the cotton manufacture was profitable, when conducted with skill and capital; and he rejoiced that it was so. He considered this article a fair subject of revenue; and that the duty now proposed to be levied would fall upon the rich and luxurious. He contended that the shipping interest would not be affected by this duty. Mr. B. described the kind of goods the tax would operate upon—he stated that it would hardly amount to more than a cent or two a yard, and that upon articles of luxury. He spoke of the operation of this bill upon the revenue of the country, and expected that our finances would be benefited by it. He reverted to the operation of the present minimum of twenty-five cents per yard, upon the India cottons, as highly beneficial to the country, and anticipated as happy results from the minimum now under discussion. Mr. B. commented upon the course England had taken, in regard to our articles of export. He contended that she could not jeopardize her manufacture of cotton, by any retaliatory measures upon this country, which would go to enhance the price of the raw material. He believed that too large a proportion of our population were employed in agriculture; as a great surplus of agricultural productions were on hand without a market. He spoke of the advantages this country possessed for manufacturing; and those circumstances which would save it from the demoralizing effects that attend these establishments in other countries.

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

Mr. DICKERSON, of New Jersey, spoke as follows:

Mr. President, as a number of gentlemen have taken advantage of this motion to afford them an opportunity of expressing their opinions upon the general principles of the bill, I feel compelled to follow their example. I yesterday expressed my opinions upon this minimum, in reply to the gentleman from South Carolina, (Mr. HAYNE,) to which I have nothing new to add, but will endeavor to give my views of the general principles of this bill, in answer to the observations upon this subject by the gentleman from Georgia, (Mr. ELLIOTT,) the gentleman from South Carolina, (Mr. HAYNE,) and the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. TAYLOR.)

That some radical change in our system of agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, is required, is incontestably proved by the distressed condition of all those branches of industry. To apply the remedy is the business of Congress.

The prosperity of a nation can only be secured by fostering and protecting its industry. The whole secret of national wealth consists in finding profitable employment for all who are willing to devote themselves to labor. This is now well understood in most of the Governments of Europe, and adopted as the only means of prosperity, except in Holland, whose distress will, in time, compel her to adopt the same policy.

Ustaritz, a Spanish author of great financial and mercantile information, about a century ago, fully developed this source of national wealth for the benefit of his country, but in vain, perhaps to the injury of his country, for it taught the English the means of growing rich at their expense. The Spaniards, relying upon their mines of silver and gold in America, ceased to protect their industry at home, and depended upon other nations for their manufactures, especially upon England, which indirectly derived much greater advantages from the Spanish mines than the Spaniards themselves have done. Ustaritz predicted the ruin that this system would bring upon Spain. He advised his countrymen to pursue a contrary course. He advised them to protect their manufactures and their agriculture, but they thought their mines would enable them to grow rich, without devoting themselves to industrious pursuits. Had his advice been followed, it would have been worth to the Spaniards more than all their Indies. By neglecting it, they have become a fifth or sixth rate Power from being the first in Europe. By neglecting this advice they have, with all their gold and silver, become poor. Chaptal, upon French industry, says, "if Spain, rich in the productions of the new world, had preserved her pre-eminence in manufactures, she would, without doubt, be at this time the most powerful nation in Europe."

This source of national wealth has been discussed with great ability and zeal by writers in the United States, who must and will ultimately succeed in convincing the people at large, if not their representatives, that the Government, to secure the independence, the wealth, and power of the nation, must protect our agriculture and manufactures, as well as our commerce, navigation, and fisheries. The process is slow, but the final success is certain. Twenty years from this time, our country will duly appreciate the merits of authors upon this subject who are now reprobated as disturbers of the harmony of the country.

The importance of protecting industry applies more forcibly to the United States than to any other country. With a vast extent of fertile territory, under various climates, producing nearly every thing that our wishes or necessities require, if we are not prosperous and happy, it must be because we do not rely upon our own resources, but depend upon foreign nations for those supplies which nature has placed at our own doors. By the policy heretofore adopted, we suffer Europe to prescribe the laws which regulate the prosperity, or rather adversity, of this country. To this may be attributed the distress which has prevailed in almost every section of the United States for the last eight years.

It is to this that the balance of trade for that period has been against us to an enormous amount. It is to this that our gold and silver have been drained from the country. It is to this that our Government stock, bank stock, canal stock, and every kind of stock, that will be taken for foreign merchandise, is as well known upon the exchange at London as at Boston, New York, or Philadelphia. It is to this, that foreigners, by their agents, hold mortgages upon our lands to a large amount. It is to this that we pay to foreigners an interest of more than three millions of dollars, annually, upon the debts we owe them.

Our Government early saw the importance of protecting certain classes of the industry and enterprise of our country. Commerce was first attended to, because it furnished the channel through which we were to derive our resources. Navigation and the fisheries were attended to, because they afforded nurseries for seamen who might be wanted for the defence of the country. Agriculture received great protection; (although not an adequate one,) because it has been justly esteemed the most important interest of our country. But the manufacturing interest has been neglected, from an opinion that the country was not yet prepared to encourage that kind of industry;—because (as was thought) it would operate to the injury of agriculture; because it would diminish the business of the merchant, and decrease the tonnage engaged in navigation; and because it would decrease the revenue. No one of which reasons has the least foundation in fact. Our population and capital engaged in navigation and in our domestic commerce is completely protected, and as much is done for foreign commerce as can be done; but over that we have not the entire control. Foreign commerce must always be somewhat precarious, inasmuch as it must depend more or less upon the disposition of nations with which we trade. But, whether protected or not, more has been done for it than for all other branches of industry together.

In the last eight years we have imported for our own consumption more than one hundred millions worth of manufactures, which we might have made and ought to have made for ourselves, while a large portion of our population have remained idle for want of employment. But it has often been repeated that there is sufficient employment for all the population of the country, without resorting to manufactures; that we have immense tracts of fertile lands, not cultivated, to which this population might be removed, and where they would soon become rich.

In some of the States this is not the case—all their good lands, except such as should remain for wood or pasture, are already under cultivation. Are the inhabitants of such States to be driven to the wilderness, to find employment in distant and uncultivated districts—to abandon society, friends, relations, their native soil? In doing this, they would not find their condition at all mended. By their labor they would gain a subsistence, but nothing more. For their surplus produce they could have no market, unless it should be cotton, rice, or tobacco; and these will soon cease to yield the profits they have done.

Does agriculture afford employment for the whole population of a country? In England, no more than one-third part are engaged in agriculture; and this is a larger proportion than is necessary. In the United States, five-sixths are engaged in agriculture—that is, three-sixths or one-half of the whole population is more than is required for the purpose. The consequence is, that they remain a great part of their time unemployed; and will even then have a large surplus of produce, which perishes on their hands for want of a market.

It is said manufactures require a dense population. Suppose the State of Pennsylvania, with a quarter of her present population; with no foreign market for her surplus produce—as is now the case, and must always be the case, with the interior of the State,—could all her citizens be profitably employed in agriculture? There would be good land enough for cultivation, but what inducement could there be for raising more grain, and other provisions, than enough for their own consumption? Men will not labor without a view to reward. One-third could raise all that the whole would consume;—of course two-thirds, with the exception of those engaged in professional and mechanical employments, would remain idle; or the whole would be engaged about one-third of the time in agriculture, and spend the rest in idleness. This is actually the case with the interior of the United States, where there are no manufactures, and from which the produce of the soil would not pay the expense of transportation.

But, suppose that State to be as populous as England, and that they have a foreign market for their surplus produce—which they never will have, except for short periods, and in a way to do them hurt, and not good,—one-third would till all the soil that would yield a profit; and two-thirds, with a small exception, would remain without employment, unless engaged in manufactures. So that, whether our population be sparse or dense, there is an equal necessity that agriculture and manufactures should proceed together, and with an equal step—they mutually aid and support each other. Those engaged in manufactures withdraw from agriculture, and consume the produce of the farmer.

There was a time when the people of this country could all be profitably employed in agriculture, because there was abundance of good land, and a market for all their produce; but that time has passed by more than a century ago. It was when we had a small population near the seaboard, and when the whole country did not produce what a single State can now produce. The foreign market for breadstuffs can never again be an important object to the United States, perhaps never more so than at present; for, as soon as the late Spanish provinces in America shall be restored to peace, we shall have no foreign market for that kind of produce. But, suppose that Europe should want of us as much as she took in time of peace twenty-five years ago, a single State could furnish more than the supply. Our population doubles in twenty-five years, and our means of production treble in that time, while the population of Europe remains nearly stationary; of course, the market can be one of no great importance; in fact, the grain growing States must look for a market at home for their produce, which they never can have, unless manufactures are encouraged and protected. Manufactures from a distance cannot be paid for in the heavy produce of the soil, as the latter will not bear the expense of transportation. The manufacturing establishments must be placed in the districts where the supplies are produced, or no exchange can take place. Yet foreign dry goods find their way into the most remote parts of the Union.

If the ruinous state of our trade with Europe pressed equally on every part of the United States, it would be considered as an enormous evil, for which an adequate remedy ought immediately to be provided. But the evil is greatly aggravated when we consider its unequal operation upon different sections of the Union.

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

In 1822, we imported to the amount of $83,241,541
Our exports of foreign goods and produce, which properly belong to the carrying trade, amounted to - - 22,286,202
$60,955,339

Domestic exports arising from the agriculture or manufactures of the country - - - - - 49,874,079

Leaving a balance of imports over exports of - - - - - 11,081,260

The whole domestic exports - - - $49,874,079
Of these, rice amounted to $1,553,482 cotton to - - 24,035,058 tobacco to - - 6,222,838
31,811,378

Leaving of all other exports - - - 18,063,701
Of this, the States exporting rice, cotton, and tobacco, export at least a fourth part - - - - - 4,516,000

Leaving exports to the amount of - - $13,547,000

Which may be considered as the whole that the Eastern, Middle, and grain-growing States exported during that year.

The half of the imports, over and above the foreign exports, have probably been consumed by those grain-growing States, say - - - $30,477,669
Deduct their share of the exports - - - 13,547,000

Leaving a balance against these States of - - - - - $26,830,669

Five and a half millions of it to merchants in Europe, and twenty and a half millions of it to the States producing rice, cotton, and tobacco. The next year, the balance, by a similar calculation, was not so much against the grain-growing States, but amounted to more than twelve millions in favor of the States producing rice, cotton, and tobacco; and this sum may be considered as the average balance for several years past.

So that, under the present state of things, the grain-growing States, consisting of at least two-thirds of the population of the Union, are compelled to take of European manufactures to the amount of twelve millions of dollars; that six or seven States may have the advantage of sending remittances in payment of those manufactures, and selling their bills for the same at an extravagant advance, in consequence of which the wealth of the grain-growing States is flowing in a constant stream to the States producing rice, cotton, and tobacco. If the grain-growing States had the power to prevent the importation of foreign produce and manufactures for their consumption, the Southern States would no longer receive the benefit of indirectly furnishing those supplies; and are those Middle and Western grain-growing States forever to take twelve millions of manufactures annually, which they would under proper regulations make for themselves, that their neighbors may have a market for their produce to that amount—giving employment to all their capital and industry, while that of the other States remains unemployed? How long are we to remain in this state of vassalage? How long can we remain so? How long will our patience endure? How long our means last? Until we can understand our true interests—count our numbers, and rally our votes.

It is said there is nothing to prevent the success of our manufactures. They require great capital and great skill—they have not proceeded in any country without the aid and protection of the Government. In England, where they have arrived at the greatest perfection, they have received the greatest protection—in England, where they have received the greatest aid from Government, they have done the most for the Government. To manufacturing establishments that country owes her gigantic power.

Manufacturers cannot succeed unless capitalists can be induced to vest their capital in establishments necessary for those purposes. It is in vain to call upon our population not engaged in agriculture, to work at manufactures, when no capitalist will employ them. It is in vain to call upon the capitalist to invest his money in manufacturing establishments, when such investment would probably result in the loss of his capital. If the capitalist could compel the people to work at as low a rate of wages as in given in Europe, we could succeed; but men will not do that, unless famine is staring them in the face, which will not be the case in this country for some centuries to come—when our population shall begin to press upon subsistence.

The capitalist must be enabled to derive a reasonable profit upon his investment, giving a reasonable price for labor, or he will reserve his money, the value of which is enhanced by the distress of the country.

Sir, it is the true policy, and the true interest of the country, that the people should have employment that would yield them a reasonable price for their labor—they should be enabled to have the comforts of life, and to educate their families. The labor of the country is the wealth of the country. We owe every thing to the laboring classes—something is due to them. If any wish to see the laborers of this country compelled to work for a bare subsistence, I hope the number is small. Let the capitalist in this country have the same advantages in the investment of his money, in all branches of industry, as they have in England, and no more will be asked of the Government.

Smith, in his Wealth of Nations, shows the great importance of preserving the “balance which naturally establishes itself among all the various employments of society.” Premiums, he says, may be allowed, “as their tendency is not to overturn the natural balance of employments.”

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

His system is to preserve this natural balance of employments, about which he is as solicitous as some politicians are for preserving the balance of power among nations. But the friends to the domestic industry of the country do not wish to overturn this natural balance of employments among the citizens of the United States, but to prevent its being overturned by the Powers of Europe, who are struggling by every possible means to make us pay for the produce of their industry, to the neglect of our own; this we must counteract, not by individual exertion, which would be inadequate, but by our laws. The Powers of Europe absolutely prohibit the produce of our industry that can interfere with their own, or lay such duties as amount to a prohibition. We should countervail this, by excluding the produce of their industry that could interfere with our own. England gives bounties and premiums to force her manufactures upon us; these ought to be countervailed, or the natural balance of employments in this country is overturned, not by ourselves, but by our rivals. The overgrown population of that country, now beginning to press upon subsistence, and the abject poverty of the laboring classes, oblige them to labor for a bare subsistence; from which circumstance, they are enabled to undersell us in our own markets. This should be counteracted. The laborers at the manufacturers receive a large portion of their support from the poor rates, which in fact have the operation of bounties to manufacturers. About one million of the population of England are relieved permanently or occasionally by the poor rates, for which purpose about six millions sterling are raised annually; probably a third of that may be considered as going to the support of the poor laborers in manufacturing establishments; and, in the work of Mr. Lowe, it is stated that the distribution of parish allowance to manufacturers in England operates as a serious comparative disadvantage of their humble brethren in the North, (Scotland.) Thus, when in a depressed branch, the wages are equal to only eight or nine shillings per week, the allowance of poor rate to the English manufacturer may, and generally does, carry his receipt to ten or twelve shillings—a difference which has had the effect of inducing a number of the Scottish workmen to forsake their homes.

This species of bounty must also be counteracted, or the distressed condition of the laboring classes in England must produce a correspondent distress in this country. In fact, if we do not provide means to counteract all these circumstances, which have a direct tendency to overturn the natural balance of employments in this country, England controls our destinies as much as she could do were we still her colonies. Unfortunately, a part of our country find it their interest to aid England in thus regulating the industry of this country; but this cannot be a large part. The shipping merchant, also, sometimes finds it his interest to promote the same system. A few cities and towns on the seaboard may also have the same views and interests, but the interior, now containing the great body of the people, have an interest directly the reverse, which, until lately, they have not understood, but which hereafter will regulate their policy. A nation cannot be great or prosperous upon agriculture alone, nor upon agriculture and commerce—a nation to be truly great, must enjoy the benefits of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures; all these are required to give employment to the capital and industry of a country. But we are informed that this idea of a balance of trade against us is visionary; that the custom-house books afford no just criterion by which to judge; that, in fact, we cannot import more than we export; that imports and exports regulate and control each other; that, notwithstanding this supposed balance of trade has been uniformly against us, we have been constantly growing rich.

In 1815, the revenue upon our importations amounted to thirty-six millions of dollars. Was there no balance of trade against us then? The effect of that importation is felt to this day. We sent to England, in payment of that balance, all the money we could spare—a large portion of our Government stock, bank stock, and canal stock—the residue was paid off in bankruptcy to the amount of many millions. Had the United States been obliged to pay these balances due from bankrupts, every man in the Union would have understood that there was such a thing as an unfavorable balance of trade.

When we have sent away all our property that is capable of transfer, in exchange for articles of merchandise imported; and, when the merchants of Europe shall refuse to give us further credit, then, indeed, our imports will not exceed our exports, and the balance of trade will no longer be against us—a state of things to which we seem rapidly approaching.

It is said the country cannot be distressed, because there is a great plenty of money in our cities, the incontestable evidence of which is, that it may be loaned for five per cent.

Money may be plenty in our cities, while it may be extremely scarce in the country, and the system lately pursued of importing goods to the amount of twenty or thirty millions of dollars a year, which we ought to manufacture for ourselves, is calculated to produce this effect; but the circumstance that money may be had at a low interest, does not prove that money is abundant, but that there is no demand for it. Who will expend money now in the pursuits of agriculture or manufactures? And, as to commerce, it is overdone; those in debt want money, but the circumstance of their being in debt deprives them of the means of purchasing or obtaining the money. People in the interior of the country cannot obtain money from our cities.

We are also informed that the unfavorable rate of exchange upon London is no indication of an unfavorable balance of trade. The gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. HAYNE) seems to think that he has discovered the whole mystery of the rate of exchange. He informs us that the currency of England is gold; of this country, silver; that gold to silver there bears a higher ratio than here; that the present rate of exchange, (that is, nine per cent.,) is really exchange at par; that a bill on London here for 100 pounds, which would cost 109 pounds, would there be worth 100 pounds in gold, and 109 pounds in silver; that, in fact, if the currency of both countries was gold or silver, a bill on London for 100 pounds would now cost no more than 100 pounds here.

MAY, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

The value of gold, compared to silver, is, in this country, as one to fifteen—in England, as one to fifteen and two-tenths; but, if the gentleman is right, gold, in England, is to silver as one to sixteen and thirty-five hundredths; while, in France, as well as here, it is as one to fifteen. The consequence would be, that silver would immediately leave England for France and the United States, and gold would flow into England till the equilibrium should be restored.

Until November, 1819, gold, and British gold, was the currency and legal tender in this country; yet the rate of exchange was more against us then than now. In February, 1816, the rate of exchange upon London was 15 per cent. against us; would a bill on London then for £100 purchase silver to the amount of £115? If so, it was not because gold was the currency there, and not here. Why is the rate of exchange with other countries, in which silver is the currency, about as much against us as that upon London?

Gold can be had here in exchange for silver at one per cent. advance; freight and insurance to England one per cent. more. It would be quickly sent there as an article of merchandise, if the gentleman is right. Doubloons are now advertised in Boston for sale. I shall relapse into what the gentleman may think my old errors, and believe that there has been, is, and will for a time continue to be, such a thing as a balance of trade against us; and that a rate of exchange of nine per cent. against us is an indication of this unfavorable balance of trade.

Mr. EATON then moved to amend the bill, in the proviso respecting the minimum on cotton goods, so as to make the minimum of thirty-five cents per yard inapplicable to goods which cost fifteen cents, and less than that price, and to leave those goods subject only to the present existing minimum of twenty-five cents per yard.

This motion gave rise to some cursory remarks by Messrs. EATON, LLOYD of Massachusetts, HAYNE, MILLS, TALBOT, and FINDLAY.

Mr. HAYNE moved to amend the amendment by extending it to goods which cost twenty cents. This was not agreed to.

The question was then put on Mr. EATON's amendment, and decided in the negative.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, then moved to amend the bill, by reducing the minimum upon which the duty on cotton cloth is to be calculated, from thirty-five cents to thirty cents per square yard. This amendment was agreed to, twenty-eight members voting in the affirmative; and so the minimum on cotton cloths was reduced to thirty cents.

The question was then put on Mr. ELLIOTT'S motion to strike out all the proviso relative to the minimum on cotton goods, and decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—24.

So the Senate refused to strike out the minimum on cotton cloths, and cotton twist, yarn, or thread.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, then moved to amend the bill by striking out from it the following clause: "On all foreign distilled spirits, fifteen per centum upon the duties now imposed by law, and in addition thereto."

Mr. HOLMES spoke briefly in support of his amendment; as, also, did Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts. It was opposed by Messrs. TALBOT and FINDLAY. The question upon the amendment was then put, and decided in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Bell, Branch, Chandler, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Seymour, Smith, Thomas, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Brown, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Lloyd of Maryland, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, and Van Buren—18.

So the proposed duty on foreign distilled spirits was stricken out.

Mr. SMITH then moved to amend the bill, by striking out the clause which imposes duties on unmanufactured wool; and the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, May 6.

On motion by Mr. SMITH, the Committee on Finance were discharged from the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Fry and Spaulding;" and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. LANMAN, Thomas Staniford had leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

Mr. LLOYD, of Maryland, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the act to incorporate the inhabitants of the City of Washington, passed the 15th of May, 1820," reported it with amendments; which were read.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John S. Moffett," reported it with an amendment.

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

The bill from the House of Representatives, "for the relief of certain persons who imported goods into Castine, during the late war," and the bill "authorizing the issuing of a register to the schooner Five Sisters," were read twice, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BARBOUR submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That — thousand copies of the act, entitled "An act to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," which passed the House of Representatives, April 19, 1824, be printed; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause them to be distributed, by directing a part thereof to be sent to every post office in the United States. And it shall be the duty of each postmaster receiving the same to place them in the hands of the people.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury make a report to the Senate, at the next session, as to the probable effect of this bill on the revenues of the country; on the shipping, manufacturing, commercial, and agricultural interests. That he report, in particular, on the state of the iron factories; and, as far as practicable, what has caused their failure, where they have failed; and their success, where they have succeeded; and what duty is necessary to bring them into successful competition with foreign iron. That he report, also, on the condition of the woollen, cotton, and coarse linen factories; how far their establishment has contributed to influence the price of their manufactures, the amount of the revenue, or the interests of the United States; what encouragement they need; if any, how it shall be applied. That he report, also, on the state of the culture of hemp, and why it is that it has not been used in the Navy of the United States. That he also report, if protection is to be given to particular industry, whether it would not be more politic to give bounties than to lay duties. That he also report such information as he may possess, as to evasions of the revenue laws by smugglers. And, finally, that he furnish, in his report, whatever information he may esteem pertinent to any and every part of the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR briefly explained his objects, in the introduction of these resolutions, and Messrs. LLOYD of Maryland, TALBOT, and FINDLAY, made a few cursory remarks in opposition to them. The resolutions were ordered to be printed.

THE TARIFF.

The bill from the other House, "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," was again taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole, Mr. KING, of Alabama, in the chair.

The question was upon amending the bill, in pursuance of the motion which Mr. SMITH submitted yesterday, to strike out the clause imposing a duty on unmanufactured wool.

Mr. BARBOUR moved that the bill be postponed to, and made the order of the day for, to-morrow. His reasons were, that some of the numerous private bills now before the Senate should be taken up, and that he might have the opportunity of explaining his views to-morrow, on the resolutions he had submitted this morning, which have relation to this subject. The motion was opposed by Messrs. LLOYD of Maryland and TALBOT. It was decided in the negative.

The question then recurred on Mr. SMITH's motion to amend the bill by striking out the clause proposing to levy certain duties on unmanufactured wool. Mr. SMITH now varied his motion. The bill as it came from the other House, proposes an immediate duty of twenty per cent. ad valorem on unmanufactured wool; which duty is to be increased progressively, until the first day of June, 1830, after which time it is to remain at fifty per cent. ad valorem. Mr. S. proposed to strike out all that part of the clause which specifies the duties on this article, and to make it read as follows: "On wool unmanufactured, eight cents per pound."

Mr. SMITH addressed the Senate in support of this amendment. Messrs. RUGGLES, HOLMES of Maine, CHANDLER, LLOYD of Maryland, TALBOT, JOHNSON of Kentucky, BROWN, D'WOLF, and DICKERSON, severally spoke in opposition to the amendment. Messrs. LLOYD of Massachusetts and MILLS also opposed the motion to amend. They were against the imposition of the duty proposed by the bill on this article, but thought, if any duty was to be imposed, it ought to be an ad valorem duty; as the great difference in the price and quality of this article would render a specific duty very unequal in its operation.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, stated that he considered the reasoning of the honorable gentleman from Ohio to be conclusive against a specific duty, which would impose the same rate of duty on wool which cost ten cents a pound with that which would cost one hundred. He observed that the legitimate object of the bill was to protect the manufactures of the country, and of these none were more worthy of the patronage of the Government than the manufacture of woollens, none incorporated itself more intimately with the Northern and Western agricultural interests of the Union, and he believed none was at present more depressed. One principal object of the bill was to encourage this manufacture, to enable it to enter into competition with the manufacturers of Great Britain; and to do this, we were imposing a heavy duty on the raw material at the time when Great Britain was taking it off. In England, the manufacture of woollen had been an object of great national attention; for a long time it had no duty, or only one of about three farthings a pound, probably to ascertain the quantity imported. This was the case until 1819, when the exports of woollen had amounted, for a course of years, from eight to ten million pounds sterling a year. On the imposition of this small duty the export declined, and in 1823, fell to five million five hundred thousand pounds sterling, and the Germans and the French interfered with them and got part of the export. This, he said, was the secret of the proposed repeal of the duty of six pence in England when we were putting it on. He would, therefore, advocate, in preference, striking out the duty, though he knew the agriculturists might be averse to it; and, if this were the case, he should reluct at it.

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

But some of them thought the duty would be injurious to the wool grower; and this he knew from a letter he submitted to the Senate from a very respectable and experienced gentleman, at present a farmer in Vermont, a large wool grower, and owner of sheep, and to whom the United States were principally indebted for the introduction of the invaluable race of merino sheep. He alluded to Wm. Jarvis, Esq., late United States Consul at Lisbon, and who was decidedly of opinion that the duty on imported wool would, by its reaction, prove its discouragement of manufactures, lessen the demand for the wool, and consequently, the price in the market, and injure, instead of benefiting, the wool-grower.

Mr. ELLIOTT called for a division of the question, and the Chair declared the question to be first upon striking out the proposed duty on unmanufactured wool.

Mr. SMITH then withdrew his motion to insert a specific duty of eight cents per pound, and the question then remained upon striking out.

Mr. MILLS said he was perfectly willing to vote for a reasonable duty on the importation of wool, but not so high a duty as the highest progressive duties proposed in this bill. He therefore moved to amend the bill by striking out so much as proposes the prospective increase of the duty on wool, over twenty-five per centum ad valorem. The question was then put upon this amendment, and decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, and Van Buren—26.

So the Senate refused to adopt the amendment proposing to limit the duty on wool to twenty-five per cent.

Mr. ELLIOTT then withdrew his proposition to divide the question, which proposition would have made it necessary to put the question on striking out all of the proposed duty on wool.

Mr. MILLS then moved to amend the bill by striking out so much as proposes the prospective increase of the duty over thirty per centum ad valorem. The question was put on this amendment, and decided in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Johnson of Kentucky, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, and Van Buren—22.

So the Senate agreed to limit the duty on unmanufactured wool, to thirty per cent. ad valorem; and the clause imposing duties on that article, stands thus, as amended:

"On wool unmanufactured, a duty of twenty per centum ad valorem, until the 1st of June, 1825; afterwards, a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem, until the 1st day of June, 1826; afterwards, a duty of thirty per centum ad valorem: Provided, That all wool, the actual value of which, at the place whence imported, shall not exceed ten cents per pound, shall be charged with a duty of fifteen per centum ad valorem, and no more."

Mr. LLOYD, of Maryland, then moved to amend the bill, by striking out the following proviso:

"Provided, That all wool, the actual value of which, at the place whence imported, shall not exceed ten cents per pound, shall be charged with a duty of fifteen per centum ad valorem, and no more."

The question was then put on this amendment, and decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Branch, Chandler, Eaton, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Knight, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, Macon, Parrott, Ruggles, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, and Williams—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Brown, Clayton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, McIlvaine, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Seymour, Smith, Van Buren Van Dyke, and Ware—29.

So the Senate refused to strike out the proviso.

Mr. SMITH then moved to amend the bill, by inserting the following:

"On all articles of silk, or of which silk is a component part, manufactured in India, China, or any other country beyond the Cape of Good Hope, a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem."

This amendment gave rise to a short discussion, in which Messrs. SMITH, LLOYD of Massachusetts, DICKERSON, TALBOT, LOWRIE, and BENTON, engaged.

Mr. DICKERSON moved to amend the amendment, by striking out "twenty-five per centum," and inserting "thirty per centum." This was negatived.

The question was then put on Mr. SMITH's amendment, and decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Branch, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Miss., H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lloyd of Maryland, Smith, and Williams—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, King of New York, Knight, Lan-man, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Macon, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Parrot, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, and Ware—35.

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

So the Senate rejected the amendment proposing a duty of twenty-five per cent. on India silks.

Mr. KING, of New York, then moved that the bill be amended, by striking out all that part which provides for the highest progressive duty, of 37½ per centum ad valorem, "on all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be a component part." This motion produced considerable discussion, in which the mover, and Messrs. HAYNE, SMITH, DICKERSON, TALBOT, MILLS, LLOYD of Massachusetts, RUGGLES, and TAYLOR of Virginia, engaged. The question on this amendment was then put, and decided in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Henry Johnson of Louisiana, Josiah S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Johnson of Kentucky, Lanman, McIlvaine, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Thomas—18.

So the Senate agreed to strike out the highest rate of duty on woollen manufactured goods; this vote leaves these articles subject, by the provisions of the bill, to a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem, until the 30th day of June, 1825; and, after that time, to a duty of 33½ per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. CHANDLER then moved to amend the bill, by excepting Russia, Holland, and Raven's duck, from the duty of 25 per centum ad valorem, imposed, by the bill, upon all manufactures of cotton, silk, flax, or hemp; and to subject those articles to certain specific duties.

Some remarks were made, upon this proposition, by the mover; and by Messrs. TALBOT, SMITH, MILLS, and HAYNE.

Mr. HAYNE observed, that he should vote against the motion, because he thought there were other articles of equal importance, which ought to be excepted, and which were, on principle, equally entitled to exemption. Mr. H. repeated, that he would give his support to a proposition to strike out the whole section, or to exempt from its operation all articles of prime necessity, in which any part of the country is deeply interested. But surely the gentleman from Maine could not expect to have the bill moulded so as to suit his own views, and the peculiar interests of his own State, while he refuses to consult the interests of others.

The question was then put, and the amendment was disagreed to, fifteen members voting in the affirmative, and thirty-one in the negative.

Mr. HAYNE then moved to amend the bill, in the following clause: "On all manufactures, not herein specified, of cotton, silk, flax, or hemp, or of which either of these materials shall be a component part, a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem;" by striking out therefrom, the words "flax or hemp."

Mr. H. said, he made this motion to redeem a pledge which he had heretofore given. If it prevailed, duck, sheetings, and osnaburgs, would be equally protected; and articles of prime necessity, which we are not prepared to manufacture, will be exempted from an onerous tax; a tax which would produce great inconvenience to the people.

The question on Mr. HAYNE's amendment was then put, and determined in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware and Williams—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—25.

So the Senate refused to exempt articles manufactured of flax or hemp, from the proposed duty.

Mr. MACON then moved to amend the bill, by striking out the following clause: "On cotton bagging, four and a half cents per square yard."

This motion gave rise to some discussion; in which Messrs. MACON, JOHNSON of Kentucky, HOLMES of Maine, TALBOT, SMITH, and BENTON, participated.

The question was then put, and decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnston of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—23.

NAYS.—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Thomas—24.

So the Senate determined not to strike out the proposed duty of four and a half cents per square yard, on cotton bagging; and the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, May 7.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report from the Secretary of State, made in pursuance of the fifth section of the "Act regulating passenger ships and vessels;" which was read.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

for the relief of certain persons who have paid duties on certain goods imported into Castine; and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Benjamin Desobry;" reported them severally without amendment.

He also reported the bill entitled "An act for the relief of J. Ottramare," with an amendment; which was read.

MR. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Dean Weymouth," reported it without amendment.

MR. NOBLE submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to lay before the Senate, on the first day of the next session of Congress, the names of all the pensioners on the pension list up to the 4th of September next, in consequence of wounds received in the Revolutionary war, under the several acts of Congress; the amount paid to each per annum; the State to which each one belongs; and the amount of money, per annum, paid to the aforesaid pensioners; and, in like manner, the names of all the pensioners placed on the pension list up to the 4th of September next, in consideration of wounds received during the last war, by virtue of the several acts of Congress; the amount paid to each per annum; the State to which each one belongs; and the amount of money per annum paid to the last described pensioners; designating the number and names of those who receive a full pension of eight dollars per month; also, the number that have applied for a pension to the Secretary of War, and the number rejected; also, the names of all the widows and children who receive half pay for five years, placed on the pension list up to the 4th of September next, by virtue of the acts of Congress; the amount paid to each per annum; the State to which each one belongs; and the amount of money, per annum, paid to the said widows and children; and the whole amount of money paid to the said widows and children heretofore; the number that applied for a pension; and the number rejected. The names of the pensioners on the pension list, up to the 4th of September next, that have been placed thereon under the several acts of Congress providing for certain persons engaged in the land and naval service of the United States in the Revolutionary war; the amount paid to each per annum; the State to which each one belongs; and the amount of money paid, per annum, to the said pensioners; the number that applied for a pension, and the number rejected. That the Secretary of War be further directed to lay before the Senate the name of every other pensioner placed upon the pension list within his Department, by any special law, or any act of Congress, not above referred to; the amount paid to each per annum; and the State to which each one belongs.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill, entitled "An act altering the times of holding the courts in the District of Columbia," with an amendment. They have passed a bill, entitled "An act further to regulate the inspection of flour in the county of Alexandria;" in which amendment and bill they request the concurrence of the Senate.

MR. KING, of Alabama, called the attention of the Senate to the great number of private bills which had come from the other House, and which had been reported by committees of the Senate. He said a great many of the persons for whose relief these bills were drawn were waiting their result with great anxiety, and at great expense. He hoped the Senate would agree to lay the tariff bill on the table until to-morrow, and take up some of the bills respecting private claims. He, therefore, moved that the bill to which he had particularly alluded, together with the resolutions on the subject, submitted yesterday by an honorable member from Virginia, (MR. BARBOUR,) be ordered to lie on the table.

MR. LOWRIE called for a division of the question; and it was declared first to be upon laying MR. BARBOUR'S resolutions on the table. This was agreed to.

The Senate then refused to lay the bill "to amend the several acts imposing duties on imports" on the table.

THE TARIFF.

The bill from the House of Representatives "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," was again taken up for consideration, as in Committee of the Whole.

MR. SMITH moved to amend the bill, in the following clause: "On all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be a component part, a duty of 30 per centum ad valorem, until the 30th day of June, 1825; and, after that time, a duty of one-third per centum ad valorem," by inserting, after the word "part," the words "excepting worsted stuff goods."

MESSRS. SMITH and MILLS supported this amendment. It was opposed by MESSRS. DICKERSON, D'WOLF, and LOWRIE. The question was then put, and the amendment was rejected, by yeas and nays, as follows :

YEAS—MESSRS. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, King of Alabama, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—20.

NAYS—MESSRS. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—26.

So the Senate determined not to except worsted stuff goods from the proposed duty.

MR. BARBOUR then moved to amend the bill, by extending the time at which its provisions are to take effect, from the 30th day of January next, to the 30th day of September next. This amendment was supported by the mover, and by MESSRS. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, and SMITH; and opposed by MESSRS. RUGGLES, DICKERSON, D'WOLF, TALBOT, BROWN, BELL, and PARROTT.

MR. HOLMES, of Maine, called for a division of the question; and the question was declared to be on striking out the word "June." The question was then put and decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—25.

So the Senate decided not to alter the time at which the operation of this bill is to commence.

Mr. KING, of New York, then moved to amend the bill, in the following clause: "On all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be a component part, a duty of thirty per centum ad valorem, until the 30th day of June, 1825; and, after that time, a duty of thirty-three and one-third per centum," by inserting, after the word "part," the words "except worsted stuff goods, which shall pay twenty-five per centum ad valorem." This proposition gave rise to some debate, in which Messrs. LOWRIE, D'WOLF, KING, of New York, MILLS, KNIGHT, EDWARDS, and FINDLAY, engaged. The question was then put, and decided in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Thomas—20.

So the Senate decided that "worsted stuff goods" should be subjected to a duty of twenty-five per cent. only.

Mr. HAYNE then moved to amend the bill, by including "blankets," in the exception which had just been made in favor of worsted stuff goods, as liable only to a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem. This amendment was supported by the mover, and opposed by Mr. D'WOLF. The question was then put and decided in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, Van Buren—23.

So the Senate determined that blankets should only be subject to a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, moved to amend the bill by inserting in it the following proviso:

"Provided, That all articles imported into the United States in any ship or vessel which shall have cleared from any foreign port or place before the passage of this act, shall be subject to the same duties as if this act had not passed."

MESSRS. HOLMES, BENTON, and DICKERSON, made a few remarks on this amendment. The question was then put and decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—24.

So the Senate rejected the proviso proposed by Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. BRANCH then moved to strike out the following line from the bill: "On frying-pans, four cents per pound." This amendment was supported by the mover and by Mr. HAYNE. It was agreed to by the Senate, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, and Thomas—18.

So the Senate determined that frying-pans should be exempted from the proposed duty.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, then moved to amend the bill by striking out the following line: "On cocoa, three cents per pound." Some remarks were made on this subject by the mover, and by Messrs. D'WOLF and DICKERSON. The amendment was carried without division; and thus the proposed duty on cocoa was stricken out.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, then moved to amend the bill by inserting the following clause: "On Russia, Holland, and Raven's duck, osnaburges, ticklenburgs, and burlaps, a duty of — per centum ad valorem." Messrs. D'WOLF, SMITH, TALBOT, LOWRIE, LLOYD of Massachusetts, CHANDLER, and BARBOUR, addressed the Senate upon this amendment. The question was then put, and decided in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Bell, Benton, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Branch, Brown, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Taylor of Virginia—17.

Mr. JACKSON then moved to fill the blank in the amendment just adopted with "twenty," so as to make the duty twenty per cent. This was disagreed to, yeas 20, nays 27.

Mr. KING, of New York, then moved to fill the blank with "fifteen," so that the proposed duty should be fifteen per cent. This proposition was agreed to, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Branch, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, and Taylor of Indiana—16.

So the Senate decided that "Russia, Holland, and Raven's duck, osnaburghs, ticklenburghs, and burlaps" should be subject, according to the provisions of this bill, to a duty of fifteen per centum ad valorem.

Mr. LLOYD, of Maryland, then moved to amend the bill by inserting after the clause imposing duties on articles manufactured of wool, the following proviso:

Provided, That all articles manufactured of wool, or of which wool is a component part, the actual value of which, at the place where imported, does not exceed fifty cents per square yard, shall be subject to a duty of 25 per centum ad valorem, and no more."

On motion of Mr. MILLS, the amendment was amended by striking out "fifty cents," and inserting "thirty-three and one-third cents," as the value of the square yard.

Upon the amendment as amended, some remarks were made by Messrs. LLOYD of Maryland, DICKERSON, TALBOT, and MILLS. The question was then put, and decided in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, H. Johnson of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, Williams—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—22.

So the Senate decided that woollen goods, the value of which does not exceed thirty-three and a third cents the square yard, shall not be subject to a higher duty than 25 per centum ad valorem.

Mr. KING, of New York, then moved to amend the bill by striking out the following clause: "On tallow, four cents per pound." Messrs. LLOYD of Massachusetts, and SMITH, submitted a few observations upon this amendment. It was agreed to without a division.

Mr. WILLIAMS then moved, as a consequence of the vote that had just passed, that the fifth section of the bill, which allows a drawback of the duties imposed by this act, on the exportation of tallow, be stricken out. This was also agreed to without a division.

Mr. SMITH moved to amend the bill, by inserting the following clause: "On copper, in plates or sheets, two cents per pound." Messrs. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, SMITH, D'WOLF, and DICKERSON, spoke upon the merits of this amendment. It was disagreed to by the Senate—yeas 12, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Findlay, Jackson, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, Ruggles, Smith, Taylor of Indiana, and Taylor of Virginia.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Branch, Brown, Chandler, Clayton, Edwards, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lloyd of Massachusetts, McIlvaine, Macon, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Seymour, Talbot, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, moved to amend the bill, by striking out the following clause: "On iron cables or chains, or parts thereof, three cents per pound; and no drawback shall be allowed on the exportation of iron cables, or parts thereof." Messrs. LLOYD, DICKERSON, PARROTT, HOLMES, of Maine, SMITH, of Maryland, D'WOLF, and MILLS, discussed the propriety of this amendment. Mr. HOLMES moved to amend the clause, by striking out three cents, and inserting two cents, as the duty on iron cables. Mr. SMITH called for a division of the question. The question was then put, on striking out three cents; and decided in the negative—23 in the affirmative, 24 in the negative. The question was then put, on Mr. LLOYD's motion, to strike out the whole clause, and determined in the negative—21 in the affirmative, 26 in the negative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, and Thomas.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, then moved that the bill be amended, by inserting the following line: "On oats, ten cents per bushel." This was agreed to, twenty-seven members voting in the affirmative.

Mr. KING, of New York, then moved to amend the bill by striking out the following clause: "On flax, three cents per pound." This amendment was agreed to without division.

Mr. SMITH proposed to amend the bill by inserting a specific duty on prunella shoes, laced boots, &c. This was agreed to, twenty-six in the affirmative.

Mr. BRANCH then moved to amend the bill by striking out the following line: "On pepper, ten cents per pound." This was agreed to without division.

Mr. KING, of New York, moved to amend the bill by striking out the following clause: "On coal, six cents per heaped bushel." This proposition gave rise to some debate between the mover, and Messrs. BARBOUR, LLOYD, of Massachusetts, and D'WOLF. It was not agreed to.

Mr. KING, of New York, also moved to strike out the following clause: "On glass beads, fifty cents per pound;" which was agreed to without division.

Mr. HAYNE then moved to amend the bill by striking out from the following clause: "On anvils and anchors, two cents per pound," the words two cents per pound, in order to insert, in lieu of the specific duty, an ad valorem duty. Remarks were made upon this motion by Messrs. HAYNE, DICKERSON, and MILLS. The amendment was not agreed to.

A motion was then made for adjournment, which was decided in the affirmative, by the casting vote of the Chair; and the Senate adjourned till tomorrow.

SATURDAY, May 8.

The PRESIDENT communicated a letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a list of the contracts made by that department during the past year; which was read.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the administrator of John B. Fanning, deceased, late a purser in the Navy of the United States;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Joseph Smith, of Alexandria;" reported them severally without amendment.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Josiah Watson and Jane Watson, praying relief from the Government, in consequence of the dependent and helpless situation to which they have been reduced, by the death of their son, while in the service of his country, submitted a report: The committee state, that the petitioners are the parents, in very advanced life, of the late William Henry Watson, an officer of the United States Navy, of great promise; who, after having, in a very gallant manner, inflicted on the pirates of the Gulf of Mexico, and the coasts of Cuba, a merited and severe punishment, fell a victim, while on duty, to the epidemic prevailing on board the ship of war John Adams, at Thompson's Island, in the autumn of the last year; that the petitioners are not only very aged, but are in narrow circumstances; and were dependent upon their deceased and lamented son, for the principal part of their support; and that their case presents a strong claim upon the sympathy, if not upon the justice, of the Government. But the sense of Congress, on the inexpediency of extending pension allowances, or pecuniary grants, to cases of this description, having been too distinctly, and repeatedly, expressed, to be misunderstood, the committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject; and recommend that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition, and the papers accompanying the same.

The report was read and concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. LLOYD of Massachusetts, from the same committee, to whom was referred two resolutions of the Senate, the one respecting the establishment of a navy yard for small vessels at Charleston, South Carolina, and the other respecting the expediency of establishing a naval depot at Pensacola, reported a bill "to authorize the further examination and surveys of the harbor of Charleston, and coast of Florida," together with sundry documents relating to the subject. The bill was read twice.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill entitled "An act to authorize the issuing of a register for the schooner Five Sisters," reported it without amendment.

Mr. H. JOHNSON presented the petition of W. W. Montgomery, and others, of the city of New Orleans, praying the sale of certain lots in said city, for the purpose of building an exchange; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to whom were referred the bill entitled "An act to amend an act supplemental to an act entitled 'An act to carry into effect the ninth article of a treaty concluded between the United States and Spain, the 22d day of February, 1819,' approved the third of March, 1823;" and the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Blean;" reported them severally without amendment.

Mr. J. S. JOHNSTON presented the petition of James Fort Muse, of Louisiana, praying a grant of land for the purpose of erecting mills thereon; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill yesterday brought up for concurrence was read twice, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill entitled "An act altering the times of holding the courts in the District of Columbia;" and concurred therein.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

of the 6th instant, to print a number of copies of the tariff bill, to be distributed among the people of the United States; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion of yesterday, requesting the Secretary of War to lay before the Senate a list of the names and annual pay of all the public pensioners; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that they have passed a bill entitled "An act to authorize the creation of a stock, to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars, to provide for the awards of the commissioners under the treaty with Spain, of the 22d of February, 1819;" in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

THE TARIFF.

The unfinished business of yesterday, being the further consideration of the bill from the other House, "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," was resumed, in Committee of the Whole; Mr. EATON was called to the chair.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, moved to amend the bill, by striking out the following line: "On Chinese cassia, ten cents per pound." The amendment was carried.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, then moved to amend the bill, by inserting the following line: "on ginger, two cents per pound." Mr. L. stated the reasons which induced him to propose this amendment. It was carried.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, moved further to amend the bill, by striking out from the following clause: "On printing, copper plate, and stainer's paper, ten cents per pound," the words "copper plate." Mr. LLOYD stated that his object was to relieve an establishment for making charts, belonging to a celebrated nautical gentleman (Mr. BLUNT, of New York,) from a very onerous, oppressive, and unnecessary tax, which the proposed duty on copper plate paper would impose upon him. Messrs. LANMAN, LOWRIE, DICKERSON, and FINDLAY, opposed this amendment. Mr. HAYNE read some statements, to show the oppressive operation of the duties imposed by this bill, upon paper generally. The question was then put, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HAYNE then moved to amend the bill, by striking out from the following clause: "On folio and quarto post paper, of all kinds, twenty cents per pound," the word "twenty," and insert, in lieu of it, the word fifteen. This motion was supported by the mover and by Mr. SMITH, and opposed by Mr. DICKERSON. The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BRANCH moved to amend the bill, by striking out the following lines:

"On cutting knives, twenty-five cents each;
On scythes, twenty cents each;
On sickles and reaping hooks, twelve cents each;
On spades and shovels, of iron or steel, twenty cents each."

This amendment was supported by the mover, by Messrs. SMITH, LLOYD, of Mass., HAYNE, HOLMES, of Maine, LLOYD, of Maryland, TAYLOR, of Virginia, MILLS, and BARBOUR; and opposed by Messrs. LOWRIE, DICKERSON, FINDLAY, BROWN, D'WOLF, and LANMAN. This discussion involved the general propriety and expediency of levying specific duties on articles which vary much in quality and in cost.

Mr. BRANCH consented to vary his motion, so as to strike out the specific duties proposed on these articles, and insert, in lieu thereof, a duty of thirty per centum ad valorem. The question was put upon the motion, as modified; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 31, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, McIlvaine, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, and Thomas.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, moved to strike out the words in the first section, "On screws of iron, weighing twenty-five pounds, or upwards, eight cents per pound; on screws of iron, for wood, called wood screws, not exceeding one inch in length, eight cents per groce; over one inch, and not exceeding two inches in length, fourteen cents per groce; over two inches in length, twenty cents per groce;" and insert, "On screws of iron, weighing twenty-five pounds, or upwards, thirty per centum ad valorem; on screws of iron, for wood, called wood screws, thirty per centum ad valorem." It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 26, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Henry Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas and Van Buren.

So the Senate decided that an ad valorem duty of thirty per centum should be imposed by the bill, on these articles, instead of the specific duty in the bill, as it came from the other House.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, then moved to amend the bill, by striking out the specific duty, of ten cents per pound, "on all vessels of copper," and inserting a duty of thirty-five per cent. ad valorem. This motion was negatived by the casting vote of the Chair.

On motion of Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, the proposed duty on black lead pencils, was changed from a specific duty of one dollar and fifty cents per groce, to an ad valorem duty of forty per cent.

Mr. LOWRIE then moved to amend the following clause of the bill: "On all wares of cut glass, not specified, three cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, an ad valorem duty of thirty per centum," by raising the duty on the pound, from three to six cents. Mr. LOWRIE explained the reasons of his motion, and Messrs. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, SMITH, TALBOT, and HAYNE, made some remarks upon it. The question on the amendment was then put, and decided in the negative—17 to 26.

On motion of Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, the duty on "Venetian carpeting" was reduced from fifty cents to twenty-five cents per square yard.

Mr. DICKERSON moved to amend the bill so as to raise the duty on all books printed in the Greek and Latin languages from four cents per volume to eighteen and an half cents per pound, when bound; and sixteen and an half cents per pound when in sheets or boards. Upon this proposition remarks were made by the mover, and by Messrs. BARBOUR, SMITH, HOLMES, of Maine, MILLS, LLOYD, of Massachusetts, EDWARDS, LOWRIE, and HAYNE.

Mr. HAYNE moved to amend the amendment by striking out the amount of duty per pound, with a view to insert an ad valorem duty. This was not agreed to.

The question was then put upon Mr. DICKERSON's amendment, and decided in the negative—yeas 22, nays 25.

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor, of Indiana, and Thomas.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

Mr. HAYNE then moved to amend the bill by striking out the duty of thirty-seven and-a-half cents per pound on books, when bound; and thirty-three cents per pound on books, when in boards or sheets, and to insert a duty "of — per centum ad valorem" in lieu thereof. Mr. H. stated that his object in making this motion was, in the first place, to get rid of this singular duty on books by the pound, and, in the second place, to substitute a very moderate duty (one not exceeding the present duty of fifteen per cent.) in lieu of the proposed duty, which he considered as equal to forty per cent. at least. Mr. H. contended that the duty on books ought to be such as to encourage the importation of foreign works, and that, with respect to books in general use, it is well known that the American bookseller could not only enter into competition with books printed abroad, but had almost excluded them from the market. But there was a class of books of science, not generally read, though very important to professional and scientific men, which were not generally republished in this country. No obstacle should be interposed to prevent the introduction of such books. Mr. H. considered books as a raw material, essential to the formation of the mind, the morals, and the character of the people; and which should be introduced free of duty. Mr. H. also strongly objected to the duty on books by the pound. The value of a book, he thought, did not depend on its weight. He compared this method of estimating books to that mentioned in Knickerbocker's History of New York, where the Dutch Governor settled mercantile transactions by weighing the merchants' books of account in scales.

This amendment was also supported by Mr. MILLS, and opposed by Mr. DICKERSON. The question upon adopting it was then put, and carried in the affirmative—yeas 25, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Benton, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren.

Mr. DICKERSON moved to fill the blank in the amendment which had just been adopted, with "twenty," so as to make the duty twenty per centum ad valorem. This was not agreed to.

Mr. SEYMOUR then moved to fill the blank with "twenty-five," so as to make the duty twenty-five per centum ad valorem. This was carried—yeas 24, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

So the duty on all books was fixed, in the bill, at twenty-five per centum ad valorem.

Mr. SMITH moved to amend the bill by excepting "cambrics and lawns made of flax," from the duty of twenty-five per cent. imposed, by the bill, upon all manufactures of cotton, silk, flax, or hemp. Mr. S. communicated to the Senate some statements in support of his motion. The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, moved to amend the bill so as to except "laces made of flax or cotton," from the duty proposed in the bill. This was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, the bill was laid upon the table; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, immediately after the doors were opened, adjourned till Monday.

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 10.

The following Message was received, on the 8th instant, from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate of the United States:

I communicate, herewith, to the Senate, a report from the Secretary of State, with the documents relating to the present state of the commercial intercourse between the United States and Portugal, requested by the resolution of the Senate of the 13th ult.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, May 7, 1824.

The Message and report were read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT communicated a report of the Secretary of the Navy, on the petition of John S. Stiles, executor of George Stiles; which was read.

Mr. McILVAINE, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Samuel Cleveland, jr.," reported it without amendment.

Mr. BELL, from the Committee of Claims, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Peter Yandes;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of J. M. C. Montgomery;" reported them, severally, without amendment.

The bill from the other House "to authorize the creation of stock, not exceeding five millions of dollars, to provide for the awards of the Commissioners under the treaty with Spain," was twice read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion by Mr. NOBLE, the Senate resumed the motion of the 7th instant, requiring the Secretary of War to lay before the Senate the names and annual pay of all public pensioners, and agreed thereto.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to confer certain powers on the Levy Court of the county of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;" and a bill, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to enter into certain negotiations relative to lands located under Virginia Military Land Warrants, lying between Ludlow's and Roberts's lines, in the State of Ohio;" in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate resumed the bill further to regulate the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate resumed the bill further to amend the judicial system of the United States, and provide for holding the circuit courts; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill authorizing an examination of the harbor of Charleston, in South Carolina and of the coast of Florida; and, on motion, it was postponed till to-morrow.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to establish a Surveyor General's office in the Territory of Arkansas; and, on motion, it was postponed to Thursday next.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the act to incorporate the inhabitants of the City of Washington," passed the 15th of May, 1820; and, on motion by Mr. EATON, it was recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to provide for the punishment of certain crimes, when committed in any navy yard, fort, arsenal, magazine, dock, lighthouse, tract of land, or other place belonging to the United States; and, on motion, it was ordered that it be postponed to Wednesday next.

The bill "in addition to an act establishing navy hospitals" was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, explained the objects of the bill. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

The resolution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, authorizing the purchase of six hundred and fifty copies of Way & Gideon's edition of the Journals of the Old Congress, from 1774 to 1788, for the use of Congress, was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky spoke in favor of, and Mr. DICKERSON opposed it. Mr. LOWRIE moved to amend the resolution by striking out six hundred and fifty, and inserting three hundred. Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, advocated the passage of the resolution. The amendment was agreed to. Some remarks were made upon the resolution as to the quality of this edition and the distribution of the copies by Messrs. KING of New York, VAN BUREN, ELLIOTT, SMITH, EATON, HOLMES of Me., HAYNE, and LANMAN. The resolution was then reported to the Senate as amended, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill "relative to the Patent Office, and to the salary of the Superintendent thereof," was next taken up, in Committee of the Whole. This bill provides that the Patent Office shall remain, as now, attached to the Department of State, and that the Superintendent shall receive a salary of two thousand dollars per annum, as a compensation for his services. The passage of the bill was advocated by Messrs. JOHNSON of Kentucky, TALBOT, and SMITH; and opposed by Messrs. LOWRIE, CHANDLER, and TAYLOR of Virginia. The bill was reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill from the House of Representatives "providing for the appointment of an Indian agent for the Osage Indians west of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas, and for other purposes," was then taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole. Mr. BENTON explained the objects of the bill. It was then reported to the Senate without amendment, and passed to a third reading.

The bill "to authorize the President to hold a treaty with the Indians owning the country on the south side of Lake Superior, for the purpose of extinguishing their title to certain districts, supposed to contain valuable mines of copper," was then taken up, in Committee of the Whole. Mr. KING, of New York, made some remarks on the subject, and concluded by moving the indefinite postponement of the bill. Mr. BENTON replied briefly to Mr. KING, and moved that the bill be ordered to lie on the table. The latter course was agreed to.

ALEXANDER MCNAIR.

The bill reported by the Committee on Claims in the Senate, "for the relief of Alexander McNair," was next taken up, in Committee of the Whole. Mr. RUGGLES stated the nature of this claim. It was for property destroyed, in consequence of its being occupied by the United States troops; for services performed for the Government; and for interest paid on moneys borrowed for the service of the Government. Mr. CHANDLER moved to strike out the second section of the bill, which provides payment for the services rendered by Gov. McNair, and for interest. Messrs. JOHNSON of Kentucky, LANMAN, and BENTON, opposed the motion to strike out. The question on striking out the second section was decided in the negative—yeas 5, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Clayton, Macon, Palmer, and Taylor of Virginia.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Mills, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith, Talbot, Thomas, Van Dyke, and Williams.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

THE TARIFF.

On motion of Mr. LOWRIE, the bill from the House of Representatives, "to amend the several acts imposing duties on imports," was again taken up for consideration, as in Committee of the Whole, Mr. KING, of Alabama, in the Chair.

Mr. DICKERSON moved to amend the bill, by striking out the fourth section, which provides for the allowance of the drawback on "plain silk and 'nankeen cloths, imported in American vessels 'from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, although 'the said cloths, before the exportation thereof, 'shall have been colored, printed, stained, dyed, 'stamped, or painted, in the United States."

This amendment was opposed by Messrs. KING, of New York, LLOYD, of Massachusetts, D'WOLF, and SMITH, and supported by the mover and Mr. FINDLAY.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, made some remarks in relation to the distinction made between the silks from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and those of France, to which Mr. LLOYD replied.

Mr. SMITH moved to amend this section by making it include all plain silks. This was not agreed to.

Mr. LOWRIE moved to amend the bill by striking out the words, "and nankeen cloths imported in American vessels from beyond the Cape of Good Hope." This amendment was adopted, and the section now reads:

"That the drawback allowed by law on plain silk shall be allowed, although the said cloths, before the exportation thereof, shall have been colored, printed, stained, dyed, stamped, or painted, in the United States," &c.

This section, as amended, was advocated by Messrs. LOWRIE and D'WOLF, and opposed by Mr. DICKERSON.

The question on striking out the whole section was then put, and carried in the affirmative—yeas 26, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Branch, Brown, Chandler, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Josiah S. Johnston, King of Alabama, Lloyd of Maryland, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Ware and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Clayton, D'Wolf, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Henry Johnson, Kelly, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Macon, Mills, Seymour, Smith, Thomas, Van Buren, and Van Dyke.

So the section, providing for the allowance of drawback on the exportation of silks and nankeens, when colored, printed, stained, dyed, stamped, or painted, in this country, was stricken out.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, moved to amend the bill, by inserting the following:

"On all manufactures of silk, or of which silk shall be a component material, coming from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, a duty of — per centum ad valorem."

On all other manufactures of silk or of which silk shall be a component material, a duty of — per centum ad valorem."

Mr. HOLMES stated that his object in moving this amendment was to ascertain whether the Senate was willing to make a discrimination between the silks of France, and those of India. The former country, he said, took a considerable amount of articles of the production of this country; and he thought we ought to discriminate in favor of her silks.

Messrs. TALBOT, KING of New York, LLOYD of Massachusetts, HAYNE, and SMITH, made some remarks upon the proposed amendment.

Mr. TALBOT moved to fill the blank in the first amendment with "thirty," so as to make the duty on India silks thirty per cent. This was supported by Mr. TALBOT, and opposed by Mr. LLOYD of Massachusetts. It was not agreed to.

The first blank was then filled with "twenty-five;" and the second with "twenty."

The question was then upon adopting the amendment with the blanks thus filled. Mr. LOWRIE opposed, and Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, supported it. The amendment was agreed to, by yeas and nays, as follows:

MAY, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Benton, Branch, Brown, Chandler, Clayton, Dickerson, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Kentucky, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lloyd of Maryland, McIlvaine, Macon, Ruggles, Smith, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, D'Wolf, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Seymour, and Van Buren—18.

So the Senate agreed to insert a discriminating duty of five per cent. between the silks of France and those of India, in favor of the former. The effect of this amendment is, to reduce the duty on all other silks, except those of India, five per cent. lower than proposed by the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH moved to amend the bill, by inserting the following clause: "On morocco skins, thirty per centum ad valorem." This amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, then moved to amend the bill, by striking out the following lines:

"On wheat, twenty-five cents per bushel;
On wheat-flour, fifty cents per hundred weight;
On potatoes, ten cents per bushel."

This proposition to amend was discussed by the mover, and by MESSRS. BARBOUR, JOHNSON of Kentucky, DICKERSON, SMITH, D'WOLF, LLOYD of Maryland, and FINDLAY.

Mr. SMITH called for a division of the question; he wished to have the question on striking out the duty on potatoes, taken separately.

The question was then put upon striking out the proposed duties on "wheat and wheat-flour." It was decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Elliot, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Ware, and Williams—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, Van Buren, and Van Dyke—28.

So the Senate refused to strike out the proposed duty on wheat and wheat-flour.

The question was then upon striking out the proposed duty of ten cents per bushel upon potatoes. Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, submitted this amendment, and Mr. D'WOLF opposed it. It was rejected, yeas 15, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Macon, Taylor of Virginia, Ware, and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, Van Buren, and Van Dyke.

Mr. EATON then moved to amend the bill by inserting the following:

"On cotton, picked or ginned, six cents per pound;
On cotton, not picked or ginned, one and a half cents per pound."

This amendment was opposed by MESSRS. HAYNE, BRANCH, ELLIOTT, and JOHNSON of Kentucky, and supported by the mover, and by MESSRS. BROWN, D'WOLF, and SMITH. It was subsequently withdrawn by the mover.

The bill, with the several amendments, was then reported from the Committee of the Whole, to the Senate. On motion of Mr. LLOYD of Massachusetts, the bill was ordered to lie on the table, and the amendments to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate then adjourned.

TUESDAY, May 11.

Mr. LLOYD, of Maryland, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill entitled "An act further to regulate the inspection of flour in the county of Alexandria," reported it without amendment.

Mr. BELL, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill entitled "An act for the relief of John Topp," reported it without amendment.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the bill entitled "An act for the relief of John K. Carter;" the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Fry and Spalding;" the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Hugh M'Culloch;" the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Mary H. Hawkins;" the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the assignees and legal representatives of John H. Piatt;" and the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Morris Goldsmith and Anthony Roderick;" reported them, severally, without amendment.

The two bills, yesterday brought up from the House of Representatives, for concurrence, were severally read twice, by unanimous consent.

On motion, the bill entitled "An act to confer certain powers on the levy court of the county of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to enter into certain negotiations relative to lands located under Virginia military land warrants, lying between Ludlow's and Roberts's lines, in the State of Ohio," was referred to the Committee on Public Lands to consider and report thereon.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill entitled "An act to improve the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers;" in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

THE TARIFF.

On motion of Mr. LOWRIE, the bill from the House of Representatives "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," was taken up for consideration in Senate.

The question was put, separately, upon concurring in the several amendments made in Committee of the Whole, in the following order:

To insert—"On Russia, Holland, and Raven's duck, osnaburges, burlaps, and ticklenburgs, a duty of fifteen per centum ad valorem." This was concurred in without division.

To except "worsted stuff goods and blankets," from the duty of thirty per centum imposed on other manufactures of wool; and subject the same to a duty of twenty-five per cent. only. Mr. RUGGLES moved to strike out the word "blankets" from this exception, and supported his motion by some remarks on the subject. This motion was opposed by Messrs. HAYNE, ELLIOTT, SMITH, and TAYLOR, of Virginia, and supported by Messrs. TALBOT and DICKERSON. The motion was lost—yeas 23, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

The exception, as made in Committee of the Whole, was then concurred in.

To strike out the highest progressive duty from the section imposing duties on manufactures of wool, which provides that, after the 30th day of June, 1826, those manufactures shall be subject to a duty of thirty-seven and a half per centum ad valorem. This was agreed to, without division. The highest duty proposed by the bill on woollen manufactures, is thus left at thirty-three and one-third per centum ad valorem.

To insert the following proviso to the section imposing duties on manufactures of wool: "Provided, That, on all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be a component part, the actual value of which, at the place whence imported, shall not exceed thirty-three and a third cents per square yard, shall be charged with a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem. This was agreed to.

To insert in the section proposing to levy a duty of twenty-five per cent. on all manufactures of cotton, silk, flax, or hemp, a clause subjecting all manufactures of silk, coming from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, to a duty of twenty-five per cent., and all other manufactures of silk, to a duty of twenty per cent. Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, moved to amend this clause so as to leave all silks subject to a duty of twenty per cent. only. This amendment was supported by the mover, and Mr. PARROTT, and opposed by Messrs. HOLMES, of Maine, TALBOT, DICKERSON, and LOWRIE. This amendment was disagreed to—yeas 8, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Branch, Clayton, Hayne, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, and Parrott.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

The question then was upon agreeing to the insertion of the clause, as agreed to in Committee of the Whole, which makes a discrimination of five per cent. against silks from beyond the Cape of Good Hope. This amendment was concurred in.

To reduce the minimum upon which the duties on cotton cloths are to be calculated, from thirty-five to thirty cents per square yard. This was concurred in, without division.

To insert the following proviso: "Provided, also, that the provisions of this act shall not apply to, or be enforced against, importations of goods from ports or places eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, or beyond Cape Horn, before the first of November next ensuing."

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, moved to amend the proviso by striking out the words "before the first of November next ensuing," and inserting the following; "in American vessels which cleared out from the United States before the 1st of March, 1824, and shall arrive in the United States prior to the first of December next." Mr. LLOYD explained the objects of his amendment; and some remarks were made upon the subject by Messrs. LOWRIE, HOLMES of Maine, SMITH, MILLS, D'WOLF, KING of New York, and EATON. Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, moved that the word "November" only, be stricken out from the proviso. This was agreed to, and Mr. LLOYD withdrew his amendment. Mr. KING, of New York, then moved that the blank, caused by striking out "November," be filled with "January." Messrs. TAYLOR, of Virginia, and CHANDLER, submitted some observations in regard to the proposed extension of time. The amendment was carried—yeas 24, nays 22; and the proviso, as amended, was concurred in—yeas 24, nays 22. So the Senate decided that this act shall be inapplicable to importations of goods from ports eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, or beyond Cape Horn, before the first of January next ensuing.

To strike out, from the section imposing duties on unmanufactured wool, that part which provides for the progressive duty on that article, over thirty per centum ad valorem. The bill, as it came from the other House, provides for an immediate duty, on unmanufactured wool of 20 per centum ad valorem; and a progressive duty until June 1, 1830; after which, it was to remain at 50 per cent. The Senate, in Committee of the Whole, limited the progressive duty to thirty per cent. ad valorem. The amendment was concurred in.

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

To reduce the duty on Venetian carpeting from fifty cents to twenty-five cents per square yard. This was concurred in.

To strike out the following clause: "On hemp, two cents per pound." This amendment was divided, and the question was taken on striking out "two cents per pound." This was agreed to by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Bell, Branch, Chandler, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Seymour, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Brown, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Findlay, Jackson, Lanman, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Talbot, and Taylor of Indiana—16.

Mr. TALBOT moved to fill the blank with "thirty-seven dollars per ton," so as to make the clause read, "On hemp, thirty-seven dollars per ton." This amendment was supported by the mover, and by Messrs. EATON and JOHNSON of Kentucky, and opposed by Messrs. HOLMES of Maine, LLOYD of Massachusetts, MILLS, and BARBOUR.

Mr. LLOYD, of Maryland, moved to fill the blank with "forty-five dollars per ton." This was supported by the mover, and opposed by Mr. NOBLE.

Mr. NOBLE said he would state to the Senate the reasons of the vote which he was about to give; as it would appear, without explanation of the vote, that he refused to give protection to the growers of hemp in the United States, and more especially in the Western country—the country in which he resided. He had voted to retain in the bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, the two cents per pound on hemp, equal to forty-four dollars and eighty cents per ton; but the Senate rejected it. In relation to every article in the bill, the Senate, from the first discussion of it, had been nearly equally divided; and, although amendment after amendment had been made to the bill, he had no hesitation in saying that some of those who offered the amendments intended to vote against the entire bill on the final passage. He had set out from the commencement to afford every protection to the manufacturer, and, in doing so, he paid due regard to the different sections of the country, and found compromise of opinion necessary for the purpose of securing the final passage of the bill. He well knew that, if the protection given to the growers of hemp, or duties laid on foreign hemp, exceeded thirty-five dollars per ton, which was an increase of five dollars on the ton, the bill would be jeopardized, and finally lost. He would, therefore, vote against the duties proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, as well as the gentleman from Maryland, and would vote for the duty of thirty-five dollars per ton, as proposed by the gentleman from Maine. If he could not afford protection to every class, he would to a part, rather than to give it to none.

The motion made by Mr. LLOYD, of Maryland, was then rejected—yeas 6, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Branch, Johnson of Kentucky, Lloyd of Maryland, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Taylor of Virginia.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Henry Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

The question then recurred on Mr. TALBOT'S motion to fill the blank with "thirty-seven dollars per ton." This was decided in the negative—yeas 19, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Branch, Brown, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, McIlvaine, Ruggles, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Taylor of Virginia.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Bell, Chandler, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Seymour, Smith, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

Mr. CHANDLER then moved to fill the blank with the words "thirty-five dollars per ton." The question on this motion was determined in the affirmative—yeas 28, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

The Senate then refused to concur with the Committee of the Whole, in striking out the duty on hemp; and it now remains in the bill at thirty-five dollars per ton.

To strike out the following clause: "On flax, three cents per pound." This was concurred in, without division.

To strike out from the following clause, the italicized words: On "cotton bagging, four-and-a-half cents per square yard, until the 30th day of June, 1825; and afterwards, a duty of five-and-a-half cents per square yard." This was concurred in, without a division.

To strike out the following clause, "On iron, in bars or bolts, not manufactured, in whole or in part, by rolling, ninety cents per hundred and twelve pounds." This was not concurred in. The yeas and nays were as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Maryland, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—26.

So the Senate disagreed to the amendment by which the duty on iron was stricken out.

To strike out the specific duties on "cutting knives, scythes, sickles, and reaping hooks, spades, and shovels, of iron and steel, and iron screws;" and insert, in lieu of these duties, an ad valorem duty of thirty per centum. Concurred in, without division.

To strike out the following line, "on frying pans, four cents per pound;" concurred in, without division.

To strike out the specific duties on "quills," and on "slates and tiles, for building," and insert in lieu thereof, a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem. Agreed to without division.

To strike out the specific duty on "black lead pencils;" and insert in its stead a duty of forty per centum ad valorem. This was concurred in without a division.

To strike out the following line: "on tallow, four cents per pound." Mr. MILLS moved to amend this line, by striking out "four" and inserting "two." This was supported by the mover, and opposed by Messrs. DICKERSON and RUGGLES. The amendment was not agreed to; and the line was stricken out, in concurrence with the Committee of the Whole.

To insert the following lines: "on oats, ten cents per bushel; on prunella and other shoes, or slippers of stuff or nankeen, twenty-five cents per pair; on laced boots or bootees, one dollar and fifty cents per pair." These insertions were severally concurred in without division.

To strike out the following lines: "on pepper, ten cents per pound; on Chinese cassia, ten cents per pound; on cocoa, three cents per pound." This was concurred in.

To insert the following: "on ginger, two cents per pound." This was concurred in.

To strike out the following line: "on all other raisins, [except Muscatel raisins, and raisins in jars and boxes,] three cents per pound." This amendment was not concurred in.

To strike out the following lines: "on filberts, three cents per pound; on pine apples, two cents each; on oranges, fifty cents per hundred; on lemons, twenty-five cents per hundred; on limes, ten cents per hundred; on glass beads, fifty cents per pound." These amendments were severally concurred in.

To strike out the duty of thirty-seven cents per pound on books, when bound; and thirty-three cents per pound when in sheets or boards; and insert, in lieu thereof, a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem. This was not concurred in. The clause was amended, on motion of Mr. DICKERSON, so as to levy a duty of thirty cents per pound on books, when bound; and twenty-six cents per pound, when in sheets or boards. In this form, the duty was retained in the bill.

To insert the following exception: "with the exception of patent adhesive felt, for covering ships' bottoms, which shall be admitted, free of duty, until June 30th, 1826." This was concurred in, without division.

To strike out the following clause, "on all foreign distilled spirits, fifteen per centum upon the duties now imposed by law, and in addition thereto." This amendment was agreed to, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Bell, Branch, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Macon, Mills, Palmer, Parrott, Seymour, Smith, Thomas, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Brown, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Lloyd of Maryland, McIlvaine, Noble, Ruggles, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, and Van Buren—17.

So the Senate agreed, in concurrence with the Committee of the Whole, to strike out the proposed duty on foreign distilled spirits.

To strike out the fourth section of the bill, which provides for the allowance of the drawback allowed by law on plain silk and nankeen cloths, imported in American vessels, from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, although the said cloths, before the exportation thereof, shall have been colored, printed, stained, dyed, stamped, or painted, in the United States. This amendment was concurred in, and the section stricken out.

To strike out the fifth section of the bill; which provides for the allowance of drawback of the duties imposed by this bill, on tallow, when manufactured into soap, and exported. This amendment follows of course—as the proposed duty on tallow had been stricken out by the Senate. The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole, having been acted upon in the Senate—

Mr. DICKERSON then moved to amend the bill, by inserting the following clause: "on all books, printed in Latin or Greek, when bound, fifteen cents per pound; when not bound, thirteen cents per pound." This proposition was supported by the mover, and was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. TALBOT moved to amend the bill, by striking out the following proviso, which is attached to that clause of the bill which imposes duties on unmanufactured wool:

"Provided, That all wool, the actual value of which at the place whence imported shall not exceed ten

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

cents per pound, shall be charged with a duty of fifteen per centum ad valorem, and no more."

This motion was supported by the mover, and opposed by Messrs. DICKERSON and LLOYD of Maryland. The Senate refused to strike out the proviso—yeas 11, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Branch, Brown, Findlay, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Lloyd of Maryland, Ruggles, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Thomas.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Macon, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Seymour, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

Mr. MACON then moved to strike out the words "On cotton bagging, four and a half cents per square yard." It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 25, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Thomas.

So the duty on cotton bagging was stricken out entirely.

Mr. MACON then moved to amend the bill by striking out the following line: "On pimento, eight cents per pound." This amendment was adopted.

Mr. KING, of New York, moved to amend the bill, in the following clause: "On iron, in bars or bolts, not manufactured in whole or in part by rolling, ninety cents per one hundred and twelve pounds," by striking out therefrom the words "by rolling." This motion was advocated by the mover, and opposed by Messrs. DICKERSON and LOWRIE. Before any question had been taken upon it, at four o'clock, a motion was made to adjourn, which was decided in the affirmative, by the casting vote of the Chair. And the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, May 12.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the creation of a stock, to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars, to provide for the awards of commissioners under the treaty with Spain, of the 22d February, 1819," reported it without amendment.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill "for the relief of the heirs of Miguel Eslava," reported it without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. BARTON, Thomas F. Riddick had leave to withdraw the documents in relation to his claim, communicated on the 19th of January last.

The bill from the other House to "improve the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers," was twice read, and referred to the select Committee on Roads and Canals.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate resumed the unfinished business of yesterday, being the further consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," Mr. KING, of Alabama, in the Chair.

Just previous to the adjournment yesterday a motion was made by Mr. KING, of New York, to amend the bill, in the following clause: "On iron, in bars or bolts, not manufactured in whole or in part by rolling, ninety cents per hundred and twelve pounds," by striking out therefrom the words, "not manufactured in whole or in part by rolling." The question was upon the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. KING, of New York, consented to waive his amendment, and Mr. DICKERSON moved to amend the same clause, by inserting after it the following: "and all iron, manufactured in whole or in part by rolling, shall be hereafter prohibited."

This amendment was supported by the mover, and by Messrs. EATON and HOLMES, of Maine, and opposed by Messrs. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, BARBOUR, MILLS, and HAYNE.

Mr. KING, of New York, expressed his willingness to assent to the prohibition of rolled iron, if some future time were fixed for the commencement of the prohibition, so as not to operate upon voyages already commenced.

[The amendment was objected to, on the ground that the prohibition of this article would amount to an infringement of our treaty with Great Britain, as the iron did not change its original character by the mere fact of its being rolled. It was contended, on the other hand, that the process of rolling made it another and a distinct article from bar iron, as much as steel was a different article from bar iron—the latter having only been manufactured in a greater degree than the other—and as rolled iron was a different article from the ore itself, it was a fair subject of discrimination or prohibition.]

Mr. DICKERSON said as this was a very important question, and appeared to involve the violation of our treaty with another nation, he thought it would be more proper to make it a subject of consideration at another time, and not in connexion with this bill. He, therefore, withdrew his amendment. Mr. KING, of New York, also withdrew that which he had submitted.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, then moved to amend the bill, by striking out the specific duty of "ten cents per pound on vessels made of copper," and insert in lieu thereof an ad valorem duty of thirty-five per centum. This was agreed to, without division.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, next moved to amend the bill by inserting the following lines:

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

"On Madeira wine, — cents per gallon."

"On Lisbon and Oporto wines, — cents per gallon."

Mr. LLOYD supported his motion by some remarks upon the former important character of our trade with Portugal, and its present distressed state. He ascribed its decline to the excessive duties which had been imposed by this Government upon the wines of that country, and hoped that something would be done in the present bill to remove those embarrassments.

Mr. DICKERSON opposed the consideration of this important measure, having reference to our trade with Portugal, in connexion with the present bill. He proceeded to advance other objections against the amendment, on the score of its general inexpediency.

Mr. SMITH supported the motion, at considerable length, and Mr. TAYLOR of Virginia, made some remarks in favor of the diminution of duties on these wines.

The amendment was opposed by Messrs. BENTON, TALBOT, and D'WOLF.

[In opposition to the motion, it was contended that these rich and high priced wines not being used, or expected to be used, by the poor, were a fair source of revenue, and ought to be subject to heavy duties.]

Mr. J. S. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, moved to amend the proposed amendment, by adding to it the following:

"On Burgundy, —; on Champagne, —; on Rhenish or Tokay, —; on all other wines, not enumerated, when imported in bottles or cases, —; on all other wines, not enumerated, when imported otherwise than in bottles or cases, —."

Mr. JOHNSTON supported his proposition by showing the propriety of a general reduction of the duties on wines, and of including in the reduction now proposed, the wines of France, as well as those of Portugal.

Mr. SMITH made some further remarks on the subject, and Mr. H. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, spoke in favor of a reduction of the duties on French wines, as they were in very common use among all classes of people, in the part of the country which he represented.

Mr. BENYON explained the reasons which would govern him in giving his votes on these amendments respecting the duties on wines.

The amendment proposed by Mr. J. S. JOHNSTON, was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. LLOYD's motion in regard to Madeira, Lisbon, and Oporto wines. It was decided in the negative by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, and Thomas—25.

So the Senate determined not to alter the present rate of duties on wines.

Mr. FINDLAY moved to amend the bill in the following clause: "On oil cloth carpeting, and on oil cloths of every description, a duty of thirty per centum ad valorem," so as to make it stand as follows: "On oil cloth carpeting fifty cents per square yard, and on oil cloths of every other description a duty of thirty per centum ad valorem." Mr. F. made some remarks in favor of his proposition, which was opposed by Messrs. LLOYD of Massachusetts, and SMITH. It was not agreed to.

The question was then put upon ordering the amendments to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time, as amended. This question was decided in the affirmative by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Maryland, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—22.

So the bill as amended, passed to the third reading.

THURSDAY, May 13.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to enter into certain negotiations relative to lands located under Virginia military land warrants, lying between Ludlow's and Roberts's lines, in the State of Ohio," reported it without amendment.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Dean Weymouth," reported them without amendment.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Edward Evans," reported it without amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the creation of a stock to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars, to provide for the awards of the Commissioners under the treaty with Spain, of the 22d of February, 1819;" and, on motion, it was postponed to Monday next.

On motion, by Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, the Committee on Naval Affairs were discharged from the consideration of the report of the Secretary of the Navy of the 18th February, showing the expenditures of that Department for the year 1823.

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill authorizing an examination and survey of the harbor of Charleston, in South Carolina, and of the coast of Florida; and it was amended, and reported to the Senate; and the amendment being concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to provide for the punishment of certain crimes, when committed in any navy yard, fort, arsenal, magazine, dock, lighthouse, tract of land, or other place, belonging to the United States; and on motion, it was laid on the table.

The bill "in addition to act establishing navy hospitals;" the bill "relative to the Patent Office, and to the salary of the Superintendent thereof;" and the bill "for the relief of Alexander McNair," were severally read the third time, passed, and sent to the other House for concurrence.

The bill from the House of Representatives "providing for the appointment of an Indian Agent for the Osage Indians west of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas, and for other purposes," was read the third time, and passed.

The engrossed resolution to authorize the purchase of a certain number of the copies of the Journals of Congress from 1774 to 1788, was on motion by Mr. THOMAS, ordered to lie on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill which originated in the Senate, entitled "An act to provide for the extinguishment of the debt due to the United States, by the purchasers of public lands;" with an amendment. They have also passed bills of the following titles, viz: "An act granting a right of pre-emption to certain actual settlers in that part of the former province of West Florida included in the District of Jackson Courthouse, in the State of Mississippi, and in the District of St. Helena Courthouse, in the State of Louisiana;" "An act granting certain lots of ground to the corporation of the city of Mobile, and to certain individuals of said city;" "An act to regulate the fees of the Registers of Wills in the several counties within the District of Columbia;" "An act making appropriations for deepening the channel leading into the harbor of Presque Isle, and for repairing Plymouth Beach;" "An act to authorize the State of Indiana to open a canal through the public lands, to connect the navigation of the rivers Wabash and the Miami of Lake Erie;" "An act making an appropriation towards the extinguishment of the Quaupaw title to lands in the Territory of Arkansas; and "An act to authorize the Territory of Florida to open a canal to unite the river St. John's with the bay of St. Augustine;" in which amendment and bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

On motion by Mr. GAILLARD, it was ordered that, in considering the subjects on the orders of the day, bills which originated in the Senate shall first be disposed of.

18th CON. 1st SESS.—24

INDIAN FUR TRADE.

On motion, by Mr. BENTON, the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to enable the President to carry into effect the treaty made at Ghent, the 24th of December, 1814, excluding foreigners from trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes within the United States, and to preserve the fur trade within the limits of the said United States to American citizens, (Mr. KING, of Alabama, in the Chair.)

Mr. BENTON moved to add the following section, viz:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the sum of thirteen thousand dollars be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the President to send a military expedition against the hostile Indians of the Upper Missouri, and to preserve peace with the United States.

Mr. LOWRIE moved to amend the proposed amendment, by striking out all after the word "President," and inserting "if in his opinion it should be deemed necessary, to send a military force to sustain and protect the commissioners who may be sent to hold treaties with the Indian tribes on the Upper Missouri river."

The question was taken and determined in the negative—yeas 20, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Brown, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Findlay, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lowrie, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Thomas.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Bell, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, King of New York, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, McIlvaine, Macon, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, and Ware.

On motion, by Mr. LOWRIE, the bill was ordered to lie on the table.

THE TARIFF.

The bill from the House of Representatives "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," was read the third time, as amended in the Senate. The question, "Shall this bill pass?" was then put.

Mr. HAYNE opposed the passage of the bill in a speech of considerable length.

Mr. SMITH, of Maryland, addressed the Chair as follows:

Mr. President, I am aware of the impatience of the Senate; but it appears particularly incumbent on me to make a few observations on the bill now on its final passage, as a justification for the vote I shall give in opposition to the memorial from Baltimore, unfurled triumphantly by the chairman, as if to deter me from the course that my duty to the interest of Maryland, and to the Union, had compelled me, as an honest representative of the people, to pursue. The signers of that memorial are highly respectable—some of them my relations—most of them my friends. They have counted on my known disposition to protect the manufactures of the nation, and will wish to know my reasons for the vote I am about to give. There must, Mr. President, be some point at which to stop. I have thought that, when I was willing to give twenty-seven dollars and a half to the manufacturer, in every hundred dollars worth of articles I buy for my family, more than I could get the same quality of goods from others, that I was contributing sufficiently, and that the manufacturer ought to be satisfied. The duty of twenty-seven and a half per cent. is the lowest now paid on articles which we are capable of manufacturing; that is, 25 per cent. and 10 per cent. thereon, to create the ad valorem. On many articles, the present rate of duties give 30, 40, 50, and, on low-priced cottons, an average of 60 per cent. The memorialists pray for further protection to the manufacturers of the country, and the memorial justifies the bill, as originally reported to the House, which, if it had passed, would have levied a tax of at least five millions of dollars per annum on the people. Now, sir, I feel almost confident that, if that had been known to be the effect of the memorial, it would have had few subscribers. The signers thought (I must presume) that they only asked for a moderate protection to the manufacturers; they could not have believed that a bill would be framed so as to lay on the common laborer, who works for one hundred dollars per annum, a tax of eight or ten dollars a year, and, on their own families, an annual tax of 20 per cent. on their consumption. The original bill was greatly amended in the House. When it came to the Senate, the increased tax to be levied on the people, amounted to above four millions of dollars, (I think four million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.) I do not speak at random, Mr. President. No, sir; my calculation is bottomed on a report from Mr. Nourse, Register of the Treasury, which was submitted to the Senate by the chairman, and has been printed. It shows, as far as the Register could, the amount collected, in the year 1823, on each article, and the amount payable on the same articles, by the bill, as received from the House. There can be no mistake, unless I shall have made it in the subtracting the one from the other. Had this document been before the House, it might possibly have had an effect; I say possibly—I cannot say probably—for the cabalistic word "Tariff" was superior to all discretion or reason.

SENATE.

The Tariff Bill.

MAY, 1824.

I have said that the tax levied by the bill (as it came from the other House) would have amounted to a sum exceeding four millions of dollars per annum on the people. I call it a tax, because the new duties are imposed on articles indispensable to the people, many of which cannot be made in this country for many years, and some of them never; and wholly unnecessary to the protection asked for by the manufacturer. If the articles which required protection had been selected, and a rational protection had been granted, the bill would probably have been acceptable to many of its opposers—certainly to me. As the bill now stands, it affords very little protection, and imposes a heavy tax on the people, at a time when they are distressed, and when we do not want revenue; our means being fully equal to our wants, and at a time when Great Britain is relieving her people from a part of their burdens. It is true, that the people will not be sensible of the tax they are paying; they do not know that the duties now paid impose a tax of 50 per cent. on all their consumption. Yet it is a fact, which I showed, and, I thought, proved, during the discussion of the bill. Let us suppose, Mr. President, that a direct tax and internal duties were proposed, to the amount of three or four millions annually, as a bounty to the manufacturers, to enable them to compete with the British—how many advocates would it have? And yet it would be a fairer mode—those taxes would fall on the whole; whereas the tax by this bill will be most severely felt by the South and Southwest.

I have said, Mr. President, that many of the proposed duties are imposed on articles that cannot be made in this country, and on others that there is little or no probability will be manufactured in the country for many, very many, years. In the mean time, the people are taxed. I will now proceed to show the excess of duty proposed by the bill, as it came from the House, on the most important items, and gentlemen will judge how far I have been correct.

On woollen cloths and cassimeres, the additional duties will amount to $703,460 a year. Now, sir, although we may, in time, be able to manufacture those goods; yet, it will be many years before we can make much more than to meet the gradual increase of the population of the country. But what protection is given to the woollen manufacturer? None. If I am rightly informed, you place him in a worse situation than he was, by levying enormous duties on the raw material of wool, and that at a time when England is taking off her duty of ten cents per pound on imported wool. Thus, by the double operation of Great Britain aiding their manufacturer by lessening the duty on wool, and our laying an exorbitant duty on its importation, our manufacturer is incapacitated from entering into a competition, on equal terms, with the British; and this is the silly course we are pursuing.

On worsted stuffs, the duty proposed would create an additional tax on the people of $372,376 per annum. Now, where in the United States is there a piece of worsted stuff made? No where; nor any contemplated. Then, why levy the duty? It will benefit no manufacturer. It is a tax that cannot be avoided; the females must have them for themselves and their children. On whom does it fall? On the poor and middling classes principally; a few, such as bombazetts, are worn by the rich for mourning. It is such folly as this that disgusts me with the bill.

On blankets and rugs, the excess of duty proposed amounts to $119,711. When can we make sufficient for our consumption? The poor find it difficult to provide for their wants already; why increase it on them? On raw wool, the duty proposed amounts to $93,763, just double what it now pays.

On linens, the increased duty amounts to $418,-

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

318 per annum. Now, sir, I ask the Chairman, where is there a manufacture of Irish linens? where a supply of osnaburgs, and other coarse linens, adequate to our wants? I know of none. This is, then, evidently a tax without benefit to any person. It will be simply an addition to the revenue, which the President said, in his message, was not wanted.

On silks, the proposed duty would exceed that now paid in the sum of $778,279. What manufacture does this enormous tax protect? Have we any such manufacture? Can we have? Will we ever have? Then why lay it? On whom does it fall? On the ladies! On the females of the country. I call on the Chairman; I call on the other bachelors of the Senate; where is their gallantry? Does it sleep? Will they oppress their fair countrywomen with this heavy imposition on their dress? I call as Glendower did, but will they come? No, sir; their countenances show obduracy. You, sir, who now fill the chair, by your smiles, show how much you think it your duty to protect the fair. Had those recreants lived in the time of chivalry, they would never have broken a lance in honor of beauty and bright eyes. But I shall be told that silks are a luxury, and so they were at one time of the Romans, when they were sold pound for pound against gold. Silk is now worn by all classes. All our farmers' wives and daughters, who are in tolerable circumstances, have their silk bonnets and gowns. Look at the streets, in your great cities, and you will see that silk is worn by all classes. I admit that it is a fair object of revenue, but the President has told you, and we all know, that revenue is not wanted. It is, therefore, a heavy tax, without object.

On woollen and cotton stockings, the additional duty is $44,607. I believe they may be made, in process of time; at present, we have some manufactures of them, but to no great extent.

On hempen goods, such as osnaburgs, ticklenburgs, burlaps, we make none. The excess of duty is $28,004. On Russia and Holland duck, the bill proposed to double the duty. The difference amounts, between the old and new, to $154,271, a direct unavoidable tax on the shipping interest, already in a desponding state. I will not add to what I have already said on that subject. When this subject was under consideration, in 1816, we were told by Kentucky, grant us a duty of $1 50 per hundred weight, and we will soon supply the market. It was granted. Did they cultivate hemp? No, sir; they raised less, much less, than they had done previous to that period; and now they ask a duty of two cents per pound—thus raising the duty from $30 per ton, to $44 80 per ton—and, in this way, to levy a tax on the shipping interest, already almost prostrate, of $47,867 per annum. I say a tax, for there would not be a ton of hemp less imported.

On bar iron, the additional duty will amount, per annum, to the sum of $88,782. This, also, falls heavily on the shipping interest, as has been shown, by Mr. LLOYD of Massachusetts, and others. It will not lessen the importation one ton. It may make the farmers, ship-builders, nailmakers, and others, pay more for iron. I doubt whether the blacksmith will be able to obtain a cent more for horse shoes, or he who furnishes the ships with piece work, such as hooks and thimbles, &c., to get more than he now does. It will, therefore, only be a tax on their labor. I will venture to believe, that the iron master will not get more by this three dollars per ton, than he will have added to his expenses and to those of the people he employs, by the additional duties on the articles in this bill, which they must consume. I will add, that I have been told by a well informed gentleman, that any duty less than twenty-five dollars per ton, will not prevent the importation of foreign iron. Bar iron is a raw material—every imposition thereon is injurious to our nailmakers, who could compete with any nation, in the trade to South America, if they could draw back, on exportation, the duty paid on importation; but to this the Chairman will not assent.

On imported spirits the increased duty proposed would amount to $306,061 per annum. The attempt on this object shows the temper of men. At present, the duty on imported spirits amounts to double the price of whiskey in the market, and yet more is asked, and so it will be. Give what you will, Mr. President, and more will be required. What is the result of the present high duty on spirits? Why, we are told, from undoubted authority, that Jamacia rum is sold in Maine, near Brunswick, at less than the duty now imposed by law.

You propose to raise the duty on the seven and a half per cent. goods, to twelve and a half per cent. None of them are made in the United States. Now, sir, when a man can carry in his breeches pocket the value of three or four hundred dollars, the probability is, that little duty will be paid. In 1816, the duty on those fine goods was lowered to seven and a half per cent. ad valorem. At first, it was not thought worth the risk of smuggling, and the goods were tolerably fairly imported. In 1817, the amount imported was $1,529,284. In 1818, $2,387,697. In 1819, $1,679,284; but, in 1820, they began to understand the business better, and the amount fell down to $509,237. In 1821, $840,613; and in 1822, to the sum of $918,557. What will be produced by the twelve and a half per cent. is problematical. I fear that smuggling will cease to be considered an immoral act; and, whenever that takes place your revenue will be greatly injured.

I will read the names of the other articles without troubling the Senate with showing the increased duty on each. They will see that most of them have no bearing on the manufactures of the country; they are simply taxes on the people, without object, some few articles, however, excepted, to wit: glass and Leghorn hats and bonnets, carpets and carpeting, paper, books, and some articles of iron and copper.

Mr. President, the total amount of new and additional duties proposed by the bill, as it came from the House, which could be distinguished by the Register, amounts to the sum of $3,779,625.

SENATE.

Proceedings.

MAY, 1824.

I have estimated the difference on such articles as he could distinguish, but which were numerous; and have estimated the whole amount at four millions. My real opinion is, that it amounts to much more. But, Mr. President, the Senate have made many valuable amendments to the bill; so that, I believe, without having made any exact calculation on it as it now stands, that the new duties will be an increase on the old, of about $3,500,000, say $2,800,000 of a tax on the people.

Mr. President, I ask, what are the advantages to be derived from the bill to justify us to the people for levying on them so heavy a tax? Is it on cottons? The bill, it is true, better secures to them the fabric, under a cost of twenty-five cents the square yard. But, until they commence the making of a variety of cotton fabrics, which they do not make, and are not prepared to make, it will be simply a tax on almost all, except the plain white cottons, that they do now make, and the consumption of which they now enjoy, in a great proportion.

Is it on woollens? I am unacquainted with the subject; but I am informed, that the bill gives little protection to them, as the duty on the raw material is equal, or nearly equal, to the increased duty on the cloth.

Is it on linens or silks? Certainly not. We manufacture none, and will not, in any reasonable time.

Is it on worsted stuffs? I have shown that we have no manufactory of the kind, nor is there any probability that we shall have, for thirty years.

Is it on osnaburgs and such like goods? No; we manufacture none, nor is there a probability that we shall. It is true, that we could, but as true that we will not.

Is it on bar iron? The addition of three dollars per ton is too unimportant; it will operate nothing as a protection; and that the Chairman, who has something to do with iron or iron ore, knows well, and feels it. It is simply a tub to Pennsylvania.

Is it on glass, books, papers, and Leghorn hats and bonnets? Yes, sir, those articles are protected. There are some minor articles, also, that will be benefited; but, Mr. President, are those benefited of such consequence as to induce the Senate to vote a perpetual tax of $3,500,000 per annum on the people? I think not. I say perpetual. Those duties for the protection of manufactures, are not like duties for revenue. The first cannot be repealed without injury to those who have engaged in them. Those for revenue, may, at pleasure.

I have, Mr. President, taken up the precious time of the Senate, under the hope that I should be able to justify my vote to all my immediate constituents, and to the nation. I have done, and pray the Senate to accept my thanks for the attention with which they have honored me.

The question on the passage of the bill was decided in the affirmative by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chan-dlar, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, H. Johnson of Louisiana, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—21.

So the bill passed as amended, and was sent to the other House for concurrence in the amendments.

FRIDAY, May 14.

On motion by Mr. BARBOUR, it was ordered that, in considering bills which originated in the Senate, those of a private nature shall be first disposed of, and the same rule shall be observed in relation to bills from the House of Representatives.

The seven bills yesterday brought up from the House of Representatives for concurrence, were severally read twice by unanimous consent.

On motion, the bill, entitled "An act to regulate the fees of the registers of wills in the several counties within the District of Columbia," were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill, entitled "An act granting a right of pre-emption to certain actual settlers in that part of the former province of West Florida, included in the district of Jackson Courthouse, in the State of Mississippi; and in the district of St. Helena Courthouse, in the State of Louisiana," and the bill, entitled "An act granting certain lots of ground to the Corporation of the city of Mobile, and to certain individuals of said city," were severally referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for deepening the channel leading into the harbor of Presque Isle, and for repairing Plymouth Beach," was referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to consider and report thereon.

The bill, entitled "An act making an appropriation towards the extinguishment of the Quau-paw title to land in the Territory of Arkansas," was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, to consider and report thereon.

The bill, entitled "An act to authorize the State of Indiana to open a canal through the public lands, to connect the navigation of the rivers Wabash and the Miami of Lake Erie;" and the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the Territory of Florida to open a canal through the public land to unite the river St. John's with the bay of St. Augustine;" were severally referred to the select Committee on Roads and Canals.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the issuing certain debentures to Bernard Thooft;" and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the Senate; and ordered to a third reading.

MAY, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John Holliday;" and it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Jonas Duncan;" and it was laid on the table.

The bill from the other House, "for the relief of Mary James," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. The husband of this petitioner was a soldier draughted during the late war, in the State of Virginia. Soon after his discharge, he died of a disease contracted during his service; and his widow prays that she may be allowed a pension from the Government. Considerable discussion took place upon the bill; in which Messrs. BARBOUR and LANMAN advocated its passage, and Messrs. NOBLE and CHANDLER opposed it. Mr. NOBLE moved that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed. This motion was carried—yeas 18, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Edwards, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Mississippi, J. S. Johnston of Louisiana, King of Alabama, Lowrie, Macon, Noble, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, and Smith.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, King of New York, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Mills, Thomas, and Van Dyke.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Malachi Burns;" and it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Arthur N. Henley;" and it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Robert S. Forman;" and it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Joshua Bennett;" and it was laid on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed bills of the following titles, viz: "An act enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri, and Territory of Arkansas, to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims;" "An act to authorize the issuing of letters patent to Nathaniel Sylvester;" "An act to revive and extend the term of certain pensions which have expired by limitation;" and "An act providing for the disposition of three several tracts of land in Tuscarawas county, in the State of Ohio, and for other purposes;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The four bills last mentioned were severally read twice, by unanimous consent; and the two first mentioned were severally referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The third mentioned of said bills were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The fourth and last mentioned of said bills was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Judah Alden;" and it was laid on the table.

The bill reported by the Committee on Finance, "for the relief of John H. Howland, of New York," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. GAILLARD was called to the Chair. This bill provides for the allowance of the drawback on certain goods exported from the city of New York; which drawback could not otherwise be allowed, in consequence of some little informality in the entry of the same. Mr. SMITH explained the facts in the case, and the bill was then reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill "to provide for the extinguishment of Indian titles to lands within the State of Missouri," together with a written report on the subject. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

The bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, "to permit Anna Dubord to land certain slaves in the State of Louisiana," was taken up in Committee of the Whole. The lady for whose relief the bill was drawn, had left the country; and, on her return, requests permission to land her household servants, which she took from the country with her. Messrs. HOLMES, of Maine, J. S. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, and VAN BUREN, explained the circumstances. Mr. CHANDLER opposed, and Mr. MILLS advocated, the passage of the bill. It was then reported to the Senate, without amendment; and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill reported by the Committee on Finance, "for the relief of Alexander Scott, late Collector of the port of Pensacola," was taken up, in Committee of the Whole.

This bill provides an increased compensation to Mr. Scott, for certain services performed by him. Some remarks upon this bill were made by Messrs. SMITH, RUGGLES, and EATON. The bill was then ordered to lie on the table.

The bill introduced on leave, and reported by the Committee on Public Lands, "for the relief of John Donnelson, Stephen Heard, and others," was taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole. This bill confirms the grant of a tract of land to each of the persons for whose relief it is drawn, as a compensation for their services as Commissioners, under an act of the State of Georgia, in 1784, "to ascertain the precise quality and situation of that portion of the Western territory lying on the big bend of the Tennessee river." This grant had been made to the Commissioners, by the State of Georgia, previous to the cession of the territory, where the land was situated, to the United States. The lands reserved for these Commissioners, not having been located, and the titles not having been perfected, this bill confirms the grants of those individuals. Some discussion on the merits of this claim took place between Messrs. EATON, CHANDLER, KING of Alabama, LOWRIE, H. JOHNSON of Louisiana, and WARE. The bill was then reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

The following bills from the House of Representatives, relating to private claims, were severally taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. They were explained by the chairman of the committees to which they had been referred in the Senate; and some of them were cursorily discussed. They were reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading:

The bills for the relief of George B. R. Gove; releasing the owners of the ship General Jackson from the payment of certain duties; for the relief of David Giffin and Daniel Hoag; for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Mims, deceased; for the relief of Joseph Wheaton; for the relief of William T. Nimmo; for the relief of Alvin Bronson; for the relief of David Beard; for the relief of William Blagrove; for the relief of John Thomas and Company; for the relief of William N. Earle; for the relief of Charles Humphrey; for the relief of Joseph Marechal; to authorize the repayment to Bazaleel Wells, of a certain sum of money erroneously paid into the Treasury; for the relief of Elliott Rucker; for the relief of Thomas Williams; for the relief of Henry Lightner; for the relief of David Cooper; for the relief of Solomon Sibley; for the relief of Frederick Perley; for the relief of the representatives of Elijah Brush; for the relief of Stephen Brace; for the relief of Lemuel Arms; for the relief of Mareen Duval; for the relief of Nathaniel Jones; for the relief of George Fisher; to compensate William Cocke for certain services; for the relief of John Wilmot; and for the relief of J. T. Johnson.

The amendment made by the House of Representatives to the bill from the Senate, "to provide for the extinguishment of the debt due from the purchasers of the public lands," was taken up for consideration. Some remarks were made upon the propriety of this amendment by Messrs. KELLY, LOWRIE, KING of Alabama, BROWN, THOMAS, and RUGGLES. The amendment was then concurred in.

The bill "authorizing the examination and survey of the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina, and of the coast of Florida," was read the third time, passed, and sent to the other House for concurrence.

—
SATURDAY, May 15.

Mr. BARBOUR presented the petition of W. K. Armistead, praying that a law may pass authorizing an equitable settlement of his accounts; which was read, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion, by Mr. VAN BUREN, the Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the consideration of the bill, entitled "An act enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas, to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims;" and was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to regulate the fees of the registers of wills in the several counties within the District of Columbia," reported it without amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the issuing a register to the brig William, of New York;" and, on motion, it was postponed to Monday next.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Maturin Guichot;" and, no amendment having been made, it was reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading.

The bill to extinguish the Indian claims to lands within the State of Missouri, was read the second time.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Thomas L. Ogden and others;" and it was laid on the table.

Mr. EATON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was recommitted the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the act 'to incorporate the inhabitants of the City of Washington,' passed the 15th of May, 1820," reported it with an amendment, which was read; and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Robert Strain;" and it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Landie Richardson;" and it was laid on the table.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act making an appropriation towards the extinguishment of the Quaupaw title to lands in the Territory of Arkansas," reported it without amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the issuing of a register for the schooner Five Sisters;" and it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Peter Yandes;" and it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Samuel Cleveland, junior;" and it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the assignees and legal representatives of John H. Piatt;" and it was laid on the table.

May, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John K. Carter;" and it was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. BARTON, the Committee on Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Isaac Clark, his case having been embraced in a general act which has been passed by Congress.

The same committee was, also, discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Charles Morgan, of Louisiana.

Mr. LOWRIE gave notice that, on Monday next, he should ask leave to introduce a joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of State to furnish one copy of Tanner's American Atlas to each of our Ministers at foreign Courts.

Mr. BENTON submitted a resolution, requesting the President of the United States to cause to be laid before the Senate, at the next session, a report from the Secretary of the Navy, showing the reasons why American hemp may not be used in the manufacture of canvass and cordage for the American Navy. The resolution was read, and laid over for consideration.

The following bills from the House of Representatives, having relation to private claims, were severally taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole, Mr. GAILLARD in the Chair. The merits of the respective claims were explained by members of the committees to which they had been referred; and some of them were discussed by other members. They were severally reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading:

The bills for the relief of Archibald Clark; for the relief of Daniel Carroll of Duddington, and others; for the relief of Robert S. Forman; supplementary to an act entitled An act to authorize the legal representatives of John B. Mebane to collect certain arrears of taxes; for the relief of Jacob Slough; for the relief of Joseph Firman and others; for the relief of Isaac Collier and others; for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Bradford; for the relief of the legal representatives of John Lauderman; for the relief of William Hall, an invalid soldier of the Revolutionary Army; for the relief of Alexander Scott, late collector of Pensacola; for the relief of Joshua Bennett; for the relief of Benjamin King; for the relief of Jonas Duncan; for the relief of James, Jehu, and Nathaniel Brooks, and the legal representatives of Edward Styles; for the relief of Robert Brotherton; for the relief of John S. Moffett; for the relief of certain persons who imported goods into Castine, during the late war; for the relief of Benjamin Desobry; for the relief of J. Ottremare; for the relief of Dean Weymouth; for the relief of Joseph Smith, of Alexandria; for the relief of Robert Blean; for the relief of the executors of John B. Fanning, late a purser in the Navy of the United States; for the relief of J. M. C. Montgomery; for the relief of Hugh McCulloch; for the relief of Mary H. Hawkins; for the relief of Morris Goldsmith and Anthony Roderick; for the relief of the legal representatives of John Fry and Samuel Spalding; for the relief of John Topp.

The bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of John Donnelson, Stephen Heard, and others;" the bill "for the relief of John H. Howland, of New York;" the bill "to permit Anna Dubord to bring certain slaves into the State of Louisiana;" and the resolution "authorizing the purchase of a certain number of copies of the Journal of Congress, from 1774 to 1788;" were severally read the third time, passed, and sent to the other House for concurrence.

The following bills, from the House of Representatives, were severally read the third time and passed; the bills for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Mims, deceased; for the relief of William P. Nimmo; for the relief of Alvin Bronson; for the relief of David Giffin and Samuel Hoag; for the relief of George B. R. Gove; for the relief of Joseph Wheaton; for the relief of William Blagrove; for the relief of John Thomas and Company; for the relief of William N. Earle; releasing the owners of the ship General Jackson from the payment of certain duties; for the relief of Charles Humphrey; for the relief of the representatives of Elijah Brush; for the relief of Joseph Marechal; providing for the repaying to Bazaleel Wells, a certain sum of money by him erroneously paid into the Treasury; for the relief of Stephen Brace; for the relief of Lemuel Arms; for the relief of Mareen Duval; for the relief of Elliott Rucker; for the relief of Thomas Williams; for the relief of Nathaniel Jones; for the relief of John Wilmot; for the relief of Henry Lightner; for the relief of David Cooper; for the relief of David Beard; for the relief of Solomon Sibley; for the relief of Frederick Perley; to compensate William Cocke for certain military services, rendered during the late war; for the relief of John T. Johnson; and an act authorizing the issuing of certain debentures to Bernard Thooft.

The amendments made in the House of Representatives to the bill from the Senate "for the relief of Dean Weymouth," were taken up for consideration. The first amendment was concurred in, and the second was disagreed to.

The Senate resolved to adhere to that part of their amendment to the bill "concerning invalid pensioners," which was disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

MONDAY, May 17.

On motion of Mr. BARTON, the Committee on Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, "directing an inquiry whether any further legislation be necessary to prevent frauds in surveying the public lands, and in making certificates thereof." Mr. B. stated that the committee were of opinion that the present laws are amply sufficient to attain the objects of the resolution; and therefore had directed this motion to be submitted.

Mr. BENTON gave notice that he should tomorrow ask leave to introduce a bill "to complete the survey of the Southern and Western boundaries of the State of Missouri."

In pursuance of notice given on Saturday last, Mr. LOWRIE asked leave to introduce a joint resolution, to authorize the Secretary of State to furnish one copy of Tanner's American Atlas to each of our Ministers and Chargés des Affaires, at foreign Courts. Leave was accordingly granted—the resolution was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to revive and extend the term of certain pensions, which have expired by limitation," reported it without amendment.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act granting certain lots of ground to the Corporation of the city of Mobile, and to certain individuals of said city," reported it without amendment.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to allow further time to complete the issuing and locating of military land warrants," reported it without amendment.

Mr. BROWN, from the select Committee on Roads and Canals, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to improve the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers," reported it without amendment.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, submitted the following motion for consideration :

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause a report, from the Secretary of the Treasury, to be laid before the Senate at the commencement of the next session of Congress, showing the amount of duties which shall have accrued on importations into the United States for the three-quarters of a year, ending June 30, 1824; also, the amount of duties which would have accrued on the same importations at such higher rates of duty as may be imposed by any act of the present session of Congress.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act providing for the disposition of three several tracts of land in Tuscarawas county, in the State of Ohio, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment.

Mr. NOBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Samuel Rist," reported it without amendment.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," with amendments to the first, third, fourteenth, sixteenth, and forty-eighth thereof; in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of Miguel Eslava;" and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Edward Evans;" and, no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading.

The following bills, from the House of Representatives, respecting private claims, had their third reading, and were passed:

The bill for the relief of Archibald Clark; for the relief of Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, and others; for the relief of Robert S. Forman, supplementary to an act, entitled an act to authorize the legal representatives of John B. Mebane, to collect certain arrears of taxes; for the relief of Jacob Slough; for the relief of Joseph Firman, and others; for the relief of Isaac Collier and others; for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Bradford; for the relief of the legal representatives of John Lauderman; for the relief of William Hall, an invalid soldier of the Revolutionary Army; for the relief of Alexander Scott, late collector at Pensacola; for the relief of Joshua Bennett; for the relief of Benjamin King; for the relief of Jonas Duncan; for the relief of Robert Brotherton; for the relief of John S. Moffit; for the relief of certain persons who imported goods into Castine, during the late war; for the relief of Benjamin Desobry; for the relief of J. Otremaire; for the relief of Dean Weymouth; for the relief of Joseph Smith, of Alexandria; for the relief of Robert Blean; for the relief of the executors of John B. Fanning, late a purser in the Navy of the United States; for the relief of J. M. C. Montgomery; for the relief of Maturin Guichot; for the relief of Hugh McCulloch; for the relief of Mary H. Hawkins; for the relief of Morris Goldsmith and Anthony Roderick; for the relief of the legal representatives of John Fry and Samuel Spalding; for the relief of John Topp; for the relief of James, Jehu, and Nathaniel Brooks.

The bill "for the relief of Thomas L. Ogden, and others," was taken up in Committee of the Whole. This is a claim for wood cut down, and used by the United States troops at Sackett's Harbor, during the late war. After some discussion, the bill was reported to the Senate, and refused a third reading.

The following bills from the other House were taken up in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading; the bills for the relief of John K. Carter; for the relief of Landie Richardson; and for the relief of Robert Strain.

INDIAN FUR TRADE.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the Senate then proceeded to consider the bill "to enable the President to carry into effect the Treaty made at Ghent the 24th December, 1814, excluding foreigners from trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes within the United States, and to preserve the fur trade, within the limits of the said United States, to American citizens." The question was upon adopting an amendment, proposed by Mr. BENTON, as a new section to the bill, providing an appro, priation of $13,000 to enable the President to send a military expedition among the hostile Indians on the Upper Missouri, and to preserve the peace in that quarter. Messrs. BENTON, JOHNSON, of Kentucky, HOLMES, of Maine, and J. S. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, made some remarks upon this subject.

MAY, 1824.

American Hemp—The Tariff Bill.

SENATE.

Mr. NOBLE moved to amend the amendment by striking out all but the enacting clause, and inserting a provision appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of enabling the President to send a military escort, when he shall think proper, for the protection of commissioners to be sent to the Upper Missouri, to treat with the Indians in that quarter.

Mr. BENTON accepted this amendment, and agreed to withdraw that which he had proposed. Messrs. MILLS and HOLMES, of Maine, contended that the President had already the power which this amendment proposes to give him. Messrs. BROWN, LOWRIE, BARBOUR, EDWARDS, KING, of New York, H. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, and BENTON, entered into the discussion of the merits of the proposed amendment. The question was then put upon the adoption of the amendment, and carried in the affirmative. The bill, as amended, was then reported to the Senate; the amendments made in Committee of the Whole were agreed to. The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time.

AMERICAN HEMP.

The following resolution, submitted on Saturday last, by Mr. BENTON, was again read for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to direct the Secretary of the Navy to lay a report before the Senate, at the commencement of the next session of Congress, showing the reason, if any, why canvass, cordage, and cables, made of hemp, the growth of the United States, may not be used in the equipment of national vessels.

Mr. BENTON said his object in presenting the resolution was, to find out the reason which excludes American hemp from American ships. The objection being known, could be met and conquered, if it was not insuperable. A defect in the fibre might be incurable; but, if the objection goes only to the preparation, the manufacture, or the want of an adequate supply, there is nothing invincible in it.

Mr. B. wished the Navy to be national, not only in the hearts which fill it, but in the material of which it is built. He objected to the quantity of foreign material now used; iron from Sweden, hemp from Russia, copper from England, lead from the Mediterranean. Wood, alone, was the product of the United States. He referred to an official paper to show the cost of these materials in a ship of the line:

Iron	-	$23,000—The North Carolina	74
Hemp	-	$61,000—The Columbus	74
Copper	-	$57,000—The Columbus	74
Wood	-	$70,000—The Columbus	74
Lead	-	$2,500—The North Carolina	74

He pointed out the enormous disproportion of cost between the foreign and the domestic material; and calculated the loss to American citizens, and the gain to the serfs and boors of Europe, in building the nine ships of the line and the twelve frigates, lately authorized by an act of Congress for the gradual increase of the Navy. But the loss, great as it is, he said, did not stop here. When these nine seventy-fours and twelve frigates are finished, another set will be commenced, and the work will go on, until the Republic, like the Mother Empire, shall boast her "thousand ships of war." Mr. B. had no objection. He was a friend to the Navy. He wished to see it grow with the growing power of the country; but he wished it also to be national in material, as well as in crews and commanders; and he claimed for the American people the benefit of the expenditure which creates it.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, said he did not rise to oppose the resolution, as he was perfectly willing to vote for any information on the subject; but he wished to suggest an amendment. He remarked upon the national character which the Navy already possessed—he repelled the idea, which had frequently been expressed that the Navy was peculiarly an Eastern or sectional interest. He adverted to an act which had been recently brought forward, and which had passed the Senate, for the building an additional number of sloops of war; a class of vessels which was not absolutely necessary, in the deep waters of the North, but which was peculiarly adapted for the protection of the mouth of the great rivers of the West, and the products of the Western States, which were constantly descending those rivers.

Mr. L. proposed to amend the resolution, so as to extend the inquiry to the relative advantages of using, for the Navy, the domestic or the foreign material mentioned in the resolution.

Mr. BENTON assented to the remarks made by the Senator from Massachusetts, and agreed to the proposed modification of his resolution.

Mr. SMITH made a few remarks, in order to show that foreign materials were not now used in the construction of our public vessels to the extent apprehended by the honorable member from Missouri.

The question on agreeing to the resolution was then put, and carried in the affirmative.

THE TARIFF.

The amendments which were made in Senate, and disagreed to in the House of Representatives, to the bill "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," was taken up for consideration.

The House propose to amend the first amendment of the Senate, which provides for a duty of fifteen per centum on Russia, Holland, and Raven's duck, by striking out the words "Russia, Holland, and Raven's," and inserting, in lieu thereof, the word "sail," so as to read "on sail duck." On motion of Mr. DICKERSON, the Senate agreed to this amendment.

The House refuse to concur in the following proviso, inserted by the Senate: "Provided, That,

'on all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be a component part, the actual value of which, at the place whence imported, shall not exceed thirty-three and a third cents per square yard, shall be charged with a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem." Mr. BARBOUR moved that the Senate do insist upon its amendment, in this case. Messrs. DICKERSON and EATON, opposed this motion. On this question the votes were as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, H. Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Findlay, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Van Buren—23.

The Senate being thus divided on the question, the Vice President resumed the Chair, and gave his casting vote in favor of insisting upon the proviso. And so the Senate determined to insist upon retaining the proviso.

The House refuse to concur in the amendment, by which the Senate struck out the following clause: "On cotton bagging, four and a half cents per square yard." Mr. DICKERSON moved that the Senate do recede from this amendment. The motion was opposed by Messrs. HAYNE, J. S. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, and H. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, and supported by Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky.

Mr. J. S. JOHNSTON said, he did not rise to discuss a bill which had occupied so much time. His object was to state the question now pending fairly to the House. It was a question between the Western States and the cotton-planting States. The other States were indifferent and neutral; and, therefore, properly umpires between them. He submitted his remarks to the candor of gentlemen interested, and hoped they would receive and estimate them in the spirit of justice and conciliation.

He said it must be confessed, that, whatever might be the effect of this bill, it did not operate beneficially upon the cotton States; that, in a bill embracing nearly all the interests of the country, not one item was introduced which could in the least profit them; they are beyond the reach of protection. It must be equally evident that the bill is predicated on a general rise of about ten per cent. on all articles; that the weight of this increased duty falls equally upon the Southern States: they must bear the full proportion of this tax upon every article of consumption. He said the duty on duck and coarse linens, articles of the same description, had been excepted from the bill; this had been from respect to peculiar interests. He approved of the exception. They fell upon a peculiar class, and might impair the ship building and navigation. Cotton bagging, although coming within the scope of the exception, was not included: he did not ask that. He was willing to increase the duty at the rate of all other articles, to twenty-five per cent; and he did this with a view to meet the gentlemen in the spirit of conciliation and compromise. The present duty is equal to $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per running yard, the proposed duty is equal to $4\frac{1}{2}$ cents per square yard, equal to $5\frac{1}{4}$ per running yard. The increase to 25 per cent. is equal to $3\frac{3}{4}$ cents. This conforms to the general principles of the bill, and he hoped would encourage the production of the article. It will not operate unequally and unjustly. He made some remarks upon the quantity consumed, cost, present amount of duty, and the sum which would be drawn from the cotton States by the increased duty.

He said that Kentucky had, no doubt, suffered much distress in consequence of the sudden revolution that took place after the war, &c., perhaps by the means which she had adopted, to avert the evil. But, he said, he believed that, at least with regard to his own State—she was now undergoing the same trial through which Kentucky had passed—she was now struggling with her debts, loss of crops, fall of prices, and depreciation of property—she had been obliged to borrow two millions to avoid the fatal contrivances of other States—she had avoided stop laws, replevins, paper money; but, to relieve the pecuniary distress, she had been obliged to pledge the public credit for two millions. There was nothing in her situation to warrant the imposition of any unequal tax upon her.

He concluded by repeating, that, receiving no advantage from the bill, bearing an equal portion of the whole burden, and as exceptions had been made in favor of articles of a similar description, and in favor of particular interests, he submitted to the candor of the West, and to the judgment of the House, whether a greater increase ought to be demanded than twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

The question on receding was then put, and decided in the negative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Edwards, Findlay, Johnson of Kentucky, Knight, Lanman, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Thomas—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, H. Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Mills, Parrott, Smith, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams—25.

So the Senate refuse to recede from their amendment, by which the duty on cotton bagging was stricken out. On motion of Mr. DICKERSON, the Senate then determined to insist upon that amendment.

The House refuse to concur in the amendment, by which the Senate struck out the fourth section, providing for the allowance of drawback on plain silk and nankeen cloths, imported in American vessels from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, although the said cloths, before the exportation thereof, shall have been colored, printed, stained,

May, 1824.

Punishment of Crimes.

SENATE.

died, stamped, or printed, in the United States. Mr. DICKERSON moved that the Senate do insist upon this amendment. This motion was opposed by Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts. It was decided in the negative. On motion of Mr. LOWRIE, the Senate receded from the amendment, by which the fourth section was stricken out. So the fourth section was retained, as amended in the House, by striking out the words "and nankeen cloths."

PUNISHMENT OF CRIMES.

On motion of Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill "to provide for the punishment of certain crimes committed in any navy yard, fort, arsenal, magazine, dockyard, lighthouse, tract of land, or other place, the exclusive jurisdiction of which belongs to the United States;" Mr. KING, of Alabama, was called to the Chair. Mr. LANMAN opposed the passage of the bill, and was replied to by Mr. LLOYD. Mr. EATON submitted a new bill, as an amendment to that under consideration. The amendment was adopted; and the bill, as amended, was reported to the Senate. Messrs. J. S. JOHNSTON, of Louisiana, TALBOT, HOLMES, of Maine, MILLS, CHANDLER, VAN BUREN, and LANMAN, discussed the propriety and expediency of passing the bill. An amendment proposed by Mr. MILLS, rendering the bill more specific as to the crimes to be included in its provisions, was adopted. The bill was then passed to be engrossed and read the third time; yeas 36, nays 8, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Brown, Clayton, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, H. Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lloyd of Massachusetts, McIlvaine Mills, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, Seymour, Smith, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, Ware, and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Findlay, Lanman, Lowrie, Macon.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to amend the several acts imposing duties on imports;" and have appointed managers at the same on their part.

TUESDAY, May 18.

On motion by Mr. SMITH, the Committee on Finance were discharged from the consideration of the memorial of the banking institutions of Charleston, South Carolina, and the petition of the legal representatives of James Roddy; and also from the resolutions of the 12th of December, 8th January, and 18th February last.

Mr. BARTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act enabling the claimants to lands within the State of Missouri, and Territory of Arkansas, to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," reported it with amendments, which were read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for deepening the channel leading into the harbor of Presque Isle, and for repairing Plymouth beach," reported it without amendment.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of David Melville, made a report, which was read and considered; and, in concurrence therewith, the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of James B. Fiske, and others, made a report, which was read and considered; and, in concurrence therewith, resolved, that the prayer of the petitioners ought not, to be granted.

Mr. BENTON asked and obtained leave to bring in a bill to complete the survey of the southern and western boundary of the State of Missouri, which was twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BROWN, from the select Committee on Roads and Canals, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the State of Indiana to open a canal through the public lands, to connect the navigation of the rivers Wabash and the Miami of Lake Erie;" and the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the Territory of Florida to open a canal through the public lands, to unite the river St. John's with the Bay of St. Augustine," reported them severally without amendment.

On motion by Mr. BROWN, the select Committee on Roads and Canals were discharged from the consideration of two resolutions of the 6th of January last.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion of yesterday, requesting, at the next session, a report, showing the effect of the new tariff of duties on the revenue; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the issuing letters patent to Nathaniel Sylvester," reported it without amendment.

The bill from the other House, "for the relief of the heirs of Miguel Eslava," and "to authorize the issuing of a register to the brig William, of New York," were severally taken up, as in Committee of the Whole. The bills were explained by the committees to whom they had been referred, and were reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to revive and continue in force the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and seventh sections of the act, entitled 'An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' passed the 3d of March, 1815," and a bill, entitled "An act to authorize the building of lighthouses, light vessels, and beacons, therein mentioned, and for other purposes;" in which bills they request the concurrence of the Senate. The said bills were severally read, and passed to a second reading.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the resolution which originated in the Senate, "fixing the time for an adjournment of Congress," with an amendment.

They have passed bills of the following titles, viz:

"An act altering the time of holding the sessions of the Supreme Court;"

"An act providing for a grant of land for the seat of government in the Territory of Florida, and for other purposes;" and,

"An act granting donations of land to certain actual settlers in the Territory of Florida;" in which amendment and bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said bills were severally read twice, by unanimous consent; and the first mentioned bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The two last mentioned bills were severally referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE TARIFF.

The resolution of the House of Representatives, insisting on their disagreement to the two amendments made in the Senate, to the bill "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," (the one of which was the insertion of a proviso, exempting low priced woollen goods from any higher duty than twenty-five per cent.; and the other, the striking out of the duty on cotton bagging,) and proposing the appointment of a Committee of Conference on the subject; was taken up for consideration.

Mr. DICKERSON moved that the Senate do now recede from the first of the contested amendments, respecting low priced woollens. This motion was advocated by the mover, and opposed by Messrs. BARBOUR, HAYNE, and KING of Alabama. Mr. LOWRIE submitted some remarks on the subject. Mr. DICKERSON withdrew his motion to recede, and the question was then taken upon concurring with the other House, in the appointment of a Committee of Conference, upon the points of difference between the two Houses. This was agreed to; and the President appointed Messrs. LLOYD of Massachusetts, SMITH, and WILLIAMS, a committee, on the part of the Senate, for that purpose. The Chair remarked that, in the selection of this committee, it had taken a member from each of the great sections of the country: one from the Northern, one from the Middle and Southern, and one from the Western, States.

On motion of Mr. TALBOT, it was ordered that the Committee of Conference have leave to sit during the sitting of the Senate.

JOHN H. PIATT.

The bill from the House of Representatives "for the relief of the assignees and legal representatives of John H. Piatt," was then taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole, Mr. BARBOUR in the Chair. The grounds of this claim were stated in the proceedings of the other House, upon the bill. A long discussion, touching the merits of the claim, took place. Mr. VAN BUREN stated the views which the Judiciary Committee entertained in relation to it. Messrs. JOHNSON of Kentucky, RUGGLES, BROWN, NOBLE, VAN DYKE, and TALBOT, advocated the allowance proposed in the bill; and Messrs. EATON, SMITH, and CHANDLER, opposed it. Messrs. J. S. JOHNSTON of Louisiana, and LANMAN, made some remarks upon the subject. Mr. LANMAN moved to reduce the sum, to be granted by the bill, from $63,000, to $42,000. This motion was opposed by Messrs. BROWN and VAN BUREN, and decided in the negative—yeas 12, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Chandler, Clayton, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Jackson, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Macon, and Parrott.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Brown, Edwards, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Mills, Noble, Palmer, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Buren, and Ware.

The bill was then reported to the Senate. Mr. BENTON opposed its passage to a third reading, and moved that it be ordered to lie on the table. This motion was carried, and so the bill was laid on the table.

The Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, May 19.

The resolution submitted on Monday last by Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, "requesting the President of the United States to cause a report from the Secretary of the Treasury to be laid before the Senate at the commencement of the next session of Congress, showing the amount of duties which shall have accrued on importations into the United States for the three quarters of a year ending June 30, 1824; also, the amount of duties which would have accrued on the same importations at such higher rates of duty as may be imposed by any act of the present session of Congress," was again read for consideration. Mr. L. very briefly explained his views in its introduction; and the resolution was agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act granting donations of land to certain actual settlers in the Territory of Florida," reported it without amendment.

The bill, entitled "An act to authorize the building of lighthouses, light-vessels, and beacons, therein mentioned, and for other purposes," and the bill, entitled "An act to revive and continue in force the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and seventh sections of the act, entitled 'An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, passed the 3d of March, 1815,'"

MAY, 1824.

Mississippi and Ohio Rivers.

SENATE.

were severally read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act for altering the time for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth circuit in the Maryland district;" in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said bill was twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for a grant of land for the seat of government in the Territory of Florida, and for other purposes," reported it with amendments, which were read.

Mr. EATON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act granting a right of pre-emption to certain actual settlers in that part of the former province of West Florida included in the district of Jackson Courthouse, in the State of Mississippi, and in the district of St. Helena Courthouse, in the State of Louisiana," reported it without amendment.

Mr. EATON presented the memorial of Alexander Moore, and others, of Alexandria county, in the District of Columbia, praying that the bill before Congress, relating to the Levy Court of said county, may be suspended until the next session. The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to authorize the issuing a register to the brig William, of New York," was read the third time.

Upon the passage of the last mentioned bill, there was some discussion, in which Messrs. SMITH, and LLOYD, of Massachusetts, advocated, and Messrs. D'WOLF and PARROTT opposed the bill. It was passed—yeas 32, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Branch, Clayton, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, Kelly, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, McLivaine, Macon, Mills, Seymour, Smith, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Taylor of Virginia, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, and Ware.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Benton, Brown, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, J. S. Johnston, Noble, Palmer, Parrott, and Williams.

The bills from the other House for the relief of John K. Carter; for the relief of Landie Richardson; for the relief of Robert Strain; for the relief of the heirs of Miguel Eslava; were severally read the third time, and passed.

The bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for the relief of Edward Evans," was read the third time, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the resolution, which originated in the Senate, "to authorize the purchase of a certain number of the copies of the Journals of Congress, from 1774 to 1788," with amendments, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the said amendments. The House propose to strike out "300," the number of copies contemplated to be purchased, and to insert "630." After considerable discussion, the resolution and amendment were ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. MACON, the resolution, as it came from the House of Representatives, fixing the 27th instant for the adjournment of the present session of Congress, was taken up for consideration, and concurred in by the Senate.

The bill "to provide for the punishment of certain crimes, when committed in any navy yard, fort, arsenal, magazine, dockyard, lighthouse, or other place, belonging to the United States," and the bill "to enable the President to carry into effect the treaty made at Ghent the 24th of December, 1814, excluding foreigners from trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes within the United States, and to preserve the fur trade within the limits of the said United States, to American citizens," were severally read the third time, passed, and sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence. The title of the last mentioned bill was altered to the following: "An act to enable the President to hold treaties with certain Indian tribes, and for other purposes."

MISSISSIPPI AND OHIO RIVERS.

On motion of Mr. TALBOT, the bill from the House of Representatives "to improve the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers," was taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole, Mr. BARBOUR in the Chair. Messrs. BROWN and JOHNSON, of Kentucky, explained the objects of this bill, and its importance to the Western States.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, spoke as follows:

Mr. President, it is much to be regretted that want of time will prevent that full discussion of the merits of the bill under consideration, which the importance of the measure demands. The House of Representatives have carefully investigated the subject; and, after the most dispassionate deliberation, with a full knowledge of the fact before them, have passed the bill appropriating seventy-five thousand dollars for removing certain obstructions from the channels of the Ohio and Mississippi. It is an experiment to render more secure the navigation of these great rivers of the West, destined by nature to bear to the Atlantic States, and to the rest of the world, the rich treasures which are every day disclosing themselves of that extensive country. This decision of the popular branch of the National Legislature, in favor of an object of such magnitude, whether considered in relation to the interest of the West, or of the whole nation, is entitled to high consideration from the Senate; and, in its wisdom and magnanimity, to give it their cordial sanction, we repose a degree of confidence bordering upon certainty. If, however, we should be found mistaken in this expectation, if such opposition should appear against an appropriation so reasonable, and in which one-half of the States in the Union have a direct, and all a deep interest, as to force us into a discussion of the merits of the bill, we have the fullest confidence that the investigation must result in an entire conviction of the utility of the measure.

SENATE.

Mississippi and Ohio Rivers.

MAY, 1824.

It should be borne in mind that the survey has been made by order of the Government. The commissioners, who had no other interest than what is common to every American, have made a faithful report, which is now before us; and it gives us a knowledge of the true cause, and of all the causes, which render our navigation dangerous. It is the opinion of the most scientific and experienced engineers, that these causes may be removed at an expense quite inconsiderable, compared with the advantages which would ensue. For the accomplishment of this object, we appeal to the magnanimity of the Government. It is but what justice demands. We only ask for a small proportion of that protection to our commerce which we have never refused to other parts of the United States.

It would require much time to detail the disastrous consequences which have resulted from those obstructions, both to the lives and property of our Western citizens. We have every year, and almost every week, detailed accounts of the losses sustained, with every description of craft which floats upon those waters, from the majestic steamboat down to the smallest flats, and even rafts, used for the conveyance to market of the surplus produce of our agricultural interest.

It will not be alleged against the citizens of the West that they have ever been wanting in patriotic devotion to the interest of the whole nation, in war or in peace. They have cheerfully contributed their full proportion, both of men and money, for the common defence. And in the protection of commerce upon the ocean, in which they have but an intermediate interest, they have made a common cause with their fellow-citizens of the East. In time of peace, they have never hesitated to co-operate in measures of general utility, regardless of sectional interests. It is needless to refer to the annual appropriations of this body for the security of the commerce of the ocean, whether for fortifications, lighthouses, or any other necessary work, because the West have cheerfully concurred in these measures. We claim no merit in the performance of a common duty, though our interest is not direct, because we deem the interest of every section common to the whole. This nation is one and indivisible; we have an identity of interest. The body politic, like that of one man, will guard with equal care every member, while patriotism is the predominant principle of the soul. Citizens of the East and the West have not refused to bleed for each other, and to mingle their ashes in one common urn. They have not hesitated to defend each other's rights, and to promote each other's convenience, as their own. In no case has this disposition been wanting to the West; and I will not now so far distrust the magnanimity of the East as to doubt their cheerful concurrence in the measure proposed by this bill. We call not for a sacrifice of lives to protect the commerce of the West, or we know it would instantly rouse to arms the whole host of gallant freemen from Maine to Georgia. But we ask for a small appropriation to remove from our waters obstructions more formidable to our navigation, and more dreaded by the brave, than a host of invaders. Uninterrupted, they are dangerous; but, attempt their removal, and we shall find them harmless foes. The object is national, though more immediately affecting the interests of the West. If beacons, warning, would admonish the navigators of the danger, more than double the amount would be cheerfully appropriated for lighthouses upon the banks of those rivers; but the novelty of the mode of effecting the same object should be no objection to the principle; and I am happy in the belief that the same magnanimity which has uniformly characterized the decisions of this body will prevail on this occasion, and that gentlemen from the East will exercise that justice and liberality which they have always received from the West.

But I find I am transcending the limits which I had prescribed to myself. It was my determination not to go into the merits of the question, believing it to be unnecessary. Presuming that the Senate are possessed of all the information necessary to form an opinion; and that a disposition prevails to extend to the West the same liberality which has already been extended to every other part of the Union, to their decision it is cheerfully submitted.

Mr. BENTON moved to amend the bill, by inserting the following words: "and of the Missouri river, in the State of Missouri." This amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, as amended. Messrs. NOBLE and TALBOT opposed the amendment agreed to in Committee of the Whole: and Mr. BENTON spoke in favor of it. The amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. CHANDLER then moved to amend the bill, by inserting the following clause; "and, also, for removing the sand bars, and other obstructions, from the Kennebec river, between Norridgewock and Gardiner, in the State of Maine; and, likewise, from the Penobscot river."

In introducing this amendment, Mr. C. said, that his object was to ascertain whether gentlemen, who were in favor of internal improvements, were disposed to distribute the advantages of those improvements with any degree of equality. Even if the amendment which he had proposed should be adopted, he should still feel compelled to give his vote against the bill; believing, as he did, that Congress had no Constitutional power for thus disposing of the public money—but if it did pass, he wished his constituents to receive their due proportion of the expenditure.

This amendment was opposed by Messrs. RUGLES, H. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, BROWN, and TALBOT.—Messrs. TAYLOR, of Virginia, HOLMES, of Maine, and MACON, opposed the bill on general principles; and were replied to, by Messrs. TAL-

MAY, 1824.

The Tariff Bill—Five Millions New Stock.

SENATE.

BOT, BENTON, and LOWRIE. Mr. CHANDLER'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRANCH proposed, as an amendment, a new section, appropriating $500,000 for opening a direct communication from Albemarle Sound to the Atlantic Ocean, and for removing the obstructions from the channel that connects Albemarle Sound with the Pamlico. Mr. BRANCH made some remarks in favor of this amendment. It was lost.

Mr. LOWRIE proposed an amendment, not affecting the principle of the bill, which was adopted.

The question was then put, upon passing the bill to a third reading; and determined in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Brown, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Findlay, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, H. Johnson, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Lowrie, Melvaine, Noble, Parrott, Ruggles, Smith, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Williams—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Barbour, Bell, Branch, Chandler, Clayton, Edwards, Elliott, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, King of Alabama, King of New York, Macon, Mills, Palmer, Seymour, Taylor of Virginia, Van Buren, Van Dyke, and Ware—20.

So the bill passed to a third reading.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, from the committee appointed to confer with a committee on the part of the House of Representatives on the subject of the disagreement of the two Houses, in relation to two amendments to the bill "to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports," submitted a report, in which is recommended the adoption of the following proposition:

1. That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to the third amendment of the Senate, and do agree to the same with the following amendment: after the word "wool," where it first occurs in the proviso, strike out the words, "or of which wool shall be a component part," and insert "except flannels and baizes."

2. That the Senate do recede from so much of its sixteenth amendment, in reference to the specific duty on cotton bagging, as is disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and that the clause be modified, so as to read, "on cotton bagging, three cents and three-fourths of a cent per square yard."

This report was accepted by the Senate without division. By the first proposition the proviso in question is left as follows: "Provided, That on all manufactures of wool, except flannels and baizes, the actual value of which, at the place whence imported, shall not exceed thirty-three and a third cents per square yard, shall be charged with a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem." Articles of which wool is a component part, together with flannels and baizes, are thus made subject to the same duties as are imposed by the bill on other manufactures of wool. By the second proposition the specific duty of four and a half cents per square yard on cotton bagging, as it originally stood in the bill, is reduced to three cents and three-fourths of a cent.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the creation of a stock, to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars, to provide for the awards of the Commissioners under the treaty with Spain, of the 22d of February, 1819;" and, on motion, the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, May 20.

The VICE PRESIDENT, in a few brief remarks in which he expressed his sense of the kind and courteous treatment which he had experienced from the members, collectively and individually, signified to the Senate that he should not preside over the body, during the present session, after this day. He then called upon Mr. GAILLARD, to whom he relinquished the Chair.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to whom was referred the memorial of A. B. Woodward, proposing a standard of measure for the United States, made a report; which was read and considered; and, in concurrence therewith, the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of Thomas Robinson reported a bill for the relief of the legal representative of Thomas Robinson, deceased; which was twice read, by unanimous consent.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill entitled "An act for altering the time for holding the circuit court of the United States, for the fourth circuit, in the Maryland district," reported it without amendment.

The resolution authorizing the Secretary of State to furnish a copy of Tanner's American Atlas to each of the Ministers Plenipotentiary and Chargé d'Affaires of the United States, at foreign Courts, was read the second time.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of J. Outremare." They have passed bills of the following titles, viz: "An act to alter the judicial districts of Virginia, and for other purposes;" "An act to alter the times of holding the circuit and district courts of the United States, for the district of South Carolina;" and "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act to amend an act for the establishment of a territorial government in Florida, and for other purposes,'" in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

FIVE MILLIONS NEW STOCK.

The bill from the House of Representatives, "to provide for the issuing of stock, not exceeding five millions of dollars, to meet the awards of the commissioners under the Treaty with Spain, of February 22d, 1819," was taken up for consideration, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH explained, at some length, the objects

SENATE.

Proceedings.

MAY, 1824.

contemplated by this bill, and the obligation of the Government to meet the awards of this commission.

Mr. BENTON was opposed to the bill; and proposed an entire new bill, making the amount of the awards of the commissioners payable, to a sum not exceeding five millions of dollars, in money, from the Treasury; or, if there should not be so large a sum on hand, unappropriated to other purposes, that certificates of stock should be issued, payable, with interest of six per cent. from the proceeds of the lands ceded, by the said treaty, to the United States; or payable in such other way as Congress may hereafter determine. Mr. B. proceeded to support his amendment, as the least onerous mode of discharging the debt.

Mr. LOWRIE agreed to the construction put upon the treaty by the gentleman from Missouri; but he believed that justice to the claimants demanded that the Government should adopt other means to meet the awards under that commission than from the proceeds of the lands. Mr. L. proceeded to an exposition of the reasons which induced this opinion. He was opposed to the amendment, and in favor of the original bill.

Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, also supported the bill as it came from the other House. He replied to the remarks of Mr. BENTON.

Mr. BROWN spoke in favor of the amendment, as one of the best modes of payment that could be adopted by the Government; and as furnishing to the claimants a greater remuneration for their losses than they could ever have obtained from Spain, without the intervention of this Government.

Mr. KELLY considered the mode proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, of creating a stock payable from the proceeds of the lands, as the worst that could be adopted, both as to its injustice towards the claimants under the treaty, and the deplorable effects it would produce upon that part of the country in which the lands are located.

Mr. TALBOT opposed the amendment. He believed the faith of the Government pledged for the payment of the interest annually and regularly, from the Treasury, let the stock be issued as it might. There was no other alternative, than to pay the money immediately, or to create a stock, drawing interest annually. He considered the original bill as a provision to borrow the money at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and pay it to the claimants, rather than to pay them six per cent. as the Government would otherwise be bound to do.

Mr. FINDLAY was in favor of adopting the first section of the proposed amendment. He preferred the immediate payment of the money, to the creation of stock, upon which interest must be paid.

Mr. BARBOUR considered the United States as standing bound for the payment of five millions of dollars, to these claimants. He admitted that the payment of the principal sum might be based upon the sales of the lands, but denied that the payment of the interest was referrible to the same source.

The question was then put upon striking out the original bill, and decided in the negative. So Mr. BENTON'S amendment was lost.

The bill was then reported to the Senate without amendment, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

FRIDAY, May 21.

The VICE PRESIDENT not being present, the Senate was called to order by the Secretary. On motion of Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, the Senate proceeded to ballot for a President pro tempore.

The whole number of votes given in was 35; necessary to a choice 18.

The honorable JOHN GAILLARD had 23 votes, and was declared to have been elected President pro tempore. Mr. GAILLARD immediately took the Chair, and expressed to the Senate, in a very neat and appropriate speech, his sense of the high honor conferred upon him.

The three bills from the House of Representatives yesterday brought up for concurrence were severally read twice by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RUGGLES, from the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to alter the times of holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of South Carolina," reported it without amendment.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the joint committee appointed on the distribution of the rooms in the centre building of the Capitol, made a report, accompanied by a resolution assigning to the Senate and House of Representatives the rooms in the centre of the Capitol. The resolution was twice read, by unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John Mitchell," reported it without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. HAYNE, the Committee on Naval Affairs were discharged from the consideration of the petition of Peter Trezevant; and it was referred to the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury.

The Senate proceeded to consider their amendment to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of J. Ottremare," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and receded therefrom.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the assignees and legal representatives of John H. Piatt;" and no amendment having been made thereto, it was reported to the Senate, and ordered to a third reading—yeas 25, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Brown, D'Wolf, Edwards, Findlay, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Mills, Noble, Ruggles, Seymour, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, Van Buren, Van Dyke, and Ware.

MAY, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Benton, Branch, Chandler, Clayton, Eaton, Elliott, Hayne, King of Alabama, King of New York, Knight, Macon, Palmer, Parrott, and Smith.

The bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to improve the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers," was read the third time, as amended, and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill authorizing the subscription of stock in the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to authorize the painting of the battle of New Orleans, by John Vanderlyn; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to sell and dispose of the refuse lands of the United States; and, on motion, it was laid on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill, which originated in the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donnellson, Stephen Heard, and others," with an amendment. They have passed bills of the following titles, viz: "An act to authorize the surveying and making of a road from a point in the northwestern boundary of the State of Ohio, near the foot of the rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie, to Detroit, in the Territory of Michigan," and "An act to discontinue certain post roads, and to establish others;" in which amendment and bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to authorize the creation of a stock, to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars, to provide for the awards of the Commissioners under the treaty with Spain, of the 22d of February, 1819," was read the third time and passed—yeas 31, nays 4, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barbour, Barton, Bell, Chandler, D'Wolf, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Elliott, Findlay, Gaillard, Hayne, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Jackson, Johnson of Kentucky, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lowrie, McIlvaine, Mills, Palmer, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith, Talbot, Taylor of Indiana, and Thomas.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Macon, and Noble.

On motion of Mr. JACKSON, the bill from the House of Representatives "granting a tract of land for the seat of government of the Territory of Florida, and for other purposes," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. KING, of Alabama, explained the objects of the bill. It was then reported to the Senate, without amendment, and passed to a third reading.

On motion of Mr. LOWRIE, the Secretary of the Senate was directed to communicate to the President of the United States, and to the House of Representatives, that the Senate have, in the absence of the Vice President, elected the Hon. Mr. GAILLARD President of the Senate, pro tem.

On motion of Mr. VAN BUREN, the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, "in addition to an act, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of naturalization," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. VAN BUREN stated the provisions of the different sections of the bill. Its principal provisions are, to authorize aliens, who were infants at the time of entering the country, to take the oaths and produce the necessary proofs of residence in the country for the requisite period, and to become citizens; and it also reduces the term of residence, prerequisite for an alien to become a citizen, from five to three years.

On motion of Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, the provisions of the bill were limited to "free white persons."

Messrs. FINDLAY, VAN BUREN, HOLMES of Maine, MILLS, ELLIOTT, H. JOHNSON of Louisiana, and TAYLOR of Virginia, discussed the propriety of the bill, in respect to its general principles, and to its details.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia, moved to amend the bill, by striking out all but the first section, and inserting two other sections in lieu of the remainder of the bill. This motion was lost.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed, and read the third time.

The bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands "to establish a surveyor general's office in the Territory of Arkansas," was taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole. A communication on this subject from Governor Miller, of the Arkansas Territory, was read. Mr. LOWRIE made some remarks in opposition to the establishment of the office proposed in this bill, which he considered unnecessary. He concluded by moving the indefinite postponement of the bill. Mr. KELLY replied in support of the bill. Mr. KING, of Alabama, stated the reasons which would induce him to vote for postponement. Mr. BARTON explained the views of the committee in relation to this bill. The question was then put upon Mr. LOWRIE's motion to postpone the bill indefinitely, and carried in the affirmative, without division.

The bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia "for the relief of the Columbian College, in the District of Columbia," was next taken up in Committee of the Whole. Mr. BARBOUR explained the reasons which induced the committee to report the bill. He reviewed the history and present situation of this institution, and urged the propriety of passing the bill. The bill makes a grant to the institution, for whose relief it is drawn, of certain property within the District of Columbia. Mr. CHANDLER opposed the bill. He did not consider this as a national institution; and, therefore, thought it not particularly entitled to the bounty of the Government. Mr. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, replied, in support of the claims of this seminary to the consideration of Congress. Mr. NOBLE also advocated the bill; and Messrs. MACON, and TAYLOR of Virginia, opposed it. Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, made some inquiries on the subject, which were replied to by Mr. BARBOUR.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, without amendment, and refused a third reading—yeas 18, nays 20.

On motion of Mr. KING, of Alabama, the bill from the House of Representatives "for the relief of George Fisher," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. The bill provides for the repayment of a sum of money paid for a tract of land which had been previously sold to another person. Mr. KING, of Alabama, stated to the Senate the circumstances connected with the claim. He moved to amend the bill by increasing the amount to be granted. Mr. CHANDLER made a few remarks upon the subject, which were replied to by Messrs. KING and KELLY. Mr. KING's amendment was then agreed to, as was also another proposed by Mr. KELLY. The bill was then reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill "to fix the western boundary line of the Territory of Arkansas." The report of the committee in relation to this subject was read. Mr. BENTON explained the objects of the bill. Mr. HOLMES, of Mississippi, offered a new section as an amendment, which was agreed to. The bill was then reported to the Senate, as amended, and passed to be engrossed, and read a third time.

The bill "to amend 'An act supplementary to an act, entitled an act to carry into effect the 9th article of the treaty with Spain, concluded the 22d of February, 1819,'" was next taken up for consideration. Messrs. EATON, JACKSON, and LOWRIE, remarked briefly upon the effects to be produced by this bill. It was then reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs "to extinguish Indian claims to lands in the State of Missouri," was then taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. BENTON explained the merits of the bill. Some remarks were made upon it by Messrs. LOWRIE, CHANDLER, KING of New York, and ELLIOTT. The bill was then reported to the Senate without amendment, and passed to be engrossed, and read the third time.

The joint resolution "authorizing the Secretary of State to furnish one copy of Tanner's American Atlas to each of our Ministers Plenipotentiary and Chargé d'Affaires, at foreign Governments," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole, and reported to the Senate. Mr. KING, of Alabama, opposed the passage of the resolution, and Mr. LOWRIE made a few remarks in favor of it. It was then passed to be engrossed, and read the third time—17 to 13.

On motion of Mr. RUGGLES, the bill "for the relief of Joseph Forrest," was taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole. Mr. RUGGLES explained the merits of the claim. It is for the payment for the loss and detention of a vessel employed by the Government to carry provisions to the distressed colony of Caraccas, in South America. A discussion ensued upon the propriety of allowing this claim; in which Messrs. EATON, KELLY, HOLMES of Maine, LLOYD of Massachusetts, TALBOT, BELL, and VAN DYKE, took part. Mr. RUGGLES moved to fill the blank in the bill, for the amount to be allowed, with $4,000. This sum was not agreed to. Mr. EATON moved the sum of $2,136. This was agreed to. The bill was then reported to the Senate, passed to be engrossed, and read the third time.

SATURDAY, May 22.

Mr. DICKERSON, from the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act to revive and continue in force the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and seventh sections of the act, entitled 'An act further to provide for the collection of the duties on imports and tonnage, passed the 3d of March, 1815,'" and the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the building of lighthouses, light vessels, and beacons, therein mentioned, and for other purposes," reported the former without amendment, and the latter with amendments; which were read.

The two bills from the House of Representatives, yesterday brought up for concurrence, were severally read twice, by unanimous consent; and, on motion, the bill, entitled "An act to continue certain post roads, and to establish others," was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The bill, entitled "An act to authorize the surveying and making of a road, from a point in the northwestern boundary of the State of Ohio, near the foot of the rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie, in the Territory of Michigan," was referred to the select Committee on Roads and Canals.

The Senate proceed to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donnelson, Stephen Heard, and others;" and agreed thereto.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that they have passed a bill, entitled "An act making an appropriation for the payment of the claims of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Governor of the State of New York, against the United States;" in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said bill was twice read, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the bill, entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled 'An act to amend an act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida, and for other purposes,'" and the bill, entitled "An act to alter the judicial districts of Virginia, and for other purposes," reported them severally without amendment.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act appropriating a certain sum of money to Benjamin Huffman, of the State of Indiana," reported it without amendment.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed

MAY, 1824.

Farrow and Harris.

SENATE.

the bill which originated in the Senate, entitled "An act to enable the President to hold treaties with certain Indian tribes, and for other purposes;" and the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Alexander McNair," with amendments to each. They have also passed bills of the following titles, viz:

An act to allow a salary to the collectors of the districts of Nantucket and Pensacola, and to abolish the office of surveyor of the district of Pensacola; An act making further appropriations for the military service of the United States for the year 1824, and for other purposes; An act concerning pre-emption rights in the Territory of Arkansas; An act to authorize the legal representatives of the Marquis de Maison Rouge, and those claiming under him, to institute a suit against the United States, and for other purposes; An act making an appropriation for the use of the Library of Congress, and for furnishing rooms in the Capitol; An act making appropriations to carry into effect certain Indian treaties; An act granting a tract of land to the inhabitants of the parish of Point Coupee, on certain conditions; An act to establish an additional land office in the State of Missouri; and An act reserving to the Wyandot tribe of Indians a certain tract of land, in lieu of a reservation made to them by treaty; in which amendments and bills they request the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill, "explanatory of an act, entitled an act to provide for the extinguishment of the debt due to the United States, from the purchasers of public lands, approved May 18, 1824." The bill was twice read.

The bills from the House of Representatives, "granting a tract of land for the seat of government of the Territory of Florida, and for other purposes;" "for the relief of the assignees and legal representatives of John H. Piatt;" and "for the relief of George Fisher," were severally read the third time, and passed.

The bills which originated in Senate, "in further addition to an act to establish an uniform system of naturalization;" "to amend an act, supplementary to an act, entitled an act to carry into effect the ninth article of the treaty concluded between the United States and Spain, on the 22d of February, 1819;" "to extinguish Indian claims to lands within the State of Missouri;" "for the relief of Joseph Forrest;" and the resolution authorizing the Secretary of State to furnish one copy of Tanner's American Atlas to each of the Ministers Plenipotentiary and Chargés des Affaires of the United States, at foreign Governments," were severally read the third time, passed, and sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence.

The bill which originated in Senate, "to fix the Western boundary line of the Territory of Arkansas," was read the third time. On motion of Mr. LOWRIE, it was committed, after some discussion, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands, "to complete the survey of the Southern and Western boundary lines of the State of Missouri," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. BARTON, on behalf of the committee to whom the bill had been referred, stated its objects. It was then reported to the Senate, without amendment, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

On motion of Mr. HAYNE, the bill from the House of Representatives, "altering the time of holding the circuit and district courts of the United States, within the State of South Carolina," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. It was reported to the Senate, without amendment, and passed to a third reading.

The bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, "for the relief of the legal representatives of Thomas Robertson, deceased," was taken up in Committee of the Whole. These petitioners pray to be relieved from the payment of the balance of a judgment recovered against their late father, General Robertson, as surety on a bond given in the year 1783, by a collector in the State where he resided, and who became a defaulter. These petitioners contend that there was a great remissness on the part of Government, in not calling the principal, on the bond, to account at the time it ought to have been done. Mr. VAN BUREN stated the grounds upon which the petitioners rested their prayer. The bill was then reported to the Senate, without amendment; and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

The report of the joint committee on the distribution of the rooms in the centre building of the Capitol, was again read, and agreed to.

FARROW AND HARRIS.

The bill introduced, on leave, by Mr. BARBOUR, and reported by the Committee on Claims, "for the relief of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris," was taken up for consideration, as in Committee of the Whole. These petitioners claim remuneration for the loss and embarrassment sustained by them in consequence of the determination of the Government not to build the fort on Dauphin Island, for the erection of which a contract had been made with them. This claim had been referred to a commissioner to ascertain the damage done to the petitioners, by the failure, on the part of Government, to perfect the contract; and the bill proposes that, when the commissioner shall have reported the amount due them, that the money shall be paid, upon the approbation of the Secretary of War, without a further act of Congress on the subject; and that they shall be relieved from the operation of the judgments obtained against them, for the moneys advanced them by the Government, until the commissioner shall have rendered his opinion on the subject.

Mr. RUGGLES, in behalf of the Committee on Claims, stated the facts connected with the case.

Messrs. BARBOUR, LOWRIE, J. S. JOHNSTON of Louisiana, KELLY, H. JOHNSON of Louisiana, and TAYLOR of Virginia, spoke in favor of the passage of the bill.

SENATE.

Proceedings.

MAY, 1824.

Mr. CHANDLER proposed an amendment to strike out a part of the bill; which was not agreed to.

Mr. KING, of Alabama, opposed the bill on the grounds that the petitioners had not made such progress in their work as to authorize the belief that it would have been completed within the stipulated time had not the Government suspended the work; that the petitioners had transferred their contract to a third person; and that the ultimate decision of the amount to be allowed these petitioners, if any thing were to be allowed, ought not to be committed to any individuals, however high their standing might be, but that it ought to be decided upon by Congress.

These objections were particularly replied to, and obviated by Messrs. J. S. JOHNSTON and BARBOUR.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, without amendment.

Mr. BELL moved to amend the bill, so as to provide that, on the decision of the commissioner, one-half the amount of damages awarded should be paid to the petitioners.

This motion was opposed by Mr. MILLS, and disagreed to by the Senate.

The bill was then passed to be engrossed, and read the third time.

MONDAY, May 24.

On motion, by Mr. DICKERSON, the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures were discharged from the several memorials for and against imposing duties on sales at auction; and also, from the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Philadelphia, praying for the construction of a harbor near the Capes of the Delaware.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act making an appropriation for the payment of the claims of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Governor of the State of New York, against the United States," reported it without amendment.

On motion, by Mr. EDWARDS, William Eaton had leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

Mr. EATON gave notice that, to-morrow, he would ask leave to bring in a resolution directing the Secretary to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, one thousand dollars to Enrico Causici.

On motion, by Mr. JACKSON, the Committee on Military Affairs were discharged from the consideration of the report of the Secretary of War, on the subject of arms furnished the United States by South Carolina.

Mr. BARTON presented the memorial of John Ross and others, the Delegates of the Cherokee nation, stating that, from their advanced state of civilization, they have found it necessary to establish a more regular system of government, for the protection of the property, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that they have, accordingly, established legislative and judiciary branches of government, upon a plan, simple and comprehensible to the Cherokees. To support their government, they found it necessary to impose taxes on merchants and pedlars, in their nation. The power to impose this tax, under the treaties subsisting between them and the United States, has been disputed; and the Attorney General of the United States has given an opinion to the proper department against the right of the Cherokees to impose the tax; and, under that opinion, it has been intimated to the Delegates that a return of the taxes will be expected, and that they must refrain from the exercise of this power in future.

The Delegates, on behalf of the nation, appeal to Congress for relief against this decision, and present copies of the opinion of the Attorney General, and of an opinion of Judge White, of Tennessee, given on application, some years since.

The memorial and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion, by Mr. LANMAN, three members were added to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in place of Messrs. KNIGHT, JOHNSON of Kentucky, and McILVAINE, absent; and Messrs. THOMAS, CLAYTON, and WARE, were appointed.

On motion, by Mr. HOLMES of Maine, a member was added to the Committee on the Judiciary, in place of Mr. TALBOT, absent; and Mr. VAN DYKE was appointed.

The nine bills last brought up from the House of Representatives for concurrence, were severally read twice, by unanimous consent; and, on motion, the bill, entitled "An act making an appropriation for the use of the Library of Congress, and for furnishing rooms in the Capitol," was referred to the joint Library Committee.

The bill, entitled "An act to allow a salary to the collectors of the districts of Nantucket and Pensacola, and to abolish the office of Surveyor of the District of Pensacola," was referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures.

The bill, entitled "An act to authorize the legal representatives of the Marquis de Maison Rouge, and those claiming under him, to institute a suit against the United States, and for other purposes," was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill, entitled "An act making appropriations to carry into effect certain Indian treaties;" and the bill, entitled "An act making further appropriations for the military service of the United States, for the year 1824, and for other purposes," were severally referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill, entitled "An act to establish an additional land office in the State of Missouri;" the bill, entitled "An act granting a tract of land to the inhabitants of the parish of Point Coupee, on certain conditions;" the bill, entitled "An act reserving to the Wyandot tribe of Indians a certain tract of land, in lieu of a reservation made to them by treaty;" and the bill, entitled "An act concerning pre-emption rights in the Territory of Arkansas," were severally referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, submitted the following motions for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to report to the Senate, at an early period of the

May, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

ensuing session of Congress, such information as may be in the possession of the Department, or he may think proper to communicate, relative to the expediency of constructing, at one of the navy yards of the United States, a dry dock, of sufficient capacity for receiving, examining, and repairing, ships-of-the-line; and to report on the usefulness, economy, and necessity, of a dry dock; the best location therefor, and the probable expense of constructing such dry dock, of the size aforesaid, in a solid and durable manner, and with the needful appendages for an advantageous use of the same.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to report to the Senate, at the commencement of the next session of Congress, a statement, showing the amount of travelling expenses, and other allowances, received by the officers of the Navy and of the marine corps, over the monthly pay and rations to which they are by law entitled, in each year, for the last three years; the emoluments which have been received in each year, for the same period, so far as the same can be ascertained, by the officers of the Navy and the marine corps, as well from the Government as from other sources, in consequence of their official stations; the expense of courts martial in the Navy and marine corps, in each year, for the same period, with the amount paid to Judge Advocates and others, for their attendance and services, designating the places at which such courts martial were ordered to be held, and the stations from which the officers composing the same were detailed to attend; the number of desertions from the marine corps, and the number of rank and file confined for imprisonment, as a punishment for desertion, or misconduct, for each year, during the same period; and, also, to report his opinion on such alterations, or further provisions of law, as he may consider it expedient to be made, in order to promote a more perfect discipline in the Navy and marine corps, to prevent the frequent recurrence of courts martial, and insure to the public service, in the said establishments, the highest degree of economy and efficiency.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed bills of the following titles, viz: "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange a stock, bearing an interest of four and a half per cent. for certain stocks bearing an interest of five per cent.;" "An act authorizing the employment of additional clerks and certain messengers and assistants, and other persons, in the several Departments;" "An act to establish Bowdoinham, in the State of Maine, Troy, and Hudson, in the State of New York, and Fairport, in the State of Ohio, ports of delivery;" and "An act granting a tract of land to the parish of West Baton Rouge, on certain conditions;" in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The said bills were severally read twice, by unanimous consent; and on motion, the two first mentioned of said bills were referred to the Committee on Finance. The third mentioned of said bills was referred to the Committee on Commerce and Manufactures; and the fourth and last mentioned of said bills was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed bills of the following titles, viz: "An act for the relief of Joseph M. White and William Davidson;" "An act to regulate the mode of practice in the courts of the United States for the district of Louisiana;" "An act for the relief of certain distillers in the United States;" in which bills they requested the concurrence of the Senate. The said bills were severally read twice, by unanimous consent; and on motion, the two first mentioned of said bills were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The third and last mentioned of said bills was referred to the Committee on Finance, to consider and report thereon.

The bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands, "explanatory to an act, entitled 'An act to provide for the extinguishment of the debt due to the United States from the purchasers of public lands,'" was taken up for consideration as in Committee of the Whole. Messrs. LOWRIE and KING of Alabama remarked upon the objects of the bill. It was reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill from the House of Representatives, "for the relief of Arthur N. Henly," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. RUGGLES stated the grounds upon which the bill was founded. It was then reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading.

On motion of Mr. VAN BUREN, the bill from the other House "to amend an act, entitled 'An act to amend an act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida, and for other purposes,'" was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. VAN BUREN explained the objects of the bill. Mr. CHANDLER made a remark in relation to it; and the bill was reported to the Senate without amendment. Mr. EDWARDS then commented briefly on the operation of the bill, and moved an amendment, respecting the designation of a resident Judge of the Court in Florida. This amendment was opposed by Messrs. JACKSON, and H. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, and supported by Mr. HOLMES, of Maine. Mr. EDWARDS withdrew his amendment to give place to another proposed by Mr. VAN BUREN. Mr. KELLY opposed the amendment, and was replied to by Messrs. VAN BUREN and KING, of Alabama. The amendment was agreed to, and the bill was passed to a third reading.

On motion of Mr. DICKERSON, the joint resolution providing a place of deposit, in the Library of Congress, for the Portrait of Columbus, presented to Congress by George G. Barrell, Esq.; and, also, for the distribution of sundry copies of the Declaration of Independence, was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. After a few remarks on the subject, the resolution was reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. BENTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill "to fix the western boundary line of the Territory of Arkansas, and for other purposes," reported the same with an amendment. The bill was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. B. explained the effect of the amendment. The amendment was agreed to, and the bill was reported to the Senate, and passed to be engrossed and read the third time.

This being the last day of the session on which, according to a joint rule of the two Houses, any bill can pass from one House to the other, the following bills, which originated in Senate, and which had just passed to a third reading, were read a third time, by general consent, and passed, and sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence, viz: The bill "to fix the western boundary line of the Territory of Arkansas, and for other purposes;" the bill "explanatory of an act, entitled 'An act to provide for the extinguishment of the debt due to the United States from the purchasers of public lands;' and the resolution "providing a place of deposit for the Portrait of Columbus, and directing the distribution of certain copies of the Declaration of Independence."

The amendments made by the House of Representatives, to the bill from the Senate, "to enable the President to hold treaties with certain Indian tribes, and for other purposes;" and, also, to the bill "for the relief of Alexander McNair," were considered and agreed to.

The bills which originated in Senate, "for the relief of Nimrod Farrow and Richard Harris;" "to complete the survey of the southern and western boundaries of the State of Missouri;" and "for the relief of the legal representatives of Thomas Robinson, deceased," were severally read the third time, passed, and sent to the other House for concurrence.

The bill from the House of Representatives, "to alter the time of holding the circuit and district courts of the United States, within the State of South Carolina," was read the third time, and passed.

The bill from the House of Representatives, "to amend an act, entitled 'An act to amend an act for the establishment of a Territorial government in Florida, and for other purposes,'" was read the third time as amended in Senate, and passed, and sent to the other House for concurrence in the amendment.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. They were explained, and some of them gave rise to short discussions. They were reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading, viz: The bill "granting to each State and Territory, in which there are public lands, a right of pre-emption to a certain tract of land for a seat of government;" the bill "for the relief of John Holliday;" the bill "for the relief of Samuel Cleveland;" the bill "changing the mode of surveying the public lands on any river, lake, bayou, or water course, in the Territory of Arkansas;" the bill "to authorize masters of vessels, in certain cases, to clear out either at the custom-house at Richmond or Petersburg;" the bill "to alter the judicial districts of Pennsylvania, and for other purposes;" the bill to "provide for the sale of lands conveyed to the United States, in certain cases, and for other purposes;" the bill "for the relief of the corporation of the church of St. Anne, and for other purposes;" the bill "supplementary to an act to provide for the correction of errors made in entering land at the land offices;" the bill "to authorize the President to exchange five arpens of land on the south side of the public works at Baton Rouge, for an equal quantity of land on the north side of said works;" the bill "for the benefit of the Columbian Institute;" the bill "to allow a bounty to vessels engaged in the cod fisheries, in certain cases;" the bill "further to regulate the inspection of flour in the district of Alexandria;" the bill "to authorize the President to enter into certain negotiations relative to lands located under Virginia military land warrants, between Ludlow's and Roberts's grants, in the State of Ohio;" the bill "to regulate the fees of registers of wills, within the several counties of the District of Columbia;" the bill "making an appropriation towards the extinguishment of the title of the Quapaw Indians to lands in the Territory of Arkansas;" and the bill "granting certain lots of land to the corporation of the city of Mobile, and to certain individuals residing in said city."

The bill from the House of Representatives, supplementary to an act, entitled "An act to incorporate the inhabitants of the City of Washington," was taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EATON moved to amend the bill, by adding several new sections.

Some remarks were made upon these amendments, by Messrs. SMITH, EATON, and BARBOUR. The amendments were severally agreed to. The bill was then reported to the Senate, as amended, and passed to a third reading.

Mr. BARBOUR then moved that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of a great number of individuals, praying relief from the Government for spoliation committed by the French. Mr. B. recalled to the recollection of the Senate, the fact, that information in relation to these claims had been required by a resolution of the Senate, from the Department of State; that the documents from which this information was to be obtained were very voluminous, and that it could not possibly be furnished at the present session of Congress. In this state of the business, the committee had directed him to make this motion. The committee was accordingly discharged.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, it was ordered that when the Senate does adjourn, it adjourn to meet again at five o'clock this afternoon.

At three o'clock, the Senate adjourned.

EVENING SESSION.

On motion of Mr. MILLS, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill from the other House "for the relief of John Mitchell," with an amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations in the Senate. Mr. M. stated the grounds of this bill. The petitioner was agent for prisoners of war at Halifax during the late war. He claims to be remunerated for certain extraordinary expenses incurred, and to be exempted from the payment of a draft which he drew entirely on account of the Government, and the amount of which was lost by the failure of the person in whose favor it was drawn, through the remissness of other agents of the Government. Mr. M. detailed the circumstances connected with this case, and spoke of the services which Mr. Mitchell had rendered to the Government during the Revolutionary war. The amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations was agreed to.

MAY, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

Mr. CHANDLER made a few remarks upon this claim, and was replied to by Messrs. MILLS, BARBOUR, and LLOYD of Massachusetts. The bill was then reported to the Senate, as amended, and passed to a third reading.

The bills from the House of Representatives, "to allow further time for the issuing and locating of military land warrants," and "providing for the disposition of three several tracts of land, in the county of Tuscarawas, in the State of Louisiana, and for other purposes," were severally taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate without amendment, and passed to a third reading.

The bill from the other House, "for the relief of Samuel Rist," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. NOBLE stated the grounds of this claim. It is for a pension, in a case where the testimony was considered insufficient at the War Department. Mr. N. moved the indefinite postponement of the bill; which was carried without division.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill which originated in the Senate entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts providing for ascertaining and adjusting the titles and claims to land in the St. Helena and Jackson Courthouse land districts," with amendments. They have passed bills of the following titles, viz: An act concerning wrecks on the coast of Florida; An act supplementary to "An act providing for the examination of titles to land in that part of the State of Louisiana situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river; and An act granting to the corporation of Tuscaloosa certain lots and privileges over the reservations and commons in said town; in which amendments and bills they request the concurrence of the Senate. The said three bills were severally twice read, by unanimous consent; and on motion, the first mentioned of said bills was referred to the Committee on Finance. The two last mentioned of said bills were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendments made by the House of Representatives to the bill from the Senate "for ascertaining and adjusting claims to lands in the St. Helena and Jackson Courthouse land districts, in the State of Louisiana," were taken up; and, after some discussion between Messrs. EATON, KING of Alabama, H. JOHNSON of Louisiana, CHANDLER, LOWRIE, and J. S. JOHNSTON of Louisiana, the amendments were severally concurred in.

Mr. SEYMOUR, from the Committee on the Contingent Fund, reported sundry resolutions for the payment of the assistants employed by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate. The resolutions were twice read.

TUESDAY, May 25.

The several bills from the other House yesterday referred to the standing committees of the Senate, were reported by those committees.

In pursuance of notice given yesterday, Mr. EATON asked leave to introduce a resolution, directing the Secretary of the Senate to pay, from the contingent fund, to the artist, [Enrico Causici,] employed in constructing an allegorical ornament for a clock for the Senate, the further sum of $1000, to enable him to proceed in the work. Leave was accordingly granted; the resolution was read, and passed to a second reading.

The resolutions submitted yesterday by Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, respecting the expediency, the location, and the probable expense of constructing a dry dock at one of the navy yards of the United States; and, also, relative to the pay, emoluments, and other allowances, of the officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, the expenses of courts martial in that Department, the number of desertions, &c., and requiring of the Secretary of the Navy, "his opinion on such alterations, or further provisions of law, as he may consider it expedient to make, in order to promote a more perfect discipline in the Navy and Marine Corps, to prevent the frequent recurrence of courts martial, and insure to the public service, in the said establishments, the highest degree of economy and efficiency," were again read for consideration. Mr. LLOYD made a few remarks explanatory of his object in the introduction of the resolutions, and they were agreed to by the Senate without division.

On motion of Mr. BENTON, the Committee on Indian Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of its unfinished business.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole; were explained by the several committees to which they had been referred; the merits of some of them were discussed, and some were partially amended. They were reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading, viz: The bill "to revive and extend the term of certain pensions which have expired by limitation;" the bill "to authorize the State of Indiana to open a canal through the public lands, to connect the navigation of the rivers Wabash and the Miami of Lake Erie;" the bill "making appropriation for deepening the channel leading into the harbor of Presque Isle, and for repairing Plymouth Beach;" the bill "to authorize the issuing of letters patent to Henry Sylvester;" the bill "granting donations of lands to certain actual settlers within the Territory of Florida;" the bill "to alter the time of holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth circuit in the Maryland district;" the bill "appropriating a certain sum of money for the benefit of Benjamin Huffman;" the bill "to alter the judicial districts of Virginia, and for other purposes;" the bill "to authorize the building of lighthouses, beacons, and light vessels, and for other purposes;" the bill "authorizing the employment of additional clerks and assistants in the different Departments;" and the bill "to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange a stock bearing five per cent. interest, for certain stocks bearing an interest of six per cent."

SENATE.

Proceedings.

MAY, 1824.

Mr. VAN BUREN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the legal representatives of the Marquis de Maison Rouge, and those claiming under him, to institute a suit against the United States, and for other purposes," without amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion of yesterday, directing the Secretary of the Navy to report to the Senate a statement of the allowances for travelling expenses, and the emoluments of the officers of the Navy, and agreed thereto.

On motion, by Mr. BROWN, the select Committee on Roads and Canals were discharged from the resolution of the General Assembly of Indiana, relative to a national road from Wheeling to the Mississippi river; and also from the resolution of the Senate of the 5th January last.

On motion, by Mr. RUGGLES, the Committee of Claims were discharged from the consideration of the several petitions and memorials which have been referred to them, and not reported upon.

On motion, by Mr. RUGGLES, Daniel Brown had leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act explanatory of an act, entitled 'An act for the relief of the officers, volunteers, and other persons, engaged in the late campaign against the Seminole Indians,' passed the 4th of May, 1822, with amendments, in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act making an appropriation for the payment of the claims of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Governor of the State of New York, against the United States;" and no amendment having been made, it was reported to the Senate; and, on the question, "Shall this bill pass to a third reading?" it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 24, nays 4, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benton, Brown, Clayton, Dickerson, Edwards, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lanman, Lowrie, Macon, Noble, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith, Thomas, Van Buren, and Van Dyke.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Chandler, Eaton, and Taylor of Virginia.

The bill from the House of Representatives, "to authorize the legal representatives of the Marquis de Maison Rouge to commence an action in the courts of the United States, to try the validity of his title to lands, the claim to which is disputed by the United States," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. After a discussion of considerable length, in which Messrs. VAN DYKE, DICKERSON, H. JOHNSON, of Louisiana, VAN BUREN, J. S. JOHNSTON of Louisiana, KING of Alabama, LOWRIE, and BROWN, took part, the bill was refused a third reading, 14 in favor of, and 12 against it, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Holmes of Mississippi, Henry Johnson, Josiah S. Johnston, Kelly, King of Alabama, Lowrie, Noble, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith, Thomas, Van Buren, and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Barton, Bell, Brown, Chandler, Clayton, Dickerson, Eaton, Edwards, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Macon, Parrott, and Van Dyke.

So the bill was rejected.

The following Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit to the Senate a report from the Secretary of State, concerning two resolutions of the Senate of the 8th of January and 1st of March last, which had been referred to him.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, May 25, 1824.

The Message and report were read.

The bill from the other House "to enable the claimants to lands within the State of Missouri and the Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Considerable discussion took place on the details of the bill between Messrs. BARTON, LANMAN, LOWRIE, CHANDLER, KELLY, DICKERSON, KING of Alabama, and J. S. JOHNSTON of Louisiana. Mr. LOWRIE moved to amend the bill so as to limit its operation to claims not exceeding one league square, which was agreed to. The bill was then reported to the Senate. Mr. LANMAN moved its indefinite postponement. This motion was opposed by Mr. BENTON, and was not carried. The bill was then passed to a third reading.

The bill from the other House "to authorize the Territory of Florida to open a canal through the public lands, from the river St. John's to the bay of St. Augustine," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Messrs. SMITH, LOWRIE, KING of Alabama, BROWN, and CHANDLER, made some remarks on the subject. Mr. LOWRIE moved the indefinite postponement of the bill, which motion was carried.

The bill from the other House "granting a right of pre-emption to certain actual settlers in that part of the State of Mississippi included in Jackson Courthouse land district, and in that part of the State of Louisiana included in the St. Helena land district," was taken up, and after being discussed by Messrs. LOWRIE, KING of Alabama, and H. JOHNSON of Louisiana, was, on motion of Mr. LOWRIE, indefinitely postponed.

The bill from the other House "to revive and continue in force the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and seventh sections of an act, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," was taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole. Mr. DICKERSON explained the reasons for bringing forward this bill. Its passage was opposed by Messrs. TAYLOR of Virginia, and HOLMES of Maine; and on motion of the latter member, the bill was ordered to lie on the table.

MAY, 1824.

Proceedings.

SENATE.

The following bills from the House of Representatives, and which had been amended in Senate, were severally read the third time, passed, and sent back to the other House for concurrence in the amendments, viz: The bills supplementary to an act, entitled "An act to provide for the correction of errors made in entering lands at the several land offices; changing the mode of surveying the public lands on any river, lake, bayou, or water course; supplementary to an act, entitled an act to incorporate the city of Washington, passed 15th May, 1820, and for other purposes; for the relief of John Mitchell; and to authorize masters of vessels, in certain cases, to clear either at the custom-house at Richmond, or that at Petersburg.

The amendments made by the House of Representatives to the bill from the Senate, explanatory of "An act to provide payment to the volunteers who lost horses in the Seminole war," were read, and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DICKERSON, it was ordered that when the Senate does adjourn, it adjourn to meet again at six o'clock.

At a quarter before five the Senate adjourned.

Six o'clock in the Evening.

The following bills, from the House of Representatives, were severally taken up for consideration, as in Committee of the Whole. Their objects and intentions were stated, by members of the standing committees to which they had been referred. The bills were reported to the Senate, and passed to a third reading, viz: The bill "for the relief of certain distillers, within the United States;" the bill "making appropriations to carry into effect certain treaties;" the bill "making appropriations for the military service of the United States, for the year 1824;" the bill "to regulate the mode of practice in the courts of the United States, within the State of Louisiana;" the bill "reserving to the Wyandot tribe of Indians a certain tract of land, in lieu of another tract of land reserved to them by treaty;" the bill "for the relief of Joseph M. White and William Davidson;" the bill "concerning the pre-emption rights in the Territory of Arkansas;" the bill "to establish an additional land office in the State of Missouri;" the bill "granting a tract of land to the inhabitants of the Parish of Point Coupee, in the State of Louisiana, for certain purposes;" the bill "granting a tract of land to the inhabitants of the Parish of Baton Rouge;" the bill "supplementary to an act providing for the examining of claims to lands situated in that part of the State of Louisiana, lying between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river;" the bill "granting to the town of Tuscaloosa certain lots of land;" the bill "concerning wrecks on the coast of Florida;" the bill "authorizing an appropriation for the Library of Congress;" the bill "to allow salaries to the collectors of the ports of Nantucket and Pensacola, and to abolish the office of surveyor at Pensacola;" the bill "to confer certain powers on the Levy Court of Alexandria, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. LANMAN, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was discharged from the further consideration of sundry petitions, the object of which, he said, had been answered in the general bill, now before Congress, respecting the post offices and post roads.

The bill, from the House of Representatives, "to discontinue certain post offices, and to establish others," was taken up for consideration, in Committee of the Whole. Mr. LANMAN stated, that he had been directed, by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to move the indefinite postponement of this bill—he, accordingly, made that motion. It was carried—20 to 6.

The bill, from the House of Representatives, "to establish Bowdoinham, in the State of Maine; Troy, in the State of New York; and Fairport, in the State of Ohio, as ports of delivery," was taken up for consideration. On motion of Mr. HOLMES, of Maine, it was postponed indefinitely.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the surveying and making of a road from a point in the northwestern boundary of the State of Ohio, near the foot of the Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie, to Detroit, in the Territory of Michigan;" and, no amendment having been made, it was reported to the Senate; and on the question, "Shall this bill be read a third time?" it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 20, nays 8, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barton, Benton, Brown, Dickerson, Findlay, Gaillard, Holmes of Maine, Holmes of Mississippi, J. S. Johnston, Kelly, Lanman, Lloyd of Massachusetts, Noble, Parrott, Ruggles, Seymour, Smith, Taylor of Indiana, Thomas, and Williams.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Chandler, Clayton, Eaton, Edwards, King of Alabama, Lowrie, and Macon.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the resolutions to compensate the messengers to the Senate; and, on motion, they were postponed until to-morrow; and the Senate adjourned, at half past nine o'clock.

WEDNESDAY, May 26.

On motion of Mr. LLOYD, of Massachusetts, the rule which provides that no bill shall receive a third reading before twelve o'clock, was rescinded.

Mr. NOBLE moved that the resolution providing for the purchase of a certain number of copies of the Journals of Congress, from 1774 to 1783, be now taken up for consideration. This motion was supported by the mover, and Mr. TAYLOR, of Virginia; and opposed by Messrs. BROWN and HOLMES, of Maine. The Senate refused to take up the resolution—12 in the affirmative; 13 in the negative.

The bill, entitled "An act making further ap-appropriations for the military service of the United States, for the year 1824," was read the third time as amended, and passed.

The bill, entitled "An act to authorize the building of lighthouses, light vessels, and beacons, therein mentioned, and for other purposes," was read the third time as amended, and passed.

The bill, entitled "An act authorizing the employment of additional clerks, and certain messengers and assistants, and other persons, in the several Departments," was read the third time as amended; and the bill was further amended, by unanimous consent, and passed.

The bill, entitled "An act enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas, to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," was read the third time as amended, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House concur in the amendments to the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John Mitchell," with an amendment; in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to their amendments to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John Mitchell," and concurred therein.

The forty-three following bills from the House of Representatives, viz :

An act to alter the judicial districts of Pennsylvania, and for other purposes ;

An act granting certain lots of ground to the corporation of the city of Mobile, and to certain individuals of said city ;

An act to provide for the sale of lands conveyed to the United States, in certain cases, and for other purposes ;

An act to regulate the fees of the register of wills, in the several counties within the District of Columbia ;

An act for the relief of the corporation of the church of St. Anne, and to authorize the extension of Larned street, in the town of Detroit ;

An act making an appropriation towards the extinguishment of the Quappau title to lands in the Territory of Arkansas ;

An act for the relief of Arthur N. Henly ;

An act for the relief of John Holliday ;

An act for the benefit of the Columbian Institute ;

An act to allow further time to complete the issuing and locating military land warrants ;

An act granting to the counties or parishes of each State and Territory of the United States, in which the public lands are situated, the right of pre-emption to quarter sections of land, for seats of justice, within the same ;

An act providing for the disposition of three several tracts of land in Tuscarawas county, in the State of Ohio, and for other purposes ;

An act for the relief of Samuel Cleveland, junior ;

An act to allow the bounty to vessels employed in the cod fisheries, in certain cases ;

An act to authorize the President to exchange five arpens of land, on the south side of the public lot at Baton Rouge, for an equal quantity of land on the north side of said lot ;

An act to authorize the President of the United States to enter into certain negotiations, relative to lands located under Virginia military land warrants, lying between Ludlow's and Roberts's lines, in the State of Ohio ;

An act further to regulate the inspection of flour in the county of Alexandria ;

An act to revive and extend the term of certain pensions, which have expired by limitation ;

An act to authorize the State of Indiana to open a canal through the public lands, to connect the navigation of the rivers Wabash and the Miami of Lake Erie ;

An act to authorize the issuing of letters patent to Nathaniel Sylvester ;

An act making appropriations for deepening the channel leading into the harbor of Presque Isle, and for repairing Plymouth beach ;

An act granting donations of land to certain actual settlers in the Territory of Florida ;

An act for altering the time for holding the circuit court of the United States, for the fourth circuit in the Maryland district ;

An act appropriating a certain sum of money to Benjamin Huffman, of the State of Indiana ;

An act to alter the judicial districts of Virginia, and for other purposes ;

An act making an appropriation for the payment of the claims of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Governor of the State of New York, against the United States ;

An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange a stock, bearing an interest of five per cent. for certain stocks bearing an interest of six per cent. ;

An act making appropriations to carry into effect certain Indian treaties ;

An act for the relief of certain distillers in the United States ;

An act to regulate the mode of practice in the courts of the United States, for the district of Louisiana ;

An act for the relief of Joseph M. White and William Davidson ;

An act concerning pre-emption rights in the Territory of Arkansas ;

An act granting a tract of land to the inhabitants of the parish of Point Coupee, on certain conditions ;

An act granting a tract of land to the parish of West Baton Rouge, on certain conditions ;

An act supplementary to an act providing for the examination of titles to land, in that part of the State of Louisiana situated between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river ;

An act granting to the corporation of the town of Tuscaloosa certain lots, and privileges over the reservations and commons in said town ;

An act concerning wrecks on the coast of Florida ;

An act to authorize the surveying and making of a road, from a point in the northwestern boundary of the State of Ohio, near the foot of the

MAY, 1824.

Adjournment.

SENATE.

Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie, to Detroit, in the Territory of Michigan ;

An act to allow a salary to the collectors of the districts of Nantucket and Pensacola, and to abolish the office of Surveyor of the district of Pensacola ;

An act authorizing an appropriation for the use of the Library of Congress ;

An act to confer certain powers on the levy court of the county of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes ;

An act to establish an additional land office in the State of Missouri ; and

An act reserving to the Wyandot tribe of Indians a certain tract of land, in lieu of a reservation made to them by treaty, were severally read a third time, and passed.

The several resolutions heretofore reported by the Committee on the Contingent Fund, providing payment for the assistants employed by the Sergeant-at-Arms to the Senate, were taken up for consideration, and agreed to.

The resolution introduced on leave, yesterday, by Mr. EATON, directing the Secretary of the Senate to pay, from the contingent fund, to the artist employed in constructing an allegorical ornament for a clock for the Senate, the further sum of $1000, to enable him to proceed in the work, was again read for consideration.

Some remarks on the subject were submitted by Messrs. EATON, MACON, LANMAN, VAN DYKE, HOLMES, of Maine, TAYLOR, of Virginia, and SMITH ; and the resolution was refused a third reading.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House concur in all the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the building of lighthouses, light vessels, and beacons, therein mentioned, and for other purposes," except the first, second, fourth, and fifth ; to which they disagree.

The Senate proceeded to consider their amendments to the last mentioned bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives and receded therefrom.

After the consideration of Executive business, the Senate adjourned to 7 o'clock, P. M.

Seven o'clock in the Evening.

On motion, by Mr. BARTON, the Committee on Public Lands were discharged from the consideration of all subjects referred to them and not reported upon.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act supplementary to an act of Congress, passed on the 13th day of June, 1812, entitled 'An act making further provision for settling the claims to land in the Territory of Missouri,' with amendments ; in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill last mentioned, and concurred therein.

After the consideration of Executive business, the Senate adjourned to eight o'clock to-morrow morning.

THURSDAY, May 27.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House have passed a resolution for the appointment of a joint committee, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him, that, unless he may have any further communication to make, they are ready to adjourn ; in which they request the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the said resolution, and concurred therein ; and Messrs. SMITH and MACON were appointed the committee on the part of the Senate.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House, having finished the business before them, are about to adjourn.

Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that the Senate, having finished the Legislative business before them, are about to adjourn.

After the consideration of Executive business, the PRESIDENT adjourned the Senate sine die.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,

AT THE FIRST SESSION OF THE EIGHTEENTH CONGRESS, BEGUN AT THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, MONDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1823.

MONDAY, December 1, 1823.

At 12 o'clock, precisely, the Clerk called the House to order, and, the roll being called, the following members of the House of Representatives appeared and took their seats, to wit :

From Maine.—William Burleigh, Joshua Cushman, Ebenezer Herrick, David Kidder, Enoch Lincoln, and Jeremiah O'Brien.

From New Hampshire.—Matthew Harvey, Arthur Livermore, Aaron Matson, William Plumer, Jr., and Thomas Whipple, Jr.

From Massachusetts.—Samuel C. Allen, John Bailey, Francis Baylies, Benjamin W. Crowninshield, Henry W. Dwight, Timothy Fuller, Aaron Hobart, Samuel Lathrop, John Locke, Jeremiah Nelson, John Reed, Jonas Sibley, and Daniel Webster.

From Rhode Island.—Job Durfee, and Samuel Eddy.

From Connecticut.—Noyes Barber, Samuel A. Foot, Ansel Sterling, Ebenezer Stoddard, Gideon Tomlinson, and Lemuel Whitman.

From Vermont.—William C. Bradley, Daniel A. A. Buck, Samuel C. Crafts, Rollin C. Mallary, and Charles Rich.

From New York.—John W. Cady, Churchill C. Cambreleng, Lot Clark, Ela Collins, Hector Craig, Rowland Day, Justin Dwinell, Lewis Eaton, Charles A. Foote, Joel Frost, Moses Hayden, James L. Hogeboom, Lemuel Jenkins, Elisha Litchfield, Dudley Marvin, Henry C. Martindale, John Richards, Robert R. Rose, Peter Sharpe, Henry R. Storrs, James Strong, John W. Taylor, Egbert Ten Eyck, Jacob Tyson, William Van Wyck, Stephen Van Rensselaer, Isaac Williams, Isaac Wilson, Silas Wood, and William Woods.

From New Jersey.—George Cassedy, Lewis Condict, Daniel Garrison, George Holcombe, James Matlack, and Samuel Swan.

From Pennsylvania.—James Allison, Samuel Breck, John Brown, James Buchanan, Samuel Edwards, William Cox Ellis, Patrick Farrelly, John Findlay, Walter Forward, Robert Harris, Joseph Hemphill, Samuel D. Ingham, George Kremer, Samuel McKean, James S. Mitchell, Thomas Patterson, George Plumer, Thomas J. Rogers, John Tod, Daniel Udree, Isaac Wayne, and James Wilson.

From Delaware.—Louis McLane.

From Maryland.—William Hayward, Jr., Joseph

Kent, John Lee, Peter Little, Isaac McKim, and George E. Mitchell.

From Virginia.—Mark Alexander, William S. Archer, William Lee Ball, Philip P. Barbour, John S. Barbour, Robert S. Garnett, Joseph Johnson, Jabez Leftwich, William McCoy, Charles F. Mercer, Thomas Newton, Arthur Smith, William Smith, Alexander Smyth, Andrew Stevenson, James Stephenson, George Tucker, and Jared Williams.

From North Carolina.—Henry Conner, John Culpepper, Weldon N. Edwards, Alfred M. Gatlin, Charles Hooks, John Long, Willie P. Mangum, Romulus M. Saunders, Richard D. Spaight, Robert B. Vance, and Lewis Williams.

From South Carolina.—Robert Campbell, Joseph Gist, James Hamilton, Jr., George McDuffie, Joel R. Poinsett, Starling Tucker, and John Wilson.

From Georgia.—Joel Abbot, George Cary, Thomas W. Cobb, Alfred Cuthbert, John Forsyth, and Wiley Thompson.

From Kentucky.—Richard A. Buckner, Henry Clay, Robert P. Henry, Francis Johnson, John T. Johnson, Robert P. Letcher, Thomas P. Moore, Philip Thompson, David Trimble, David White, and Charles A. Wickliffe.

From Tennessee.—Adam R. Alexander, Robert Allen, John Blair, John Cocke, Samuel Houston, Jacob C. Isacks, James B. Reynolds, James T. Sandford, and James Standefer.

From Ohio.—Mordecai Bartley, Philemon Beecher, John W. Campbell, James W. Gazlay, Duncan McArthur, William McLean, John Patterson, John Sloane, Joseph Vance, Samuel F. Vinton, Elisha Whittlesey, William Wilson, and John C. Wright.

From Louisiana.—William L. Brent.

From Indiana.—John Test.

From Illinois.—Daniel P. Cook.

From Alabama.—John McKee, and Gabriel Moore.

From Missouri.—John Scott.

From Arkansas Territory.—Henry W. Conway.

After the Clerk had finished calling the members of States, and a quorum was ascertained to be present,

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, rose and remarked, that, it having been publicly announced that he was considered a candidate for the Speaker's Chair, and several Representatives having avowed their intention to vote in his favor ; for the purpose of correcting any mistake upon this subject which might exist either here or elsewhere he thought proper to state that he was not a candidate, and that, if his friends consulted his wishes, they would not, on this occasion, support him for the office. This frank declaration, he said, appeared to be due to the House and to those gentlemen who were understood to be candidates, as well as to himself.

H. OF R.

Election of Speaker, &c.

DECEMBER, 1823.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

The House then proceeded, by ballot, to the election of a Speaker, and, upon an examination of the ballots, it appeared that HENRY CLAY, one of the Representatives from the State of Kentucky, had 139 votes, and that PHILIP P. BARBOUR, one of the Representatives from the State of Virginia, had received 42 votes.

Mr. CLAY was, therefore, declared to be duly elected, and conducted to the Speaker's Chair, from whence he made acknowledgments to the House in the following terms:

GENTLEMEN: I pray you to accept my most respectful thanks for the honor you have just conferred on me. The station of Speaker of this House has been always justly considered as one of great respectability, as well as of high responsibility. But, at the present period, when we are assembled under a new census, with our number considerably enlarged, and the highest interests of a greatly augmented population committed to our charge, it has acquired much additional importance, which requires from the favored object of your selection his most grateful acknowledgments and the expression of the profoundest sensibility. The principles which should regulate the execution of the duties of the incumbent of the Chair are not difficult to comprehend, although their application to particular instances is often extremely delicate and perplexing. They enjoin promptitude and impartiality in deciding the various questions of order as they arise; firmness and dignity in his deportment towards the House; patience, good temper, and courtesy, towards the individual members; and the best arrangement and distribution of the talent of the House, in its numerous subdivisions, for the despatch of the public business, and the fair exhibition of every subject presented for consideration. They especially require of him, in those moments of agitation from which no deliberative assembly is always entirely exempt, to remain cool and unshaken amidst all the storms of debate, carefully guarding the preservation of the permanent laws and rules of the House from being sacrificed to temporary passions, prejudices, or interests. It is on such occasions as these, too, that the Chair stands most in need of your support, of your candor, of your liberality, of your unbiassed judgment. I am not so presumptuous, gentlemen, as to promise you that I shall perform the arduous duties of which I have presented an imperfect sketch. All I dare say is, that I will exert an anxious, faithful, and unremitting endeavor to fulfil the expectations by which I have been so much honored. And may we not indulge the hope, that, with the blessing of Divine Providence, all our deliberations and all our proceedings may tend to sustain the dignity of the House, to maintain the honor and character of the country, and to advance the public welfare and happiness.

The oath to support the Constitution of the United States, as prescribed by law, was then administered to the Speaker by Mr. NEWTON, one of the Representatives from Virginia, and the same oath (or affirmation) was then administered by the Speaker to all the other members present.

A motion was then made by Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, that MATTHEW ST. CLAIR CLARKE, Clerk to the late House of Representatives, be appointed Clerk to this House; and the motion was agreed to, unanimously.

The oath to support the Constitution of the United States, together with the oath of office, as prescribed by the act aforesaid, were then administered to the Clerk by the Speaker.

On motion of Mr. NEWTON, it was Resolved, unanimously, That THOMAS DUNN be appointed Sergeant-at-Arms, BENJAMIN BURCH Doorkeeper, and JOHN OSWALD DUNN Assistant Doorkeeper to this House; and that they severally give their attendance accordingly.

On motion of Mr. TOMLINSON, it was Ordered, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform them that a quorum of this House have assembled, and have elected HENRY CLAY their Speaker, and that this House is now ready to proceed to business; and that the Clerk do go with the said message.

On motion of Mr. NEWTON,

Ordered, That the daily hour to which the House shall stand adjourned be twelve o'clock until otherwise ordered.

On motion of Mr. LITTLE,

Resolved, That the Rules and Orders established by the late House of Representatives be deemed and taken to be the Rules and Orders of proceeding to be observed in this House, until a revision or alteration of the same shall have taken place.

On motion of Mr. NEWTON,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed on the part of this House to join such committee as have been or may be appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses have assembled, and are ready to receive any communications he may be pleased to make to them.

Ordered, That Mr. NEWTON and Mr. VAN RENSSLAER be the committee on the part of the House, and that the Clerk do acquaint the Senate therewith.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts,

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to cause the members to be furnished with such newspapers as they respectively may elect; the expense of each member not to exceed the price of three daily papers.

A message was received from the Senate informing the House that a quorum of the Senate had assembled, and was ready to proceed to business; and that they have concurred in the resolution for the appointment of a joint committee to wait on the President of the United States, &c.

And then the House adjourned.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Standing Committees.

H. OF R.

TUESDAY, December 2.

Several other members, to wit: from Pennsylvania, PHILIP S. MARKLEY and ANDREW STEWART; from Maryland, RAPHAEL NEALE, JOHN S. SPENCE, and HENRY R. WARFIELD; from Virginia, JOHN RANDOLPH; from North Carolina, HUTCHINS G. BURTON and THOMAS H. HALL; from South Carolina, JOHN CARTER and ANDREW R. GOVAN; from Ohio, THOMAS R. ROSS; and from Indiana, JONATHAN JENNINGS and WILLIAM PRINCE, appeared, produced their credentials, were qualified, and took their seats.

Mr. NEWTON, from the joint committee, appointed yesterday to wait on the President of the United States, reported that the committee had performed the duties of their appointment, and that the President answered that he would make a communication, in writing, to the two Houses this day.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement, comprising the names of the persons whose accounts have been settled agreeably to the act of the first of March last, entitled "An act in addition to the act entitled 'An act for the prompt settlement of public accounts;'" which letter and statement were ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House another letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement, showing the number of Revolutionary pensioners on the rolls of the several States and Territories of the United States, made in conformity to a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the first of March last; which were ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Clerk, covering four statements, prepared in obedience to the resolution of Congress, of the first of March last, "requiring from the Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, an annual statement of the expenditures from the contingent fund of the two Houses;" which letter and statements were ordered to lie on the table.

A message from the Senate informed the House that they have passed a resolution authorizing the appointment of two Chaplains, of different denominations, during the present session, one by each House, who shall interchange weekly; in which resolutions the Senate ask the concurrence of this House.

The said resolution was read, and concurred in by the House.

On motion of Mr. LATHROP, it was ordered that this House will, on Monday next, the 8th instant, proceed to the appointment of a Chaplain to Congress on their part.

A Message was then received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, which was read, and committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and six thousand copies thereof ordered to be printed for the use of the members of this House. [For this Message see Senate proceedings, ante p. 12.]

The House then adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, December 3.

Two other members, to wit: from New York, SAMUEL LAWRENCE; and from Alabama, GEORGE W. OWEN, appeared, and produced their credentials.

RICHARD K. CALL, also appeared, and produced his credentials, as the Delegate from the Territory of Florida.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from Samuel R. Overton and Joseph M. White, two of the commissioners appointed to ascertain titles and claims to lands in West Florida, asking for an extension of the time to the first of September next, to enable them to complete the duties of their appointment; which letter was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR, it was ordered that the call for petitions be dispensed with, and that the several Standing Committees be now appointed, in pursuance of the rules and orders of the House: Whereupon, the Speaker appointed the following Standing Committees:

Of Elections.—Mr. Sloane, Mr. Mallary, Mr. Ball, Mr. Tucker, of South Carolina, Mr. Standefer, Mr. Hall, of North Carolina, and Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky.

Of Ways and Means.—Mr. McLane, of Delaware, Mr. Ingham, Mr. Thompson, of Georgia, Mr. Andrew Stevenson, Mr. Cambreleng, Mr. McDuffie, and Mr. McKim.

Of Claims.—Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, Mr. McCoy, Mr. Rich, Mr. Litchfield, Mr. Matson, Mr. Whittlesey, and Mr. Isaacs.

On Public Lands.—Mr. Rankin, Mr. Scott, Mr. Cook, Mr. Jennings, Mr. Strong, Mr. Vinton, and Mr. Bradley.

On Commerce.—Mr. Newton, Mr. Tomlinson, Mr. Abbot, Mr. Durfee, Mr. Dwight, Mr. Mangum, and Mr. Morgan.

On the Post Office and Post Roads.—Mr. Francis, Johnson, Mr. Hooks, Mr. Stoddard, Mr. Wilson, of South Carolina, Mr. McKean, Mr. Alexander, of Tennessee, and Mr. Bartley.

For the District of Columbia.—Mr. Kent, Mr. Neale, Mr. Matlack, Mr. Findlay, Mr. Alexander, of Virginia, Mr. Gazlay, and Mr. Blair.

On the Judiciary.—Mr. Webster, Mr. P. P. Barbour, Mr. Plumer, of New Hampshire, Mr. Burton, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Saunders, and Mr. Brent.

On Pensions and Revolutionary Claims.—Mr. Little, Mr. Eddy, Mr. Allen, of Tennessee, Mr. William Smith, Mr. Culpepper, Mr. Plumer, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Udree.

On Public Expenditures.—Mr. Cobb, Mr. Clarke, of New York, Mr. Crafts, Mr. Markley, Mr. Gist, Mr. Sandford, and Mr. John S. Barbour.

On Private Land Claims.—Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, Mr. Moore, of Alabama, Mr. Sterling, Mr. Prince, Mr. Garrison, Mr. Locke, and Mr. Williams, of New York.

On Manufactures.—Mr. Tod, Mr. Forward, Mr. Condict, Mr. Conner, Mr. Wright, Mr. Craig, and Mr. Marvin.

On Agriculture.—Mr. Van Rensselaer, Mr. Bay-lies, Mr. Garnett, Mr. Harris, of Pennsylvania, Mr. Rose, Mr. Whitman, and Mr. Patterson, of Pennsylvania.

On Indian Affairs.—Mr. Cocke, Mr. Mitchell, of Pennsylvania, Mr. Williams, of Virginia, Mr. McKee, Mr. McLean, of Ohio, Mr. Ten Eyck, and Mr. Gatlin.

On Foreign Affairs.—Mr. Forsyth, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Storrs, Mr. Trimble, Mr. Archer, Mr. Farrelly and Mr. Poinsett.

On Military Affairs.—Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Mitchell, of Maryland, Mr. McArthur, Mr. Houston, Mr. Vance, of Ohio, and Mr. Campbell, of South Carolina.

On Naval Affairs.—Mr. Crowninshield, Mr. Fuller, Mr. Randolph, Mr. Warfield, Mr. Cady, Mr. Holcombe, and Mr. Harvey.

On Revisal and Unfinished Business.—Mr. Ross, Mr. Lathrop, and Mr. Brown, of Pennsylvania.

On Accounts.—Mr. Allen, of Massachusetts, Mr. Swan, and Mr. Letcher.

On Expenditures in the Department of State.—Mr. Wood, Mr. Barber, of Connecticut, and Mr. Bailey.

On the Expenditures in the Department of the Treasury.—Mr. Edwards of North Carolina, Mr. Hayward, and Mr. Burleigh.

On the Expenditures in the Department of War.—Mr. Tucker of Virginia, Mr. Lincoln, and Mr. White.

On the Expenditures in the Department of the Navy.—Mr. Edwards of Pennsylvania, Mr. Hobart, and Mr. O'Brien.

On the Expenditures in the Department of the Post Office.—Mr. Van Wyck, Mr. Wilson of Ohio, and Mr. Lawrence.

On the Expenditures on the Public Buildings.—Mr. Nelson, Mr. Ellis, and Mr. Moore of Kentucky.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR, it was ordered, that, when the House adjourns, it will adjourn to meet again on Friday the 5th instant.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CONDIOT in the Chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the Message of the President of the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, submitted the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That so much of the Message of the President of the United States as concerns our political relations with other independent Governments, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to commerce; to the erection of piers in the Delaware bay, and the removal of obstructions to the entrance of the harbor of the port of Presque Isle, be referred to the Committee of Commerce.

3. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to a revision of the tariff, with a view to the encouragement of manufactures, be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

4. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the army, the militia, the ordnance department, the military academy, fortifications, armories, and arsenals, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the organization of the naval establishment, and the suppression of piracy, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

6. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the revenue, and the redemption of the public debt, be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

7. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as concerns the Post Office Department, and the revision of the laws relating to the same, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

8. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the settlement of the public accounts, be referred to the Committee on Public Expenditures.

9. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as concerns our relations with certain Indian tribes, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

10. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the suppression of the African slave trade, be referred to a select committee.

11. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the Cumberland road, be referred to a select committee.

12. Resolved, That so much of the President's Message as relates to the connexion of the waters of the Chesapeake and Ohio, by means of a canal, be referred to a select committee.

13. Resolved, That the said select committees have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

These resolutions were severally agreed to; when the committee rose and reported them to the House, and, the same being again read at the Clerk's table, were severally concurred in by the House.

MESSRS. GOVAN, LIVERMORE, HERRICK, TEST, WAYNE, SPAIGHT, and EATON, were appointed a committee upon the suppression of the African slave trade, in pursuance of the tenth resolution.

MESSRS. HEMPHILL, BECHER, JOHN T. JOHNSON, STEWART, JOHNSON of Virginia, REYNOLDS, and OWEN, were appointed a committee on the subject of the Cumberland road, in pursuance of the eleventh resolution.

MESSRS. MERCER, BRECK, WOODS, LEE, BUCKNER, J. STEPHENSON, and PATTERSON of Ohio, were appointed a committee upon the subject of the connexion of the waters of the Chesapeake and Ohio, in pursuance of the twelfth resolution.

Adjourned until Friday next.

FRIDAY, December 5.

Mr. LAWRENCE of New York, Mr. OWEN of Alabama, and Mr. CALL, delegate from Florida, were severally qualified, and took their seats.

Mr. FARRELY presented several petitions from inhabitants of the county of Erie, and parts adjacent, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying provision may be made for removing the bar which obstructs the entrance into the harbor of Presque Isle.—Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FORSYTH presented a petition, (in the French language,) of Gabrielle Emelie de Beauregard, the widow of a French officer, of the rank of captain, in the Army of the United States, in the Revolutionary war, setting forth that she is in poverty, with six children; that she makes no claim, but submits her case to the liberality of Congress.—Referred to the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Mother of Commodore Perry.

H. OF R.

Mr. CONDRICK presented a memorial of sundry inhabitants of the State of New Jersey, praying that further protection and encouragement may be extended to the manufacturing interest of the country, and that an excise duty may be imposed on domestic distilled spirits.—Referred.

Mr. LIVERMORE, of New Hampshire, offered for consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of directing the United States mail to be carried in the day-time, only, except when transported by water.

In support of this resolution, Mr. L. remarked, that his object was to secure the mail from depredations, several alarming instances of which had recently occurred. He was persuaded that, while the adoption of the measure proposed in the resolve would protect, it would not retard the mail; because, if accelerated as it might be, it would be carried as far in twelve hours, by daylight, as now in the twenty-four, including the night.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT, of Connecticut, moved the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of "regulating (by law) the commerce among the several States," under the 8th section of the 1st article of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. FOOT observed that collision had taken place between several of the States, already, in relation to this subject; and, fearing that more might occur, he was desirous of providing a remedy—with which view he had proposed this resolution.

The resolution was agreed to without opposition.

On motion of Mr. McDUFFIE, of South Carolina, it was resolved that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of recommending to the several States the propriety of amending the Constitution of the United States in such manner that the mode of electing members of the House of Representatives in Congress may be uniform throughout the United States; also, that the mode of choosing Electors for President and Vice President of the United States may be, in like manner, uniform; and, also, that the election of the said officers may, in no event, devolve upon the House of Representatives.

Messrs. McDUFFIE, ALEXANDER SMYTH, REED, STORRS, BUCHANAN, WICKLIFFE, and CARY, were appointed a committee pursuant to the above resolution.

Mr. McKIM submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to furnish to this House a statement of all sick or disabled seamen, who may have been sent to the infirmary or hospitals at the port of Liverpool, in Great Britain, under the direction of the American consul at that port; as, also, the amount of money retained or received by said consul from the master or consignee of every American vessel arriving at said port, from the first of September, 1821, to the first of September, 1823, for each sick or disabled seaman sent to the infirmary or hospitals.

The resolution was laid on the table one day, under the rule.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Georgia, moved that the House do come to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the memorial of the Legislature of Georgia, relative to the claims of certain detachments of militia of that State, for services performed in the years 1792, 1793, and 1794; together with the accompanying documents, now on the files of this House, be referred to a select committee, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was read, and, on motion of Mr. COCKE, was amended, by striking out the words "a select committee," and inserting "the Committee on Military Affairs."

The question was then taken to agree to the resolution, as amended, and passed in the affirmative.

On motion of Mr. JENNINGS, it was Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the purpose of effecting a further extinguishment of Indian title to lands in the State of Indiana.

MOTHER OF COMMODORE PERRY.

The following resolution was offered by Mr. HAMILTON, of South Carolina:

Resolved, That the Naval Committee be instructed to inquire into the justice and expediency of allowing Mrs. Sarah Perry, the mother of the late Captain Oliver Hazard Perry, a pension during her natural life.

Mr. HAMILTON mentioned, in offering this resolution, that a bill embracing this object had been reported at the last session of Congress, but not acted on from the want of time. His present object was to revive that bill.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky, not meaning to object to this resolution, suggested the propriety of including in it the case of Mrs. Lawrence, the widow of the gallant captain of that name.

Mr. HAMILTON said he thought that though the cases of the venerable Mrs. Perry and the widow of the lamented Lawrence, were in many respects similar, yet there were some points of difference in them which rendered it inexpedient to blend them together.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, of New York, disclaiming all opposition to the object of the resolution, an object in which he feelingly and fully concurred, was of opinion that the cases of Mrs. Lawrence and Mrs. Perry might better have a separate consideration. The case of Mrs. Perry required a distinct act of legislation—that of Mrs. Lawrence did not, being one of a class of cases heretofore regularly provided for by law, her husband having fallen in battle. But it should be remembered that, through some inadvertence, the act, providing pensions for the widows and orphans of naval officers killed in battle, was omitted to be revived at the last session of Congress, previous to which it had expired. The fund from which that relief was dispensed was a sacred one; it had been raised out of the Navy itself, and it should ever be held sacred to the object for which it was raised. He intended, on Monday, to move for a revival of the act, and if, as he trusted, it should be revived, he cherished a strong hope that the Committee of Claims would put the venerable lady who was the subject of the present resolution, also, on the pension list. The fund was ample to embrace both classes of cases.

The resolution was adopted; and the House adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, December 8.

Another member, to wit: JOHN HERKIMER, from the State of New York, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat.

GABRIEL RICHARD also appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat as the delegate from the Territory of Michigan.

Mr. WEBSTER presented a petition of the manufacturers of wool, in the State of Massachusetts, praying that an additional duty of $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. may be imposed on foreign woollen manufactures; which petition was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. CONWAY presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, praying that an appropriation may be made for the purpose of extinguishing the title of the Quapaw tribe of Indians to certain lands in that Territory.—Referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. STEWART presented a petition of William Pew, of Pennsylvania, a soldier of the Revolution, praying for a pension.

Mr. FORSYTH presented a petition of Lewis Joseph de Beaulieu, late a captain in Count Pulaski's Legion, in the Revolutionary army, praying for an increase of the pension granted to him by the Revolutionary Congress, for gallant services and numerous wounds received in battle.—Referred to the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. BRENT presented a petition of Le Peltier de la Houssaye, Chevalier de la Houssaye, and Octave de la Houssaye, on behalf of themselves and the residue of the heirs and representatives of Louis de la Houssaye, praying that their title to a tract of land in the State of Louisiana may be confirmed.—Referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The petition of Mrs. Julia Lawrence, widow of the late Captain Lawrence, and of Penelope Denny, mother of Lieutenant Denny, who fell in the pirate expedition, heretofore presented, were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented a memorial from sundry insurance companies and merchants, of the city of Philadelphia, setting forth that, in the year 1807, they embarked, or assumed the responsibilities of those who had embarked, a large amount of property on board of vessels, solely owned by citizens of the United States, and destined for Antwerp, at that time a port of France; that the vessels were captured by British cruisers and sent into England, where they were speedily released, and proceeded to Antwerp, which port they reached in safety; but, immediately after their arrival, vessels and cargoes were put under sequestration, upon the pretext of a violation of the Berlin Decree; that the property was not libelled, nor was there any judicial proceeding had in relation to it. It was, however, sold by order of the French Government, and has been totally lost to the memorialists; that they have now been nearly fifteen years unlawfully deprived of their property, and they now confidently appeal to the Constitutional guardians of their rights, and pray that their case may be taken into consideration, and that such relief may be granted to them as in the wisdom of Congress may seem just and proper.

Mr. H. also presented a memorial, similar in most respects from sundry other merchants of the city of Philadelphia, who, in the year 1809, shipped a large amount of property for Saint Sebastian, in Spain, where, upon its arrival, it was seized by French officers, and has become wholly lost to the memorialists.

The SPEAKER presented a petition of Parmenio Adams, contesting the election and return of Isaac Wilson, as one of the members of this House, for the State of New York, and praying to be admitted to a seat in the place of said Wilson.—Referred to the Committee of Elections.

On motion of Mr. JENNINGS, the petition of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, respecting the courts of the United States in said State, heretofore presented on the 27th of January, 1823, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONWAY presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, praying that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may be directed to furnish the government of said Territory with a list, showing the military bounty lands in said Territory, and to whom and when granted.—Referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, which was read, and is as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

By an act of the last session of Congress, it was made the duty of the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust and settle the accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Governor of the State of New York, on principles of equity and justice, subject to the revision and final decision of the President of the United States. The accounting officers have, in compliance with this act, reported to me a balance of thirty-five thousand one hundred and ninety dollars, in favor of Governor Tompkins, which report I have had under consideration, together with his claim to an additional allowance, and should have decided on the same before the present time, had I not delayed my decision at his request. From the view which I have taken of the subject, I am satisfied, considering all the circumstances of the case, that a larger sum ought to be allowed him than that reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury. No appropriation, however, having been made by the act, and it appearing, by recent information from him, that the sum reported would afford him an essential accommodation at this time, the subject is submitted to the consideration of Congress, with a view to that object.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Commissioner to Greece.

H. or R.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 7, 1823.

The Message was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. McKIM's resolution calling on the Department of State for information respecting the moneys paid to infirmaries or hospitals for sick and disabled seamen, submitted on Friday last, was called up, and, after a short explanation from Mr. McK., was adopted.

On motion of Mr. BRENT, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the laws of the United States as to abolish "imprisonment for debt."

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the policy and expediency of establishing "a Criminal Code" for the government of the United States.

On motion of Mr. BEECHER, the Committee on the Cumberland Road were instructed to inquire into the expediency of further extending the Cumberland Road, by opening and making the same from Wheeling to Zanesville, in the State of Ohio.

Mr. OWEN moved that the House do come to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending a Circuit Court of the United States to the State of Alabama.

The resolution being read—

Mr. CALL moved to amend the same by adding thereto "and the Territory of Florida;" which motion to amend being decided in the negative—

Mr. RANKIN moved to amend the same by striking out the words "to the State of Alabama," and inserting "to those States in which no Circuit Court has been established."

The resolution was then ordered to lie on the table, and the House proceeded to the election of a Chaplain to Congress for the present session, on their part, and, upon an examination of the second ballot, it appeared that the Rev. HENRY B. BASCOM, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was duly elected.

COMMISSIONER TO GREECE.

Mr. WEBSTER, of Massachusetts, submitted, for consideration, the following:

Resolved, That provision ought to be made, by law, for defraying the expense incident to the appointment of an agent, or commissioner, to Greece, whenever the President shall deem it expedient to make such appointment.

In offering the resolution, Mr. WEBSTER stated, it was far from being his wish, in any manner, to commit the House in this or any of the political contests of Europe; but the President of the United States, having, in his Message to Congress, not only expressed a belief that the Greek nation, in its present struggle with its oppressors, had the good wishes of the whole civilized world, but also advanced the opinion that the Turkish dominion over that country was lost forever; he thought that, if such were the fact, it was important that Congress should act upon the subject. The United States, he said, had diverse interests in the Mediterranean, which might be seriously affected, more or less, by the course of events in that quarter. The main object he had in view, he confessed, was to obtain from this House an expression, responsive to the sentiment of the Message, in reference to the sacrifices and sufferings of that heroic people—sacrifices and sufferings which ought to excite the sympathy of every liberal minded man in Europe as well as in this country. But, whatever might be the case with other nations, we certainly ought not to be restrained from expressing, with freedom, what are our views in relation to the Greek cause, so far as it may be done without committing ourselves in the contest. And he really did hope that we should show to the world, that there is, at least, one Government which does entertain a proper view of that barbarous despotism which, under the eyes of Europe, has been permitted, by a system of the foulest atrocity, to attempt to crush an interesting christian nation. He did not desire that the resolution should be at present acted upon, but simply that it lie on the table for the consideration and deliberate reflection of this House.

The resolution was laid on the table, according to Mr. WEBSTER's motion, in preference to the suggestion of Mr. FOOTE, to refer it to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and of Mr. FARRELY, to refer it to the Committee of Foreign Relations.

On motion of Mr. LITTLE, it was ordered that the subject of Revolutionary Pensions, under the acts of March 18, 1818, and May 1, 1820, be referred to a select committee; and Messrs. EDWARDS, of North Carolina, KREMER, KIDDER, ROBERT B. VANCE, CASSEDY, HOGEBOOM, and ARTHUR SMITH, were appointed the said committee.

TUESDAY, December 9.

Two other members, to wit: from the State of Maine, STEPHEN LONGFELLOW; and from the State of Virginia, WILLIAM C. RIVES: appeared, were qualified, and took their seats.

Mr. BAYLIES presented a memorial of the citizens of New Bedford, in the State of Massachusetts, exhibiting a view of the languishing state of the spermaceti whale fishery, and praying that an additional duty may be imposed on tallow and tallow candles, upon their importation into the United States, by way "of protection of the fisheries, and of the agricultural interest of the country," which memorial was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Mr. SIBLEY presented a memorial of sundry inhabitants of the district of Norfolk, in the State of Massachusetts, contesting the election and return of John Bailey, as one of the members of this House, from that State, on the ground that he was not an inhabitant of the State at the time of his election, and praying that the seat of said Bailey may be declared vacant; which memorial was referred to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. CAMBRELENG presented a memorial of the tallow-chandlers and soap-boilers of the city of New York, combatting the representations contained in the memorial presented this day from the citizens of New Bedford, upon the subject of the sperm whale fishery, and the importation of tallow and tallow candles, and declaring that the said representations are fallacious; and stating that they are entirely satisfied with the duty, as it now stands, on foreign tallow and tallow candles; yet, if any alteration be determined on, they pray that tallow may be admitted free of duty, as most, if not all other, raw materials are now admitted.

Mr. STORRS presented a memorial of the persons engaged in manufactures in the county of Oneida, in the State of New York, praying that efficient measures may be devised and adopted, to protect the manufacturers of cotton goods from the hostility of foreign manufacturers and capitalists.

Mr. GOVAN presented a memorial of sundry inhabitants of Richland district, in the State of South Carolina, in opposition to any alteration or increase of the tariff of duties on foreign manufactures, by way of protection to domestic manufactures.

Ordered, That the said memorials be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. JENNINGS presented a petition of Eliza Dill, one of the daughters of the late Major General Arthur St. Clair, of the Revolutionary army, on behalf of herself and sisters, praying to be allowed and paid the amount which she conceives to be equitably and justly due to the estate of her deceased father, on account of personal services rendered, and advances made for the public account, in the war of the Revolution.

On motion of Mr. COOK, the petition of James Mitchell to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the accompanying documents, were referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG,

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of continuing pensions to the widows, or to the orphans of all officers, seamen, and marines, who may have been slain in the public or private armed vessels of the United States, or who may have died of wounds received while in the service of their country; and to all other widows or orphans, who have been placed upon the navy pension roll by special acts of Congress, and of authorizing the payment of such sums as may be due those widows and orphans whose pensions may have been suspended.

Resolved, That the said committee be further instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting pensions to Lydia Allen and Penelope Denny.

On motion of Mr. STRONG, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the propriety of giving concurrent jurisdiction to the supreme or superior court of law of the respective States, in cases arising under the act, entitled "An act to extend the privilege of obtaining patents for useful inventions and discoveries, and to enlarge and define the penalties for violating the rights of patentees."

Mr. HEMPHILL presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That the subject of roads and canals be referred to a select committee.

On this resolution the House divided. It was agreed to, 86 votes to 77, and a committee ordered to be appointed accordingly; and Messrs. HEMPHILL, CUTHBERT, SHARPE, STEWART, HENRY, HERKIMER, and RIVES, were appointed the committee.

On motion of Mr. CALL, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to the Territory of Florida, a tract of twelve hundred and eighty acres of land, at the point designated for the permanent seat of government in said Territory: And further, to inquire into the expediency of granting to the cities of Pensacola and St. Augustine certain public lots within the limits of said cities, respectively.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing or modifying an act entitled "An act to lessen the compensation of marshals, clerks, and attorneys, in the cases therein mentioned."

On motion of Mr. JENNINGS, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of reserving from sale a portion of the public lands, through which a canal may be constructed to unite the navigable waters of the rivers Wabash and the Miami of Lake Erie, and to grant a portion of such land for the purpose of constructing such canal.

Mr. BRENT submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to this House, all the papers, books, and reports which have been forwarded by the several Boards of Commissioners and registers of land titles in relation to the adjustment of land claims derived from the French and Spanish authorities, situated in that part of the State of Louisiana which constituted the late Territory of Orleans.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House, whether the report of the late register of the land office at Opelousas, in Louisiana, upon the land claims submitted to his consideration by the act of Congress, approved 11th May, 1820, has been received, and, if not, of the cause and reasons of the delay of the said register in making said report.

Ordered, That the foregoing resolutions lie on the table one day.

On motion of Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire,

DECEMBER, 1823.

Public Lands—Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing costs in cases where damages may be recovered for the violation of the rights of patentees under the several acts concerning the issuing of patents for useful discoveries and inventions.

On motion of Mr. WHIPPLE, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for an additional number of quartermasters and assistants, to be employed in the Quartermaster General's department of the Army of the United States, who shall be taken from the line of the army.

PUBLIC LANDS.

On motion of Mr. BRENT, it was—

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reviving the seventh section of an act, entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts for the adjustment of land claims in the State of Louisiana," approved 11th May, 1820, in relation to back concessions, and to extend its provisions so as to embrace every claim confirmed by the United States, whether it be situated upon a water course or not.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be directed to inquire into the expediency of causing patents to issue, in the mode pointed out by law, to persons whose claims to lands, town, or village lots, in the State of Louisiana, have been confirmed by the several boards of commissioners, or by acts of Congress, agreeably to the surveys already made, in all cases where said surveys have been made; and in all cases where said surveys have not been made, as soon thereafter as the same shall be surveyed and returned to the proper authorities.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be directed to inquire into the expediency of offering the public lands for sale, as speedily as possible, in the district south and north of Red river, in Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be directed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a separate Surveyor General's district in the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be directed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the price of all public lands, situated in the prairies of Louisiana, at a certain distance, to be fixed, from wood and timber, so as to enable the United States to dispose of the same.

ROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. COOK offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That so much of the several acts of Congress, passed for the admission of Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri into the Union, as sets apart a portion of the money, arising from the sale of the public lands in those States, for the purpose of constructing roads and canals leading to those States respectively, be referred to a select committee.

Mr. SCOTT, of Missouri, expressed a wish to know what was the precise object of the mover of this resolution.

Mr. COOK explained; that, by the several acts for the admission into the Union of the States referred to in the resolution, three per cent. of the net amount of the proceeds of the sales of public lands was set apart for the construction of roads leading to those States. The object I have in view, therefore, said he, is to avail ourselves of the fund thus constituted. At the last session, the subject was referred to a committee of seven members, and six of the committee agreed to report a bill to that effect.

Mr. RANKIN suggested the propriety of referring this subject to the committee which had just been constituted, on the subject of roads and canals, the object of the resolve seeming to come more within the province of that committee.

Mr. COOK said the subject of roads and canals, in general, was one which usually produced much discussion in this House; it was one respecting which there existed always doubtless an honest difference of opinion. The resolution now before the House by no means involved that question, its object being to bring into activity a fund set apart and specifically pledged for the purposes contemplated by the resolution. He would not, therefore, throw it before a committee which was likely to have before it a vast deal of business from the older States, where it might, to use a common phrase, be overlaid by more ponderous subjects.

The question was then taken on the resolution as originally moved, and agreed to; and Messrs. COOK, SCOTT, JENNINGS, MARTINDALE, BRENT, CUSHMAN, and COLLINS, were appointed the said committee.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution offered yesterday, by Mr. OWEN, in relation to extending the circuit court of the United States into certain States. The question being on the amendment, (which extended the proposition from Alabama to all the States where no circuits are now held,) it passed in the affirmative; and, thus amended, the resolution was agreed to, and then the House adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, December 10.

Mr. FARRELY presented the memorial of Jared Shattuck, of the State of Pennsylvania, praying to be allowed and paid the interest on the whole of a sum of money, awarded him by a decree of the Supreme Court of the United States; interest having been allowed on a part only of said sum, by the Treasury Department.—Referred to Committee of Claims.

Mr. LONG presented a memorial adopted at a yearly meeting of the Society of Friends, held at New Garden, in Guilford County, North Carolina, on the 6th of November, 1823, representing that they hold the marriage covenant the highest civil engagement amongst men; that it ought to be held sacred and inviolable; notwithstanding which, the masters of slaves are tolerated, by the laws of the land, in breaking this most solemn contract, by separating husbands and wives; and praying Congress to adopt such measures as may be best calculated to meliorate the condition of slaves within its jurisdiction, at least, within the District of Columbia; which memorial was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. ROSS, the petition of the administrators on the estate of John H. Piatt, late of the State of Ohio, deceased, presented on the 31st December, 1822, together with the report of the select committee, made thereon, on the 3d of March last, was referred to a select committee; and Messrs. ROSS, MALLARY, JENKINS, LONGFELLOW, MCCOY, VINTON, and FOOTE, of New York, were appointed the committee.

Mr. CONWAY presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, praying that provision may be made for opening a public road from the town of Memphis, or Lower Chickasaw Bluffs, on the Mississippi, to Little Rock, the seat of government in said Territory; which memorial was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to which was referred the Message from the President of the United States, in relation to the accounts of Governor Tompkins, made a report, accompanied by a bill, appropriating $35,190 for the relief of Daniel D. Tompkins; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to alter the time of holding the district court of the United States at Mobile (to the fourth Mondays of April and November;) which was read twice, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, submitted the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House all such parts of the correspondence with the Government of Spain, touching the Florida treaty, to the period of its final ratification, which have not yet been communicated, and which, in his opinion, it may not be inconsistent with the public interest to communicate.

The resolution was ordered to lie one day, under the rule.

Mr. STORRS submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to communicate to this House a statement, exhibiting the amount of postage received during the year 1822, at each post office in the United States, and the Territories thereof.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day, under the rule.

On motion of Mr. CALL, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of fortifying the harbor of Pensacola.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the distribution of arms to the militia of the District of Columbia, in a proportion corresponding with the number of effective militia in said district; and for the designation of a proper officer to receive the same.

Mr. GAZLAY submitted the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to lay before this House the amount of defalcations in his department, which occurred previous to July, 1823, and which were not sued for as directed by the 29th section of the act regulating the Post Office Establishment, designating the years when each occurred, and not to extend beyond sixteen years.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day, under the rule.

On motion of Mr. MCCALL, the Committee on Roads and Canals were instructed to inquire into the expediency of opening a road in the most direct and practicable route from Pensacola to St. Augustine; and further, to inquire into the expediency of opening a road from St. Mark's to Cape Sable, in the Territory of Florida.

On motion of Mr. OWEN, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of resuming the prosecution of the work on Dauphin Island, for the defence of the bay and harbor of Mobile; and further, to inquire whether the plan now pursued by Government in prosecuting the work on Mobile Point is the most practicable for the interest of the Government, and the speedy completion of the work.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented the following, which was ordered to lie one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House copies of such parts of the correspondence of the late Minister of the United States at the Court of France, with the French Government, and such parts of the correspondence of said Minister with the Secretary of State, relative to claims of citizens of the United States, for spoliation upon our lawful commerce, as, in the opinion of the President, may not be inconsistent with the public interest.

On motion of Mr. STANDEFER, the Committee on Roads and Canals were instructed to inquire into the expediency of making appropriation for the opening of a canal between the navigable water of the Tennessee and Coosa rivers.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire whether any, and if any, what, alterations are necessary in the existing laws establishing rules of naturalization; and also, into the expediency of furnishing copies of those laws to the courts of the several States authorized to naturalize aliens, so as to secure to persons desirous of naturalization the benefit thereof.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of so revising and amending the several acts of Congress, allowing salaries to the district judges of the United States, as to equalize, as nearly as practicable, the compensation to be received by said judges.

LAND TITLES IN LOUISIANA.

The resolutions yesterday offered by Mr. BRENT, for obtaining certain information from the Secretary of the Treasury, and which were ordered to lie one day for consideration, were now taken up.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Mr. OWEN, of Alabama, offered as an amendment, an additional resolution, requiring information respecting other land offices, which, at the suggestion of Mr. WEBSTER, he afterwards withdrew.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Ohio, expressed his doubts whether the intervention of the House was requisite in order to obtain the information desired, and, if not, he was opposed to it on principle.

Mr. BRENT explained the objects he had in view in making this call, as the documents in question were indispensable to enable the House to act understandingly on several questions which will necessarily come before them the present session.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, feeling confident that the Secretary of the Treasury had already reported on some of the subjects, at least, embraced in these resolutions, offered as an amendment to them, these words, "which has not yet been reported to this House."

Mr. RANKIN supported the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was adopted. The question then recurring on the resolution as amended,

Mr. WRIGHT, of Ohio, observed that he was by no means satisfied that this was the proper mode of obtaining the information. He doubted whether it was right for this House to apply to the heads of Departments at all; and rather thought the application should in all cases be made directly to the Executive. He therefore moved to amend the resolutions by substituting the words "the President of the United States be requested," instead of "the Secretary of the Treasury be directed."

This amendment was opposed by Mr. BRENT, who assured the honorable gentleman that he had no impure or improper motives in wishing to call directly on the Secretary of the Treasury for the information he wanted. He believed he was pursuing the course which had usually been followed. What would be the consequence of adopting the principle proposed in the amendment? Must this House call on the President of the United States for every paper they may chance to want?

Mr. LIVERMORE was opposed to innovations, and to taking a circuitous mode of getting what might as well be obtained by a direct course. If the House should adopt the principle, and, as the gentleman had proposed, call on the President for all papers of this kind, all that the President could do, would be to call on the Heads of Department; and why not go to them in the first instance? It had been urged, as one reason against applying to these officers, that the calls upon them were becoming very numerous; but if this was a good reason in behalf of the Heads of Department, what must be said in the case of the President, when all these calls were accumulated upon him? The House should consider the high and dignified relations under which the President is placed; and not apply in person to him for details which might, and must, eventually, be obtained from his Secretaries.

The proposed amendment was rejected, and the resolution, as first amended, was adopted.

And on motion the House adjourned until tomorrow.

THURSDAY, December 11.

Mr. TYSON presented a memorial of James L. Bell, and others, composing the Mississippi Land Company of New York, setting forth, that, at very great expense, they have acquired the title to all that tract of land situated in the Northwestern Territory, commonly called "Carver's Grant;" lying on the east bank of the Mississippi river, at the Falls of Saint Anthony, and praying that their title to said land may be confirmed; which memorial was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented a memorial of sundry inhabitants of the city and county of Philadelphia, praying for a revision of the tariff of duties on imports, so as to afford further protection to domestic manufactures; which memorial was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

On motion of Mr. ISACKS, the petition of Thomas Carr, presented on the 18th of January, 1816, together with all the papers on file in the office of this House, in relation to the claims of the commissioners appointed by the State of Georgia to examine and survey the lands in the Big Bend of Tennessee river, or their representatives, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of John Biddle, praying that the election and return of Gabriel Richard, as the delegate, in this House, for the Territory of Michigan, may be set aside and his seat vacated, on the ground that said Richard was not, at the time of his election, nor is he yet, a citizen of the United States, and that he had not resided one year in said Territory, in the character of a citizen, previous to the election; which petition was referred to the Committee of Elections.

The SPEAKER presented sundry documents in relation to the contested election of ISAAC WILSON, as one of the Representatives of the State of New York, by PARMENIO ADAMS; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

The SPEAKER also presented a letter from the Secretary of the State of New York, enclosing the certificate of the election of WILLIAM WOODS, as one of the Representatives of said State; which was also referred to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of Charles M. Collier, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Secretary of War, on the petition of Edward W. Lewis, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from William H. Jones, accompanied with a specimen of a new universal Atlas, corrected down to the present time, executed by F. Lucas, of Baltimore; which letter was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The resolution submitted yesterday, by Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, was taken up, read, and agreed to by the House.

The resolution submitted yesterday, by Mr.

H. OF R.

Post Office Defalcations.

DECEMBER, 1823.

STORRS, calling on the Postmaster General for certain information, was taken up, read, and agreed to by the House.

Mr. CARTER offered the following :

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the duties at present imposed on books, charts, maps, and mathematical and philosophical instruments, imported into the United States for individual use.

The question being taken on the adoption of this resolution, without debate, it was decided in the negative by a large majority.

On motion of Mr. McKEAN, the bill to alter the judicial districts of Pennsylvania, reported to this House on the 2d day of March, 1822, by the Committee on the Judiciary, but never acted upon, together with the petitions on which it was founded, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. BRECK, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law an uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

On motion of Mr. KIDDER, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of imposing a specific duty on potatoes, imported from Nova Scotia, Ireland, and any other foreign country.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDS, of New York, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of constructing some works of defence at some suitable point near the line dividing the United States from Canada, on the margin of Lake Champlain.

On motion of Mr. GARRISON, the Committee on Commerce were directed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a beacon-light near the extremity of Cape Henlopen. And also that the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of erecting a permanent light-house on the lower end of the Brandywine Shoal, in the Bay of Delaware.

On motion of Mr. HAMILTON, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of altering the times of holding the circuit court within the sixth circuit of South Carolina district; that they be, likewise, instructed to inquire into the propriety of extending the provisions of an act of Congress, approved the 2d of March, 1809, entitled "An act to amend the judicial system of the United States," to meet the exigency resulting from the death of a district judge, as well as that which arises from his occasional disability.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of altering the times of holding the circuit and district courts of the United States in the circuit and district of Ohio.

An engrossed bill entitled "An act to alter the times of holding the district court at Mobile, in the district of Alabama," was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRECK submitted the following :

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law against counterfeiting such marks or names as the manufacturer of any kind of ware may see proper to write or stamp thereon.

In support of this resolution Mr. BRECK observed, that, when Mr. Jefferson was Secretary of State, application had been made to the Government by a person who was desirous of obtaining the exclusive right to the use of a certain mark, which was to be put upon goods manufactured by him. The application was referred to Mr. J., who made a report thereon, a certified copy of which report he now held in his hand, and which he wished might go to the Committee to whom the resolution should be referred. The report recommended that it should be declared penal to counterfeit the mark of the place where a particular article was manufactured.

The resolution, together with the copy of the report alluded to, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POST OFFICE DEFALCATIONS.

The resolution moved by Mr. GAZLAY, of Ohio, was then taken up in the following words :

"Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to lay before this House the amount of defalcations in his Department, which occurred previous to July, 1823, and which were not sued for, as directed by the 29th section of the act regulating the Post Office Establishment, designating the years when each occurred, and not to extend beyond sixteen years.

The resolution being under consideration—

Mr. GAZLAY rose and said, that, by a reference to the act of Congress of 1792, regulating the Post Office Department, it appeared that all the postmasters of the United States were directed to settle their several accounts with the General Post Office every quarter; and, if they neglected to do so, the Postmaster General was required to sue within three months. In 1810, the act was so altered as to extend the period within which the Postmaster General must sue, from three months to six. Under such a regulation, expressly provided by the law, it was not to have been anticipated that so much defalcation should occur as the amount stated in the President's Message. From reports laid before this House by the late Postmaster General, it appeared that, in 1814, there was a balance due the Department, from postmasters, of upwards of $200,000. In 1822, this amount had increased to $400,000; and it now stood, as appeared by the President's Message, at upwards of $300,000. The object of the resolution he had just offered, was to possess this House of the true state of these defalcations, in those particulars of which it was at present unadvised.

Mr. STORRS said, that, as he understood the fact, it was required, by a certain act of Congress, that the amount of the deficiency of any postmaster retained in office, should, after the lapse of a certain time, be charged to the Postmaster General. To ascertain whether that part of the law had been complied with or not, Mr. S. moved to add the following words, by way of amendment to the resolution: "and the amount of any such

DECEMBER, 1823.

Accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins.

H. OF R.

delinquencies as may have been charged against the Postmaster General of the United States."

Mr. GAZLAY accepted this modification as a part of his motion; and, thus modified, the resolution was agreed to without opposition.

DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. TRIMBLE, in offering to the House the following resolution, said it was well known that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States sometimes are not published until twelve or fifteen months after their rendition. He did not complain of this under the present system; but his object was to insure an earlier publication of the reports. He thought that those who are interested in the principles decided should not be left so long ignorant of what those decisions were. To remedy this defect, he proposed the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether any, and what, provision ought to be made by law, to insure a more speedy publication of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, said, he could have no possible objection to the inquiry, but the fact is, that the existing law allows nine months for the completion of the publication, and that the time taken for that work had never, he believed, exceeded six months.

Mr. TRIMBLE said he was sure that the gentleman could have no objection to the inquiry. He thought it pretty obvious that those decisions might be published in two weeks, or, at all events, in three weeks. Now, I think, said Mr. T., that the people are entitled to know what the Constitution is when a construction is given to it. At all events, the subject was worth inquiring into. He was sure that the inquiry could do no harm. He did not believe it was necessary to wait nine months for the reports, with no other view but to make it a profitable business to the reporter.

The resolution was then agreed to, without opposition.

ACCOUNTS OF DANIEL D. TOMPKINS.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill appropriating a certain sum of money for the relief of Daniel D. Tompkins.

The bill having been read—

Mr. COCKE rose, and moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. He made this motion because the House were told, as the ground on which the act of the last session was passed, that there was a balance reported against the Vice President; that his services had been great; and that his situation was then such that it was not possible for him to pay the amount claimed of him. I was astonished (said Mr. C.) when I saw the report published, that a large balance was due by him to the Government, knowing it to have been admitted at the last session that there was no balance due to him. A similar case was brought before this House some years ago in the case of John H. Piatt. We were told that he had rendered essential services to the Government; that he was insolvent, and that nothing could be got from him. In the same manner, after a law had passed in his favor, there was a report that there was a large sum of money due to this individual; but the House refused to appropriate it. And, Mr. C. said, before he could vote for this bill, he must be convinced that the money was really due to Mr. Tompkins. He should like to know, he said, upon what vouchers a report of this sort had been made. We are told, by the President's Message, moreover, that this is not all the money that will be claimed in this case; and pass this bill, said Mr. C., and probably, before the Christmas holidays, we shall have another call upon us to appropriate, I am told, upwards of a hundred thousand dollars for the same purpose. It does seem strange to me, that those who are entrusted only with the disbursement of public money should expend their own funds to the large amount of a hundred or a hundred and fifty thousand dollars. It is not usual for them to do so. And when we see a claim of this sort, which has lain dormant for a number of years, brought forward after all the circumstances of it are forgotten, we should have some proof exhibited to this House in support of it before we put our hand into the public purse and take out the money of the people to pay it. I make these objections to ascertain whether the House will, without further information, vote away this sum of money, especially when they know that a much larger sum of money will be hereafter demanded of them on the same plea as this.

Mr. CAMBRELENG said, he had not anticipated, after the documentary evidence which had been laid upon the table, that any gentleman, who had been a member of the last Congress, could have raised an objection to this bill. He, however, attributed the opposition of the gentleman from Tennessee to one of the best motives which could find a place in the bosom of any legislator—to a sense of the duty of examining with vigilance the merits of every appropriation which comes before him. At the last session, said Mr. C., we passed a law directing the accounting officer of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of the Vice President, upon the principles of justice and equity. They have discharged this duty; and I will advert to the circumstance, that the accounts have passed under the scrutiny of the best accounting officer of the Government—I mean Mr. Hagner, whose assiduity and severe justice the gentleman from Tennessee understands as well as I do. In reference to the case of Mr. Piatt, to which the gentleman from Tennessee had adverted, Mr. C. said he had supposed that with his well known sagacity, the gentleman from Tennessee would have been able to discern the distinction between the present case and that of Mr. Piatt, and explain to him the ground of the objection to making an appropriation in the latter case. In that case, Mr. Cutts, the Comptroller, awarded a balance of $60,000 in favor of Mr. Piatt, and Mr. Hagner a balance of $40,000 against him. Thus, when the House was called upon to appropriate money for the payment of the claim, it declined doing it because of the want of harmony between the decisions of the two accounting officers. But, in the present case, there is no want of harmony; the amount in this case is clearly due from the United States, by the decision of all branches of the Government. We have knowledge that the jury, which attentively examined this case, awarded to Mr. Tompkins a much larger sum. The award of the Third Auditor has fallen far short of the amount claimed, and the President, approving the award as far as it goes, reserved his decision as to the remainder. When that decision, which the gentleman from Tennessee looked forward to with so much alarm, should be made, Mr. C. said he should be ready to meet the gentleman on any ground. I might, said he, attempt to attract the sympathy of this House on this occasion; but I will not do it. It will be time enough to speak of the distinguished services of Mr. Tompkins when the occasion comes, as I presume it will, for discussing the propriety of allowing a further amount. We are now, however, called upon to act clearly within the principle of the law of the last session, the amount asked being a balance actually reported, by the accounting officers, to be due to the Vice President.

H. OF R.

Accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, rose to call the attention of the House to a few of the facts of this case. The opposition of the gentleman from Tennessee was not a matter of surprise, when the House considered the ground of it. But how was the fact? This was not the case of an individual, asking of the House a gratuity or unauthorized allowance, but asking of them to do what the Congress was already pledged to do. Under these circumstances, it was at least to be expected that the friends of the bill should not be met by general surmises as to the state of the accounts of the person in question. The services of the individual, whose claim was now under consideration, could not be unknown to any gentleman here. We all know his services, said Mr. McL., which, at a very dark and gloomy period, were exceedingly patriotic, important to his country, and disinterested. We all know that, at a moment when others were husbanding their funds, or dealing them out with a very scanty hand, this man risked every thing for the public cause, and staked his private fortune in its support. It is to services thus rendered, that his present embarrassments may be traced. In consequence of them, he now calls on his country, not for charity, but for justice. It is known to everybody that these accounts of his have remained suspended for a number of years; that the amount of his claim was much larger than in these years the Government was at any time willing to allow. The Government assumed one principle as the basis of settlement—he, another. According to his statement of his case, a much larger credit was due than the Government was willing to give to him. On suit being commenced by the United States, for the balance alleged to be due by him, a jury of his country awarded a balance of account in his favor, to the amount of $139,000. Under these circumstances, he comes to Congress. They take his case into consideration, and what do they do? They provided for his relief, by the act of the last session, in the following words:

“Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to adjust and settle the accounts and claims of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Governor of the State of New York, on principles of equity and justice, subject to the revision and final decision of the President of the United States.”

Congress then referred the adjustment of his accounts to the officers of the Treasury, and imposed a further check on them by calling in the ultimate decision of the President of the United States. They authorized the settlement of his accounts, upon the principles of equity and justice. We are not here to examine what were the motives of every individual, who voted in favor of the act of the last session, but we are to take the law as it is. But, for one, said Mr. McLANE, I am free to say that, if the gentleman limited his views of equity and justice to the affair of profit and loss—to the matter of balancing the account, his views were not the same as mine. Would the honorable gentleman say, whilst, on the one hand, he would allow the account to be balanced, he would not, on the other, pay any balance which might appear to be justly due to this individual? That, if he should appear to be indebted to the United States, we should pursue him, made poor in public service, with the hard hand of strict justice; but that, if the United States were found indebted to him, they should, with their abundant Treasury, not pay to him what is justly due? Congress could have had no other intention in the law of the last session, Mr. McL. said, than that, if a balance should be found to be due to Mr. Tompkins, it should be paid to him. Under the authority of our law, these accounts have been settled: the President has revised the settlement, and, in his opinion, a larger balance is due than has been allowed by the accounting officers. This bill goes no further than to give the sum which is certainly due, reserving the balance of the accounts for further investigation. No weight, Mr. McL. hoped, would be given to the consideration that, hereafter, more might be found to be due to the individual concerned than was now proposed to be granted to him. For myself, said he, I am free to declare that, if the accounting officer, under the direction of the President, should find an amount due to him equal to the amount of the verdict of the New York jury, I, for one, would freely vote it to him.

Mr. LIVERMORE, of New Hampshire, observing that the gentleman last up had quoted only a part of the law of last session on the subject now before the House, called for the reading of the whole act.

The act was read accordingly.

Mr. COCKE, in reply to McLANE, said that the argument to which the attention of the House had been called, did honor to the gentleman from Delaware; yet he could not but think that the honorable gentleman had been actuated more by his

DECEMBER, 1823.

Accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins.

H. OF R.

feelings on this subject than by the deliberate convictions of his understanding. He had commenced his speech by stating the many illustrious services performed by the individual whose relief is the object of the bill before the House. He was willing to admit those services in their fullest extent. But the gentleman, while detailing the meritorious services of Mr. Tompkins during the late war, had neglected to inform this House that, while thus engaged, he was at the same time receiving the pay and emoluments of a Major General. He had, indeed, performed services; but he had been fully rewarded. But, the gentleman from Delaware had told the House that the individual in question had given up his all for his country's service, and that his present distressed situation was the direct effect of such sacrifice. What evidence was there of this? He had never seen any proof of it. Besides, it must not be forgotten that he had unsettled accounts, also, with the State of New York, and that that State had contributed largely for his relief. He had always understood that the object of the aid solicited from Congress was, to relieve that gentleman from the pressure of a heavy demand against him by the United States, and which he was not in circumstances to settle. The latter part of the act which had been read, did not, he conceived, apply to the question before the House. He had, himself, no objections to relieve the Vice President, in consideration of his services, from demands which he was unable to meet. But, instead of this, we are now told that he is a creditor, and that to the amount of thirty or thirty-five thousand dollars. On what data was such a balance found in his favor? True it was, that the President had sanctioned it, and even gone far beyond it; but he had, at least in his opinion, taken matters into view which did not properly come before him. For himself, Mr. C. said, before he consented to any bill appropriating away the public money, he would inquire into the grounds of the grant—he would not take for granted the statement of any one. As to his notions of equity, they extended much farther than the gentleman from Delaware seemed to suppose—but, because we have now a little in the Treasury, shall we squander it? Shall we lavish it on every man that may choose to come and say, Oh! give me some of it? For his part, he would not. The gentleman had alluded to his severity of scrutiny, and complimented him on his vigilance in guarding the public money. I hope, said Mr. C., that that gentleman would be as guarded in his duty as he supposes I would be, in the examination of accounts.

Mr. CLAY (the Speaker) then rose and said, that, to him, it appeared that the considerations urged by the gentleman from Tennessee would have been in their proper place, if urged at the last session, but were certainly out of place at this time, when we are called upon, not to investigate a new claim, but to redeem the pledged faith of the public. On such a question, it was entirely unnecessary for the friends of the Vice President to refer to the public services, eminent as they had been, of the distinguished gentleman in question. This was not a fit occasion to introduce them. If the claimant were the meanest and the most obscure individual in society, the House were equally bound to pass that bill. For, what was it? The accounts to which it refers had long been pressing on the public for liquidation; they had at length been brought before this House; and, after deliberate consideration, an act is passed for their final settlement. The accounts were quietly examined and liquidated by the accounting officer. But, mark the precaution by which that act is characterized! Not only were those accounts to be submitted to the severe scrutiny of the most rigid officer of this Government—an officer whose scrupulous accuracy in the admission of accounts against the Government is as deservedly approved as it is universally known; but, after they had gone through the crucible, after they had been subjected to all the jealous scrutiny of this vigilant officer, they are to be submitted to the President for revision. The President revises them, and then he sends to this House a Message, in which he declares, not only that he is satisfied that this balance is justly due, but that much more is due to him. Under such circumstances, all that is now asked is, that we shall pay so much as has been thus ascertained to be due. It is, in fact, to do nothing more than supply the defect of the act of the last Congress, in which, by some omission, no appropriation had been made to meet the balance, if, according to the provisions of that act, a balance should have been ascertained to be due to Mr. Tompkins. Now, what does the gentleman from Tennessee tell us? He wishes to know the ground of the settlement. He wants, in short, to settle this account himself—to see the basis on which the officers of the Treasury proceeded in coming to the decision which they have laid before the President. This, Mr. C. said, might have been proper when the subject was under consideration at the last session; but Congress had committed the liquidation of these accounts to another tribunal. It had committed it to the accounting officers of the Government, gentlemen whose characters were unimpeached, and on whose accuracy, in this settlement, no reflections had been cast. The gentleman from Tennessee, whose vigilance over the Treasury was the admiration of the country and of the House, should have reserved the remarks with which he had favored the House, until the time when a final settlement of the demands of the Vice President on this Government is called up in this House; but now, when the sum reported is incontestable, when all the guards of the Treasury unite in declaring it justly due, when all that is asked is to supply a deficiency in the law of the last session, those remarks, however eloquent, would, he trusted, have no weight.

Mr. LIVERMORE said that he was opposed to the appropriation, and of course in favor of the amendment proposed. He had great respect for the individual concerned—no man cherished a higher opinion of his services; but the House was now called upon to decide a great question. The act of the last session empowered the officers of the Treasury to settle this account. The account was not settled—the President's Message expressly declares it remains unsettled. He has to be sure partially examined it, but that is all. Mr. L. said he was willing to pay as much respect to Executive recommendations as any man, but he wanted to see what was due. To use a familiar phrase, he did not like entering-wedges. Congress had been led on in this way on other occasions. In the case of the Cumberland road, for instance, the sum asked was small at first, but it grew larger and still larger, until, at length, it became intolerable; and Congress would vote no more for it. If he were sure the appropriations for the Vice President were to end here, he would vote the sum at once, but the House were threatened with a claim for other and larger amounts. The settlement had been delayed at the request of the claimant himself. He did not like to be led on blindfold, and wished to know at once how far he was to go.

H. OF R.

Accounts of Daniel D. Tompkins.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Mr. TRIMBLE said that he believed his worthy friend from New Hampshire was under some mistake in his conception of this subject. In ordinary cases of this description, a fund was provided out of which the public creditor, if his demand was just, and the documents in proof of it were regular and sufficient, received his due without further difficulty. But, if it should happen that his vouchers, though substantially evincing the justice of the demand, were wanting in due form, or were of a kind not admitted in settlement by Treasury rule, then an application to Congress was necessary, and Congress, when they knew such to be the fact, would order the account to be settled on principles of equity and justice; that is, as he understood it, without excluding valid evidence, though of an informal or irregular sort. This was a matter of every day occurrence. The case of Mr. Tompkins was one of this description; there were informal vouchers held by the claimant, which showed him to be justly entitled to what he claimed, and the question was not, now, whether the gentlemen from Tennessee and New Hampshire were to audit those vouchers; they had already been audited; but, by some omission, for which he was at a loss to account, there was no appropriation in the bill to meet the result of such settlement. The claim had, at the last session, been submitted to a committee, of which he had the honor to be a member, and he saw gentlemen near him who had been his companions in the same service. It had been carefully examined, and afterwards by law submitted to the Treasury officers. Those officers have reported that this balance is due. Now, I pray you, said Mr. T., when the account has, thus far, been settled, why is it not to be paid? The gentleman from New Hampshire had insisted that nothing should be paid until we knew the whole that we had to pay. But what would he say to a paymaster, for instance, who held a large amount of Government money—acknowledged himself to hold it—acknowledged it to be due—but who, having other accounts unsettled at the Treasury, should say to the Government, I owe you this balance, clear of all demands, but my other account is not settled, and I will not pay a dollar of what I owe you until I know all that I must pay on the final settlement? He believed the gentleman would call such a paymaster a dishonest man. But why is Government to be bound by different rules in paying its debts from those which bind an honest man? He said this in illustration merely, intending no reflection on the purity of the motives of those who opposed the bill. On the subject of delay, charged upon the Vice President, Mr. T. said he could not but feel something approaching to indignation at the delay which had already taken place. So far was Mr. Tompkins from seeking such delay, that he had claimed his due, he would not say from day to day, but from year to year. His proofs had been submitted to the committee. Mr. T. had personally and attentively examined them, and averred that they did completely establish the debt he claimed. I will not go into details, said Mr. T., but I do say that Daniel D. Tompkins never was indebted to this Government; and I say so after a full examination of the subject. He could not go further into the subject without expressing more feeling than was becoming in him, or perhaps than was respectful to the committee. But he could not close, without repeating the declaration of his entire conviction that there never was a juster claim presented against any Government. He believed it as much as he believed he had a soul to be saved; he was as sure of it as that he was now addressing the committee. The payment of it was due to the claimant—it was due to the American people—it was due to the good faith and the honor and honesty of the Government.

Mr. LIVERMORE rose again, and said, that he was sorry to intrude a second time upon the attention of the Committee; but, he understood that the gentleman opposite had risen for the purpose of correcting his mistake, and he had listened very attentively through his eloquent speech to hear what mistakes he had corrected—he could find none. But, said Mr. L., that gentleman has greatly mistaken me, if he thinks I do not as highly appreciate Daniel D. Tompkins's services as himself, or as any gentleman on this floor—but Mr. L. still insisted that it was time enough to pay an account, when the account had been finally settled. As to the delay of the final settlement, the President expressly said this delay was at the request of the claimant himself. [Here he read a passage from the President's Message.] Who's mistaken now? said Mr. L., as he took his seat.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, said he did not rise to go into the merits of the original claim of the individual whose case was now under consideration, being of opinion with the Speaker that, after its principle was once settled, it ought not to be a second and third time discussed in this House. The same objection which is now made was made at the last session. The House, with its eyes open, and with a perfect conviction of the rectitude of the claim, passed a law for its adjustment. The usual course, in such cases, is to include in the bill a provision for the payment of what may be due to the claimant. If that course had been pursued this year, what would have been the result? The amount due would have been paid by a Treasury warrant the moment it was ascertained. Did the omission of such a provision bring the principle of the act of last session back to this House for consideration? No! the right of the individual concerned was complete and perfect the moment the President had passed upon the settlement which had been made by the accounting officer. It was a vested right beyond the power of this House. If this was not the case, no reliance could be placed upon the plighted faith of this House or of the nation. Mr. W. made some further remarks in reply to Mr. LIVERMORE, and concluded by expressing his hope that there would be an unanimous vote in favor of this grant.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

The question was then taken on striking out the enacting clause of the bill, and decided in the negative, by a large majority.

Mr. COCKE then moved an amendment to the bill, the object of which was to declare that the amount now appropriated should be in full of the claim of Mr. Tompkins.

The amendment was also negatived, by a decided majority; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR introduced a joint resolution for the appointment of a joint Committee on the Library of Congress; which was twice read, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. And then the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, December 12.

Another member, to wit, from New Hampshire, ISHABOD BARTLETT, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have elected the Rev. WILLIAM STAUGHTON a Chaplain to Congress, on their part, during the present session. They have passed a resolution for the appointment of a joint committee, who shall have the direction of the money appropriated to the purchase of books and maps for the Library of Congress; also, a resolution for the appointment of a joint committee to make such distribution of the rooms of the centre building of the Capitol, as the business and convenience of the two Houses of Congress may require; in which resolutions they ask the concurrence of this House.

Mr. OWEN presented a petition of the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of Mobile, in the State of Alabama, praying for a grant of the lots belonging to the United States lying within the limits of said city.

On motion of Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, heretofore presented on the 3d February, 1823, upon the subject of fortifications at Mobile Point and Dauphin Island; together with the Message from the President of the United States communicated to this House on the 28th March, 1822, upon the subject of fortifications at the same places, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONWAY presented a petition of the General Assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, praying that a quarter section of land may be granted to each of the counties of Hempsted, Miller, and Crawford; to be improved and occupied as the seats of justice of the said counties. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Georgia, presented a document in support of the claim of Thomas Carr, and others, commissioners, appointed by Georgia, to examine and survey the lands in the Big Bend of Tennessee river, being the original grant to Stephen Heard; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, heretofore presented on the 3d of February, 1823, requesting that lands which have been offered at public sale, may be entered in fourth-quarter sections, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, heretofore presented on the 3d of February, 1823, in behalf of such purchasers of public lands as had made full payment prior to the passage of the relief law, was also referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, so much of the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, heretofore presented on the 3d of February, 1823, as recommends that a right of preemption be extended to settlers in Jackson and Decatur counties, in the purchase of lands, including their improvements, was also referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred, on the 8th instant, a memorial of the General Assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish, for the use of the Territory of Arkansas, an abstract of the military bounty lands lying within the same; which bill was read, amended, and ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

The Committee of Ways and Means were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Neal Munn and John McKellar, and it was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands; the said committee was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the General Assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, respecting the lands occupied by the Quapau Indians, and it was referred to the Secretary of War.

On motion of Mr. HERRICK, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing the town of Bowdoinham, in the collection district of Bath, in the State of Maine, a port of delivery.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made an unfavorable report on the petition of the Levy Court of the county of Calvert, in the State of Maryland, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRADLEY was excused from serving on the Committee on the Public Lands, and Mr. WHIPPLE was appointed in his place.

Mr. FULLER submitted the following resolution, viz :

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House a plan for a Peace Establishment of the Navy of the United States.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day, under the rule.

On motion of Mr. COBB, the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing so much of the laws of the United States as imposes a duty on imported salt.

On motion of Mr. TOMLINSON, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire whether it be expedient so to amend the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," as to abolish the office of measurer; to provide that the duties heretofore performed by the measurers, in virtue of said act, shall be performed by the inspectors; and to prohibit the allowance of any additional compensation to inspectors for measuring.

On motion of Mr. TEST, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the price of all the unsold lands in the State of Indiana, lying east of a line drawn from the mouth of the Kentucky river, northwardly to Fort Recovery, near the headwaters of the Wabash river. Also, all the unsold lands in said State, included in a purchase made by the United States of the Delaware, Pottawatomie, Miami, and Eel river tribes of Indians, by treaty concluded at Fort Wayne, by William Henry Harrison, as agent of the said United States, and the last mentioned Indians, bearing date the 30th day of September, in the year 1809, immediately adjoining to, and lying westwardly, along the aforesaid line, running from the mouth of Kentucky river to Fort Recovery.

On motion of Mr. WHIPPLE, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the act making provision for arming and equipping the militia of the United States, passed April 3, 1808, so that the arms provided by virtue of said act, and transmitted to the several States and Territories of the United States, shall, by each State and Territory, be deposited, and kept, in proper arsenals, to be provided by said State or Territory, ready to be delivered to the militia thereof, only when called into the actual service of the United States, or of the State or Territorial government, and to be returned to such place or places of deposit when said service shall cease.

On motion of Mr. CUSHMAN, the subject of the public buildings and the public lands in the city of Washington, was referred to a select committee; and Mr. CUSHMAN, Mr. VAN WYCK, Mr. CASSEDY, Mr. BROWN, Mr. HOBART, Mr. BART-LETT, and Mr. DWINEL, were appointed said committee.

Mr. Cook submitted the following resolution :

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House all the information in his possession, tending to show the circumstances connected with a recent robbery of the land office at Vandalia, in the State of Illinois; and the justice of releasing the receiver of public moneys from his liability to the Government for the said robbery.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day, under the rule.

On motion of Mr. CONWAY, the Committee on Indian Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing three additional agencies west of the Mississippi.

On motion of Mr. ISACKS, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the several laws allowing a bounty to enlisted soldiers or their heirs, and, also, the laws authorizing the commutation of the land bounty for half pay, that the same bounty in land, or the allowance of half pay, may be extended to the children of such soldiers, who may have been regularly enlisted, but who may have fallen in action, or died before they had been mustered into service, as, by law, is allowed in other cases.

The resolution from the Senate for the appointment of a joint committee, to have the application of the money appropriated for the purchase of books, &c. for the Library of Congress, was read and concurred in by the House; and Mr. SMYTH, Mr. BRADLEY, and Mr. POINSETT, were appointed of the said committee on the part of this House.

Ordered, That the Clerk do acquaint the Senate therewith, and that the resolution of this House, for the same purpose, do lie on the table.

The resolution from the Senate, authorizing the appointment of a joint committee, to make such distribution of the rooms of the centre building of the Capitol as the business and convenience of the two Houses of Congress may require, was read, and concurred in by the House; and Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. CUTHBERT, and Mr. CONDUCT, were appointed of the said committee on the part of this House.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act appropriating a certain sum of money for the relief of Daniel D. Tompkins," was read the third time, and passed.

The House adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, December 15.

Another member, to wit, from Virginia, BUNWELL BASSETT, appeared, produced his credentials, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. EDDY presented a petition of a committee appointed by, and acting in behalf of, those who are interested in the manufacture of wool, in the State of Rhode Island and vicinity thereof, praying that an addition of twelve and a half per cent. may be added to the duty imposed on imported manufactures of wool, together with a further countervailing duty, should the British Government allow a drawback on the export duty imposed in that country; which petition was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Mr. SHARPE presented a memorial of Archibald Gracie, of the city of New York, merchant, of the same tenor and effect with the memorial presented by Mr. HEMPHILL, on the 8th instant, from merchants and underwriters in the city of Philadelphia, respecting the unlawful and injurious operation of the Berlin Decree of France; which first mentioned memorial was also laid on the table.

Mr. FORSYTH presented a petition of Major Henderson, of the State of Georgia, praying compensation for two horses impressed into the military service of the United States, in the war against the Seminole Indians, in the year 1818, and which were never returned to him.—Referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. GATLIN presented a petition of sundry merchants, mariners, and others, inhabitants of Edenton, in the State of North Carolina, praying that the floating light, stationed near Shell Castle, may be removed to the point of Nine-foot Shoal, on the channel leading into Teach's Hole; or that a new light may be provided at said point; which petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER presented a memorial of Alfred H. Powell, contesting the election and return of Jared Williams, as one of the representatives in this House from the State of Virginia, and praying to be admitted to a seat in the place of said Williams; which memorial was referred to the Committee of Elections.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, accompanied with a list of licenses granted to Indian traders; also, his report on the claim of Joseph Mareschall.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting a list, received from the Register of the Treasury, of the balances on the books of receipts and expenditures, which appear to have been due or unsettled more than three years prior to the 30th September last; prepared in obedience to the acts of the 3d March, 1809, and 3d March, 1817; which letter and list were laid on the table.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the cases of Robert Henry and James Mitchell, reported a bill supplementary to an act, approved on the 3d day of March, 1819, entitled "An act providing for the correction of errors in making entries of land at the Land Offices;" which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANKIN, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, by resolution, on the 9th instant, reported a bill to authorize the State of Indiana to open a canal through the public lands, to connect the navigation of the rivers Wabash and Miami of Lake Erie; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported a bill, entitled, "An act to procure the necessary surveys and estimates on the subject of roads and canals;" which, having been twice read, he proposed to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, objected to giving this direction to the bill, as being an incorrect practice on principle, and suggested, as preferable, to refer it simply to a Committee of the Whole, putting it in the ordinary routine of business.

Mr. HEMPHILL adhered to his motion, on the ground that no subject could be of a more general and public interest to the whole nation, than that of this bill.

The question being taken on referring it according to Mr. HEMPHILL's motion, it was decided in the negative—ayes 76, noes 78. And the bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole.

The following resolution offered on Friday last, by Mr. COOK, was taken up:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House all the information in his possession, tending to show the circumstances connected with a recent robbery of the land office at Vandalia, in the State of Illinois; and the justice of releasing the receiver of public moneys from his liability to the Government for the sums lost by said robbery.

This resolution was agreed to, nem. con.

The following resolution, offered on Friday, by Mr. FULLER, was taken up:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the House a plan for the Peace Establishment of the Navy of the United States.

This resolution, also, was agreed to, nem. con.

The engrossed bill, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish, for the use of the Territory of Arkansas, an abstract of the military bounty lands lying within the same," was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHARPE, the Committee on Manufactures were instructed to inquire into the expediency of imposing a duty upon merchandise sold at public auction.

On motion of Mr. CALL,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the survey and sale of the public lands in the Territory of Florida.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of extending the time limited for the settlement of private land claims in East and West Florida.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting donations, or pre-emption rights to certain actual settlers in the Territory of Florida.

Mr. POINSETT submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the construction of ten additional sloops of war.

Mr. POINSETT said, he was induced to offer this resolution to the consideration of the House, from an earnest desire to see our Navy rendered efficient and capable of maintaining the high reputation which it has so gallantly and nobly won. If we would have fleets of line of battle ships and frigates in readiness to be poured forth against an enemy, at the commencement of a war, we must rear up officers capable of commanding them. As our Navy is now constituted, we shall be compelled, in the event of war, to confide the command of our ships, the safety of our gallant seamen, and the honor of our flag, to inexperienced officers; to men, who have been for years, on shore, forgetting what they had formerly learned. We have now five sloops of war and thirty masters commandant, so that an officer cannot hope to be employed oftener than once in six years. To have an efficient Navy, the proportion between sloops of war and line of battle ships and frigates must be preserved; and I trust, said Mr. P. that the subject will receive from the committee the consideration its importance deserves.

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1823.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MERCER presented the following resolution, which lies one day of course:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to this House a list of the officers of the Navy of the United States, denoting the periods of their admission into the public service; the dates of their present commissions, and the time of their actual service at sea since the 1st of January, 1815.

Mr. ALLEN, of Tennessee, submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to lay before this House a list of the post offices, designated "distributing offices," in the several States and Territories; also, the duties required to be performed by deputy postmasters at such offices; with the regulations adopted for securing a direct conveyance to letters, &c., destined for offices on intermediate post routes.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table one day, under the rule.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, it was Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of associating with the Military Academy at West Point a school of instruction for the midshipmen of the Navy of the United States.

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of securing, in the medical department of the Navy, the benefits of professional skill and experience, by a due apportionment of the pay of the surgeons and their mates, to the time of their actual service, and by requiring an examination, by a board of physicians, of all persons applying for admission therein.

On motion of Mr. WICKLIFFE, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of reviving, and continuing in force, the provisions of an act of Congress, entitled "An act for the relief of the purchasers of the public lands prior to the 1st of July, 1820."

On motion of Mr. WAYNE, the Committee on Commerce were directed to inquire into the expediency of imposing a duty on wheat imported from any foreign country, or its dependencies.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing Bartholomew Malloy, an old soldier, on the pension list.

On motion of Mr. McKIM, the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to inquire into the expediency of permitting all goods, wares, and merchandise, imported, to be secured in warehouses, or other approved places, at one port of entry in each State of the United States, without payment, or securing the duties thereon, at the first entry thereof.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the Committee on the Cumberland Road were instructed to inquire into the expediency of making a suitable appropriation for the erection of a bridge over the Monongehala river, where the said road crosses the same, at Brownsville.

TUESDAY, December 16.

Another member, to wit, from New York, ALBERT H. TRACY, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. CAMBRELENG presented a memorial of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the city of New York, praying, for reasons set forth at large in the memorial, that the ground on which Castle Clinton and the bridge leading to it now stands, and also, the ground conveyed by them to the United States, on each side of the said bridge, together with said Castle Clinton, as the same now stands, may be reconveyed to them; which memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER laid before the House sundry documents in relation to the contested election of Jared Williams, one of the representatives for the State of Virginia; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, who were instructed to inquire into the propriety of giving concurrent jurisdiction to the supreme or superior court of laws, of the respective States, in cases arising under the act, entitled "An act to extend the privilege of obtaining patents for useful inventions and discoveries, and to enlarge and define the penalties for violating the rights of patentees," reported, that it is not expedient to make such provision; which report was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the Cumberland Road, reported a bill for the preservation and repair of that road; which bill was read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CROWNINSHIELD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom the subject has been referred, reported a bill for the relief of Sarah Perry; which was read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The resolution yesterday offered by Mr. MERCER, was taken up for consideration; and, after a few observations from him explanatory of his objects in moving it, the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, for the final settlement, on principles of equity and justice, of the claims of the State of New Hampshire against the United States, for militia services during the late war with Great Britain.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Grants of Land for Education.

H. of R.

The resolution yesterday offered by Mr. ALLEN, of Tennessee, calling for a List of Distributing Post Offices, was taken up and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. STRONG, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a Surveyor's office in each of the States and Territories in which the public lands of the United States are situated.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, laid the following resolution on the table, for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to lay before the House, a statement of the number of miles of post roads, existing by law in each State and Territory, for each of the three years next preceding the first of April last; the number of miles of said road whereon the mail was actually carried in each of those years, together with the yearly expense of transporting the mail; the yearly compensation of postmasters, and the incidental expenses thereon. Also, a statement of the amount of postage which accrued in each State and Territory in each of those years; the yearly receipts therefrom; the yearly balances for and against them, respectively, and the balances of postage which accrued in each of said years, now due and in arrears.

Mr. RANKIN laid on the table the following resolution, for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish this House a particular statement, containing the names of any receivers of public moneys in the land offices of the United States, who may have failed to make their returns and payments of public money, according to law, or when required by the Treasury Department; the amount due from such receivers, severally; the time when the same ought to have been paid to the Government; the measures adopted to punish any such delinquency and coerce the payment; and the names of the places where such offices are situated.

Mr. OWEN laid on the table the following resolution, for consideration on to-morrow:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to lay before this House a statement of the sums of money that have been received in the Treasury from the two per cent. fund, payable on the sales of public lands in the States of Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Mississippi and Alabama, designating the yearly and total amount paid in from each of said States; and how much money has been advanced by the General Government, for the repayment of which these funds, or any of them, are pledged; also, the yearly and total amount in each of the above named States, arising from the three per cent funds payable on the sale of public lands, and what sums, if any, have been advanced to each of said States, of the three per cent. funds.

On motion of Mr. VAN WYCK,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the propriety of repealing that part of the law, passed in 1822, establishing a post route between St. Augustine and Pensacola, in the Floridas.

18th CON. 1st SESS.—27

Resolved, That, inasmuch as the Postmaster General, in his report, states, that, unless otherwise instructed by Congress, he must necessarily, in the fulfilment of that law, close a very disadvantageous contract, that it be advisable for the committee to report specially, and as soon as convenient.

The House then went into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of Charles M. Collier. The report of the Committee of Claims thereon having been read, the Committee rose and reported the bill without amendment; and the bill was ordered, without opposition, to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, the consideration of the bill providing for the obtaining of surveys and plans on the subject of roads and canals, was made the order of the day for the tenth of January.

GRANTS OF LAND FOR EDUCATION.

Mr. KENT moved that the House do come to the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of making such an appropriation of the public lands to the purposes of education, in those States to which no grants have yet been made, as will correspond, in a just proportion, with the appropriations which may have been made heretofore, in favor of those States; and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. KENT said, he offered the resolution just read, not only from the importance of the object embraced by it, but because certain resolutions which had passed the Legislature of the State of which he was a representative, had been presented to the last Congress, and not finally acted on. His object in calling the attention of the House to the resolution at this time, was, to obtain their decision on it, if favorable, that the State of Maryland, and those States equally interested with her, might derive the contemplated advantages from it; but if, contrary to their just expectations, the decision should be unfavorable, that they might turn their attention to some other source for the promotion of the important purposes of education. He would mention, for the information of the House, that Maryland was not singular in adopting the principle contained in the resolution; that it had received, after a deliberate examination, the approbation of the Legislatures of several of the States—the disapprobation of but few. Mr. K. hoped the resolution would be adopted, that the subject might be fully examined.

The question being on agreeing to the resolve, Mr. RANKIN observed, that a similar proposition to that now offered had been brought forward by the gentleman from Maryland, at a former session of Congress; and he regretted that it had not, now, been thrown into the same form as when before offered. It was then presented in an affirmative shape, which afforded facility for a more direct and immediate discussion of the merits of the proposition by the House. He was opposed to the reference of this inquiry to a select committee, if it went to a committee at all; not on any special, but on a general principle. It was the well-known and universal usage, in appointing select committees, to compose them of the known friends of the measures proposed; in consequence of which only an ex parte view of subjects was presented to the House in the reports of the committees, and time was consumed in obtaining, by discussion, the views of gentlemen of the opposite opinion. But, a standing committee was a sort of general tribunal, composed neither of the friends nor the opposers of any particular measure—such a committee was likely to present a more general view of subjects committed to their consideration, than a select committee; and, should they report against any particular measure, its advocates had still their appeal to the House, and full liberty to discuss its merits. He thought the subject of the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on Public Lands—not because he happened personally to be connected with that committee, but because the nature of the object embraced by the resolution seemed naturally to belong to it.

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Mr. Cook considered the resolution, though on the face of it merely proposing an inquiry, to involve principle, inasmuch as the expediency of any inquiry into the subject must depend upon the supposed existence of a fact which is denied—namely, the fact that grants of land have been made, without an equivalent, to some of the States, and not to others. This, Mr. C. said, was a position which he, for one, denied. If the object of the gentleman from Maryland was to create a fund for the promotion of education, let it be abstract, and not based upon a supposed fact which does not exist. Let the fund apply equally to all the States of the Union, without attempting to discriminate between the new and the old States. He objected, however, to the reference of the resolution to any committee in its present form, because it took for its basis that which was, in point of fact, untrue.

Mr. JENNINGS said, he apprehended the resolution was not very well understood by the House. It certainly was not by him, judging from the remarks which had been made upon it. For further examination of it, he moved that the resolve lie on the table, and be printed.

Which motion was agreed to.

WEDNESDAY, December 17.

Another member, to wit: from Pennsylvania, HENRY WILSON, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented a memorial of a meeting of the Synod of Philadelphia, embracing the Presbyterian Churches in the southwestern part of New Jersey, the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, the States of Maryland and Delaware, and the District of Columbia, convened at Georgetown, in said District, in October, 1823, praying for an increase of the annual appropriation for civilizing the Indian tribes and introducing the knowledge of letters among them; which memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. POINSETT presented a memorial of sundry banking institutions in Charleston, in South Carolina, and of sundry inhabitants of the same place, praying for a repeal of the 14th section of the Act incorporating the Bank of the United States, by which the bills of that bank, without reference to the place where issued, are made every where receivable in all payments to the Government.—Referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, made a report on the petition of Orange Heaton, and Josiah Hubbard, jr., which was read, and the resolution therein submitted concurred in, viz: that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

Mr. McLANE, from the same committee, also made a report on the petition of Jacob Babbitt, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Jeremiah Manning; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made a report on the petition of Jacob Shafer, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed an act, entitled "An act for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt," in which they ask the concurrence of this House.

Mr. COCKE submitted the following resolution, for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House copies of all contracts for cannon, cannon shot, muskets, and other small arms, for the use of the United States, which have been entered into since the 1st January, 1820, and that he state whether notice for proposals was given for each contract in any newspaper, if so, in what paper, and how long before the contract was concluded; who are interested in each, ostensibly, or as secret partner, so far as he may have been informed or believes.

On motion of Mr. STRONG, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of selling the schooners and vessels purchased under the act, entitled "An act authorizing an additional naval force for the suppression of piracy."

On motion of Mr. HAYWARD, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads were directed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the 4th and 5th sections of an act of Congress, passed on the 27th of February, so far as the same relate to the conveyance of letters and packets, by steam-boat packets, and other vessels, not employed by the Postmaster General in transporting the mail of the United States.

On motion of Mr. LATHROP, the Committee of Ways and Means were directed to consider the

DECEMBER, 1823.

Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

H. OF R.

expediency of enlarging the terms on which the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, under the fifth section of the act passed March 3, 1807, entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of the public debt," may purchase that portion of the public debt which will become reimburseable on the 1st day of January, 1825.

On motion of Mr. CALL, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of excluding foreign wreckers and fishermen from wrecking and fishing within the jurisdiction of the United States, on the coast of Florida; and further, to inquire into the expediency of giving encouragement and protection to the American wreckers on the coast of Florida.

On motion of Mr. STORRS, the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for compensation for a private Secretary to the President of the United States.

On motion of Mr. RANKIN, the Clerk of this House was directed to prepare and lay before the House, so soon as it can be conveniently done, a complete index to all the printed volumes which contain the communications of the President of the United States, and of the several Departments of the Government, to Congress, and the reports of the Committees of Congress.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Charles M. Collier," was read the third time, and passed.

The order of the day on the bill to authorize the State of Indiana to open a canal through the public lands, to connect the navigation of the rivers Wabash and the Miami of Lake Erie, being called, it was postponed until the second Monday in January next.

The order of the day on the bill for the relief of Sarah Perry, being called, it was postponed until Monday next.

The resolution yesterday offered by Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, calling on the Postmaster General for certain details of his Department for the last three years, was called up, and agreed to.

The resolution yesterday offered by Mr. RANKIN, calling for a list of the defaulters in the land offices of the United States, was taken up, and agreed to.

The resolution yesterday offered by Mr. OWEN, calling for a statement of the amount and application of the two per cent. and three per cent. funds payable out of the sales of public lands in the Western and Southern States, was taken up, and agreed to.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL.

Mr. LITTLE, of Maryland, offered for consideration the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the employment, under the direction of the President, of a part of the corps of engineers, in surveying the grounds and ascertaining the best route in uniting the waters of the Ohio with the Chesapeake, by way of the Susquehannah river.

Mr. MERCER suggested that the object intended to be obtained by the resolution, was included in the general provisions of the bill reported yesterday by his honorable friend from Pennsylvania, (Mr. HEMPHILL,) and which is made the order of the day for some time in January next; but, if any special provision on this subject was desired by the honorable mover, he had only to add a small sum to the appropriations for the quartermaster's department, for the purpose of covering the incidental expenses of the survey; for the President of the United States has already as full power as any vote of this House could confer upon him over the whole corps of topographical engineers, and is fully competent to order the investigation proposed by the resolution of the honorable gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LITTLE said that he had imperfectly heard the gentleman from Virginia, but he would state the reasons which induced him to submit the resolution. Last year the Legislature of Maryland appointed commissioners to survey the course of a part of the Susquehannah river, with a view to the rendering of it navigable. These commissioners, in the report, notice the waters of the Juniata, and their connexion with the waters of the West. That part of the President's Message which refers to the subject of connecting the Chesapeake and Ohio, speaks only of the Potomac. It was his object in this resolution, Mr. L. said, to direct the attention of the committee mentioned in it to the waters of the Susquehannah, as presenting an eligible mode of connecting the bay and the Ohio. It proposed simply an inquiry—gentlemen by voting for it would commit themselves to no measures; and if, after hearing the report of the committee, they disapproved of the object, they were under no obligation to embrace the plan.

Mr. CONDIOT observed, in support of the ground taken by Mr. MERCER, that it was known to him that, during the last Summer, General Bernard, with other persons, was occupied in exploring and surveying, under the direction of the President, the different routes for the canal to connect the waters of the Delaware and the Hudson, and for other proposed canals. He thought the resolution, therefore, unnecessary, as the Secretary of War had full power to employ the same gentlemen on the route now proposed.

Mr. MERCER was sorry he had not been perfectly heard, but the gentleman from Maryland must distinctly perceive, that his objections were directed against the policy of legislating unnecessarily on this subject. The President possesses already as much power as Congress can give him over the whole army, and over the topographical engineers, as a part of our Military Establishment; and all that was necessary was to provide for the payment of the expenses of a few pack-horses, or other modes of transportation. But he objected to the whole resolution, because the ground of it was already covered by the bill brought in by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and because the committee had no need of instruction, being already generally in possession of the whole subject, by the terms of their appointment.

Mr. LITTLE said he was not disposed to press the resolution to a decision now. He had thought it perfectly in order to move it, since the President, in his Message, expressly recommended the general subject to the attention of Congress.

The resolution was, with the consent of the mover, laid upon the table.

ERRORS IN THE LAND OFFICES.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill supplementary to an act approved on the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, entitled "An act providing for the correction of errors in making entries of land at the land offices."

[This bill enacts, "That, where any mistake may have been made, or may hereafter be made, by any purchaser of the public lands, in designating the tract intended to be purchased, such person may exhibit his own affidavit, and such other evidence as may be in his power, showing the mistake to the register or receiver of the district in which the purchase was made; and the register and receiver shall transmit the evidence submitted to them in any case, together with their written opinion or opinions on the subject, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who, on an examination of the facts, shall be authorized to change the entry, and transfer the payment to the tract intended to have been entered, if unsold; but, if sold, to any other tract liable to entry: Provided, He shall be satisfied that a mistake has been made."]

Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, the Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, who had reported the bill, observed that the act of 1819, on the subject of correcting errors in the land offices, had given power to the Commissioner of the General Land Office to correct only such erroneous entries as arose from wrong marks having been attached to tracts of the public land sold. Under this act, some cases of peculiar hardship had arisen, which it was not in the power of the land office to correct. New settlers, ignorant of the country, and of the quality of land in the different tracts, were in the habit of applying to their neighbors, who were already settled, for directions, and they had sometimes received mistaken information, by which they were induced to purchase land which proved entirely worthless. The bill now before the Committee was intended to provide for cases of this description, where errors had taken place without any fraudulent design in the parties concerned.

Mr. COOK, of Illinois, then rose, and said, that, when the subject of this bill was before the Committee of Public Lands, he happened to be in such a state of health as not to be able to attend the committee. He now proposed an amendment, which he said embraced a class of cases of equal merit with that provided for by the bill. He, himself, knew of but one case of the sort, but there might be others. The case was this: The law of 1820, which authorized the surrender of lands by the purchasers, in certain cases, gave rise to a great deal of business in the land offices, and persons having business with them were, in many cases, obliged to transact business by means of agents or deputies. It thus happened, in the case to which he had particular reference, the land which the purchaser intended to retain was relinquished, and that which he wished to relinquish was retained, though, compared with the other, unimproved, and of inferior value. This was a mistake which the register and receiver did not feel themselves authorized to correct, though apprized of it the next day after it happened, and perfectly willing to have done it, had it been in their power. The amendment he offered was intended to provide for cases of this description.

After some conversation, this amendment of Mr. COOK was negatived.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, offered the following, to be added as an amendment to the bill:

Provided also, That if a patent shall have issued for the tract so erroneously entered, the patentee shall, by a deed duly executed, relinquish to the United States all his right to the same.

In supporting his amendment, Mr. C. observed that doubts had been entertained whether, if an error were discovered after a patent for the land had been granted, it could be corrected without a special act of Congress for the purpose. The present bill, he thought, should make provision for such a case, that a provision so important should be suitably guarded.

Mr. RANKIN observed, in reply, that as cases of this description would probably be few, it would, perhaps, be most expedient to leave them to be provided for individually, and not to make a general rule which might, if extended so far, be liable to abuse.

Mr. CAMPBELL said that the gentleman from Mississippi must be aware that, under what was usually denominated the "prompt payment system," the purchaser of the public lands was obliged to make immediate payment for the land he bought of Government, and the patent was issued very shortly afterwards. It was but fair if an error had innocently taken place in the description of his lot, it should be corrected, even after the patent had issued. If provision was made to correct such an error, however, by granting to the purchaser the lot as truly described, Mr. C. added, it was also no more than fair that he should, by a valid deed, reconvey to the United States the lot which he held under the erroneous patent; else, it might happen that he would hold the fee of two lots, when he had paid for only one.

The question being then taken on the amendment of Mr. CAMPBELL, it was carried in the affirmative—Ayes 82.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Ohio, then proposed an amendment to meet a case of an opposite description, where the settler had, through error, been obliged to pay more than once the purchase-money for land bought of the United States. The amendment in such case proposed to require the Secretary of the Treasury to refund the amount overpaid, without the intervention of any special act of Congress for that purpose.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Mr. RANKIN said, he did not readily perceive how a case could occur, under the present system for disposing of the public lands, such as that for which the amendment of the gentlemen from Ohio, was intended to provide. But, if such an error should occur, it might, by the provisions of the present bill, be corrected by the register and receiver of the land office concerned.

Mr. Ross, of Ohio, rose to suggest to his colleague a doubt whether it was competent to the House to incorporate into the bill a general provision of this description, the object of which is to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to refund money which, having been overpaid by a purchaser of public land, has actually gone into the Treasury. There would be some danger in encouraging a license of this kind; and, besides, Mr. R. said, if he understood the matter correctly, money cannot constitutionally be drawn from the Treasury without previous special appropriation by law. Looking at the proposition in this light, he felt some scruples in voting for it.

Mr. WRIGHT said, it was perhaps true, as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi, that cases of this description cannot occur under the present system for disposing of the public lands. But cases of the kind had occurred heretofore, one of which, being within his knowledge, had induced this motion. It was not his wish, however, to embarrass this bill, and if the gentleman thought such would be the effect of pressing the amendment, he would withdraw it, and offer it hereafter as a separate proposition.

Mr. RANKIN thought that the suggestion of his friend upon the right (Mr. Ross) was a very important one, and entitled to great weight with the Committee. It was a principle of the utmost consequence to guard against any appropriation of money from the Treasury but by special acts of Congress. If, however, the gentleman who moved the amendment considered that the object intended by it was of pressing moment, he hoped that he would present it in some form before the House, other than that of an amendment to this bill, which it was calculated to embarrass.

Mr. WRIGHT assented, and withdrew his amendment.

Mr. SANFORD, of Tennessee, was opposed to the bill in its present form. Great impositions had been already practised upon Government by purchasers of public lands; and he feared, if the bill should pass as it at present stood, those impositions would be multiplied. Settlers were in the habit of purchasing lands, from the accounts and descriptions given them by their friends. When they came to the land they had bought, they often found those descriptions had not been correct, and they would change the tracts they had fairly purchased for others they liked better—an arrangement by which the Government was defrauded. He offered, with a view to prevent such impositions, an amendment, which he thought calculated to guard against it.

Mr. RANKIN said, that the amendment was wholly unnecessary, the entry of land being always made after the sale, and not before it. It was very true that frauds might be practised under the system as it now stands, but, if so, it must be by perjury either of the purchaser himself or of the public officers. Such abuses, however, formed no just objection to a general provision for the relief of those who really suffer by accidental errors, &c. This bill, having that object in view, had undergone the strictest scrutiny in the Committee of Public Lands, and every effort had been made to guard its provisions from abuse. The public officers best acquainted with the subject had been consulted, &c. The objection against the bill, that abuses might be committed, Mr. R. suggested, would apply with equal force to the institution of courts of law, because witnesses might perjure themselves, &c.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky, rose, not to oppose the bill, but to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee of Public Lands, viz: whether the bill authorizes the officers of Government to correct erroneous entries. He stated the case of a pre-emption right, the holder of which died—when his heirs came to make the entry, it appeared that an improper entry was made, by which error the widow and children were thrown out of their right. It was obvious that, in such a case, the error ought to be rectified. Mr. T. wished to know if the bill, as it now stood, would authorize the correction of an error of this description.

Mr. RANKIN stated that the case which the gentleman from Kentucky had mentioned, was provided for by the act of 1819; but that act did not, in the opinion of the Committee on Public Lands, go far enough, and they had reported the present bill with a view to remedy the defects of the law, &c.

Mr. McCoy expressed doubts of the policy of this bill. He thought it was right in Government to correct the errors of their own officers, but not of everybody else. He feared it would make purchasers careless about errors for the future. He apprehended that the applications, under the act, would be very numerous and very troublesome.

The Committee then rose, and reported the bill as amended. The House concurred in the amendment of Mr. CAMPBELL, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading—ayes 86, noes 52.

THURSDAY, December 18.

Three other members, to wit: from Louisiana, HENRY H. GURLEY and EDWARD LIVINGSTON; and from New York, JOHN J. MORGAN, appeared, were qualified, and took their seats.

Mr. CROWNINSHIELD presented a memorial of the Directors of the Salem Laboratory Company, established for the manufacture of Roman vitriol, alum, refining saltpetre, and other chemical processes, praying that the duty imposed on those articles, or their preparations, may be changed from ad valorem to specific duties.

Mr. BRECK presented a memorial of sundry inhabitants of the city and county of Philadelphia, praying for an early and thorough revision of the tariff of duties on importations from foreign countries, so as to afford that protection to manufactures which the Government affords to commerce.

H. OF R.

Contracts for Cannon, &c.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Mr. WRIGHT presented a memorial, having the same object in view, from inhabitants of the county of Jefferson, in the State of Ohio.

The said memorials were referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. RANKIN presented a petition of the inhabitants of Pembina, on the Red river of Hudson's bay, a colony settled by the late Lord Selkirk, setting forth that, upon a recent survey, it is found that they are situated within the limits of the United States, and praying to be secured in the possession of their property; that they may be confirmed in their land claims; and that the rights and privileges enjoyed by citizens of the United States may be extended to them; which petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONWAY presented a petition of the General Assembly of the Territory of Arkansas, praying that a separate surveyor general may be assigned to said Territory; which petition was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill for the relief of Thomas W. Bacot; which was twice read, and committed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, laid the following resolution on the table, for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House any information he may have received, and which he may not deem it improper to communicate, relating to the present condition and future prospects of the Greeks.

On motion of Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky, the Committee on Private Land Claims were instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting the bounty land to Thomas Pendergrass, the representative of James Albert, deceased, a soldier in the late war with Great Britain.

On motion of Mr. TRIMBLE, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the President of the United States to direct sales to be made, from time to time, of such arms, ammunition, and military stores, as are not wanted, or are unfit for public service.

On motion of Mr. ELLIS, the Committee of Claims were instructed to inquire into the account of Henry Alward, Esq., against the United States, for apprehending and delivering two deserters to a detachment of the Army then under the command of Colonel William N. Irwin, at Sunbury, in Pennsylvania, and that they report thereon.

The letter of William H. Jones, accompanied by a copy of a New Universal Atlas, addressed to the Speaker on the 12th instant, was referred to the Joint Library Committee.

The engrossed bill supplementary to the law for the correction of errors in making entries of land at the land offices, being called up for consideration,

Mr. RANKIN said, that, since yesterday, he had had various suggestions made to him by members for whose opinion he entertained very high respect, as well as from the present Commissioner of the General Land Office; and considering the vote of yesterday as a pledge that the House would certainly act on the subject, and feeling desirous that the bill should, as far as possible, meet the wishes of gentlemen, he was induced, on a consideration of the whole subject, to move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands, to be made as perfect as practicable.

The House concurred in this motion.

The report of the Committee of Claims, of the 12th instant, on the case of the levy court of Calvert county, in the State of Maryland, was taken up and recommitted to that committee.

The bill from the Senate entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt,'" was read the first time.

CUMBERLAND ROAD.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on the Cumberland Road, reported "A bill for the continuation of the Cumberland road;" which was twice read, and committed.

The motion to commit the bill to a Committee of the Whole, being under consideration—

Mr. RANKIN rose, and said, that he was one of those persons who are disposed to commit the whole strength and resources of this nation on the subject of internal improvements. He believed, also, that the nation was prepared to go all lengths on that subject. But he was unwilling to take up so great a system of measures, by small parts at a time. The bill reported by his friend from Pennsylvania, (Mr. HEMPHILL,) embraced the entire subject; and he hoped that the present bill, instead of going to a Committee of the Whole, would be referred to the same committee with the general bill, which was already before the House. He was not adverse to the particular measure embraced by this bill; he did not care at what point the general system of internal improvement should be commenced, but he hoped that, on that system, we should either move as a nation, or not move at all.

Mr. Cook said he was decidedly opposed to act upon the bill in its present state, and was proceeding to make some remarks on the principle of the bill, when he was reminded by the Speaker that any discussion of the merits of the bill in its present stage would be out of order.

On motion of Mr. JENNINGS, the bill was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

CONTRACTS FOR CANNON, &c.

The resolution yesterday proposed by Mr. COCKE, was then taken up for consideration, in the following words:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House copies of all contracts for cannon, cannon shot, muskets, and other small arms, for the use of the United States, which have been entered into since the first of January, 1820, and that he state whether notice for proposals was given for each contract in any newspaper, if so, in what paper, and how long before the contract was concluded; who are interested in each, ostensibly, or

DECEMBER, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

as secret partner, so far as he may have been informed, or believes.

Mr. ISACKS, of Tennessee, proposed as an amendment, to strike out the last clause of the resolution, (in italics;) and to insert in its room the following:

"Who are the persons with whom such contracts were made, and whether there are any other persons beneficially interested therein; if so, who they are, and in what cases, so far as he may be informed."

Mr. COCKE said, that, though he believed, if the amendment was adopted, all his objects might yet be obtained, yet, if his friend would reflect for a moment, there was a part of his amendment which he would strike out, because, if copies of the contracts were laid before the House, they would show on the face of them who were ostensibly engaged in the contracts. The object of my resolution, said Mr. C., is not only to see who made the contracts, but whether any person is concerned in them under the rose. We have, in the statute-book, laws which prohibit a certain description of persons from being interested in contracts. If any such are interested in contracts, though their names do not appear in them, the nation ought to know it, to ascertain whether these contracts were legally made. I have, therefore, asked, (said Mr. C.) by my motion, not only who are the contractors, but who are concerned in the contract, so far as the Executive has information on that point. That, Mr. C. said, was his object, and he cared not whether the word "secret," or, if gentlemen chose it, clandestine, was inserted in the resolution or not. Any word which would elicit the information which he wanted, he would cheerfully acquiesce in.

Mr. ISACKS said, in reply, that he had no disposition to alter the grounds of the inquiry proposed by the resolution of his colleague. The same object would in substance be obtained, if the amendment should be adopted, that would be obtained by the resolution, in its original shape. He acknowledged, for his own part, he was in possession of no information which would induce him either to make or withhold this call; his colleague, however, had moved it, and he would willingly vote with him. All that he intended by his amendment was to change the terms of a part of the resolution, which he thought open to objection, for others more acceptable. It was not necessary for him to say the particular object he had in view: the bare reading of the original clause of the amendment would be sufficient to show that the terms of the latter were preferable.

The amendment was adopted without a division.

Mr. RICH suggested that every valuable object to be obtained by this resolution would be attained by asking for abstracts instead of copies of the contracts referred to, and would save trouble and expense in the details of the preparing and printing the papers called for, and he submitted an amendment to that effect.

Mr. COCKE was opposed to this amendment. He should like to see the whole contracts, he said—to see it in all its bearings. There could not be a great many contracts for cannon and cannon shot, muskets, and small arms, since the year 1820. When the contracts are before us, said he, we can see the whole. If we get extracts, they may be extracts of such parts as we do not want to see, and care nothing at all about. He hoped gentlemen would indulge him so far as to let him look at the contracts as they really stand.

Mr. RICH then withdrew his amendment, and the resolution, as amended by Mr. ISACKS' motion, was adopted.

FRIDAY, December 19.

Mr. CAMBRELENG presented a memorial from the manufacturers of cordage, in the city of New York, against any increase which may be proposed, or contemplated to be proposed, on foreign hemp, upon its importation into the United States; which memorial was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. BRENT presented a memorial of Daniel W. Coxe, praying for the confirmation of the title to a tract of land of thirty leagues square, lying on Ouachita river in Louisiana, granted to the Marquis de Maison Rouge, by the Spanish Government, in the year 1797. This petition gave occasion to some conversation; Mr. B. expressing a wish that, as the importance of the property involved in the petition, required a more thorough and extensive examination of the claim, than could be given it by the Committee on Private Land Claims, already burdened, as that committee was, with a multiplicity of business, it might go to a select committee.

Mr. OWEN, of Alabama, concurred in this desire, but thought that, as there was a great mass of claims of a nature analogous to that now presented, arising from the cession to the United States of Louisiana and the Floridas, it would be better that a permanent committee be appointed, to be designated "The Committee on French, British, and Spanish Land Claims," to whom claims of this description, exclusively, might be referred.

The SPEAKER declared that a motion now to appoint a committee of this description would be out of order. [See post.]

The petition offered by Mr. BRENT was then ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. CROWNSHIELD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, made a report on the petition of Julia Lawrence, widow of Captain James Lawrence, deceased, late of the Navy of the United States, accompanied by a bill further extending the term of half-pay pensions to the widows and children of officers, seamen, and marines, who died in the public service; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. C., from the same committee, also made a report on the petition of Penelope Denny, accompanied by a bill making provision for her support; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made a second unfavorable report on the case of the levy court of Calvert county, in the State of Maryland; which was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS's resolution, offered yesterday, was called up, and, on motion of the original mover, the resolution was modified by omitting the word "present."

Mr. WEBSTER took this occasion to state to the House that he should move for the consideration, on this day fortnight, of the resolution which he submitted some days ago, proposing to send a mission to Greece.

The resolution of Mr. WILLIAMS was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, it was Resolved, That, in addition to six hundred copies of the public documents, ordered to be printed by a resolve of this House, passed on the 25th day of March, 1818, the further number of thirty copies be printed, to supply the present deficiency for the members of the House.

[This is to supply the additional number of members introduced into this House, under the new apportionment, according to the late census.]

On motion of Mr. CALL, the Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a naval depot in the harbor of Pensacola.

Mr. WRIGHT moved that the House do come to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Cumberland Road be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an examination and survey of the routes from Washington, in Pennsylvania, by Steubenville, in Ohio, and Wellsburg, in Virginia, to ascertain if a less expensive and more eligible route can be found, for the National road, from Washington to Columbus, the seat of government of Ohio, than the one heretofore proposed; and, also, to inquire into the expediency of changing the location of said road.

The resolution was read, and disagreed to by the House.

FOREIGN LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. OWEN moved that the House do come to the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed, to be styled "The Committee on French, British, and Spanish Land Claims."

Mr. CAMPBELL objected to this resolution, not on its principle, to which he had no objection, but because its phraseology was so general and extensive as to embrace the whole of the cases arising under the cessions of Louisiana and the Floridas—cases which had hitherto been assigned to the two standing Committees on Public Lands and Private Land Claims, of which committees the principal business arose out of claims of this description. Mr. CAMPBELL wished the gentleman from Alabama to understand that he was not averse to the appointment of such a committee as he desired—on the contrary he wished for it; but he was confident that the gentleman would, himself, perceive, on reflection, that the language of the resolution was too broad.

Mr. SCOTT expressed a hope that the mover of the resolution would not include Missouri in its provisions, as he was averse from having the claims arising in that State, under French and Spanish grants, in any manner mixed with the British claims, and he believed the same wish was entertained by the delegate from Arkansas. He therefore moved, as an amendment, an exception of the State of Missouri and the Territory of Arkansas from the operation of the resolution.

Mr. OWEN accepted this amendment as a modification of his motion.

Mr. TAYLOR observed that, as this was a proposition to create a new committee, and of a permanent character, it demanded some deliberation. The House had already two standing Committees on Land Claims; formerly there had been but one such committee. The House had already subdivided the duty of considering these claims, and before they went farther, he thought some reflection was requisite. He therefore moved that the resolution lie on the table. In which the mover and the House concurred, and the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. BEECHER, of Ohio, moved that the bill for the continuation of the Cumberland road, reported yesterday, be now taken up and considered; and the question being taken, it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 81.

The House adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, December 22.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented a memorial of sundry insurance companies and merchants of the city of Philadelphia, praying that the Government of the United States may adopt measures to procure them redress for spoiliations committed on the lawful commerce of the citizens of the United States by French cruisers; which memorial was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HEMPHILL also presented a memorial and petition of the President and Directors of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company, praying for the aid and assistance of the General Government in carrying the contemplated canal into effect; which memorial was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. McCox, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of Brintnel Robins, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, and others; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICH, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Loudon Case; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LIVINGSTON laid the following resolutions on the table for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report what progress has been made in erecting lighthouses on the Dry Tortugas, and at or near Cape Florida; and that he also report whether

DECEMBER, 1823.

Amendments to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

the security of the navigation of the Gulf Stream, between Florida and the Bahama Banks, does not require the erection of lighthouses, or beacons, or the placing of buoys or floating lights on some other places, on or near the coast of Florida.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to negotiate with the Government of Great Britain for a cession of so much land on the Island of Abaco, at or near the Hole in the Wall, and at such other places, within the acknowledged dominion of that Power, on the islands, keys, or shoals, on the Bahama Banks, as may be necessary for the erection and support of lighthouses, beacons, buoys, or floating-lights, for the security of navigation over and near the said banks, and to be used solely for such purposes.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to ascertain and report to this House, whether the rocks called the double-headed shot keys, or any other of the rocks or desert islets, near the Bahama banks, but separated therefrom by a deep channel, and on which the security of navigation of the Gulf of Florida requires that lighthouses or beacons should be placed, are within the dominion of any and what foreign Kingdom or State, or whether they are not now subject to be appropriated by the right of occupancy.

Mr. HERRICK laid the following resolution on the table for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to lay before this House a statement of the extent of each post route in the United States; the number of miles the mail is annually transported on each route, with the annual expense of transportation, under existing contracts, and the amount of postage, which accrued on each route, after deducting the compensation of postmasters and incidental expenses, for one year next preceding the first day of April last.

Mr. BRECK laid the following resolution on the table for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish this House with the amount of exports from the United States to Greece, Asia Minor, and Egypt, during the years 1820, 1821, and 1822; also, the amount of imports therefrom, for the same period, distinguishing, in separate columns, the countries under the control of the Turkish Government, from those possessed by the Greeks in arms; also, the amount of duties paid on said imports into the Treasury of the United States.

The report of the Committee on Claims, unfavorable to the petition of Garret Fountain, which was some days ago laid on the table, was taken up and read.

Mr. TYSON moved that the negative particle in the report, which determines against the petitioner, be stricken out.

On which Mr. WILLIAMS called for the reading of a report of the Third Auditor, on the case involved in the bill; after which, Mr. STORRS moved that the report be referred to a Committee of the Whole, and be printed; which was carried.

The bill from the Senate entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt,'" was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of Jeremiah Manning, of New Jersey; which, having been considered, was reported without amendment; and it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of Thomas W. Bacot, Postmaster of Charleston, South Carolina, appropriating a sum of money paid by him for amount of a reward paid for apprehension of a mail robber.) The report of the committee upon the case having been read, the Committee rose and reported the bill without amendment, and it was engrossed for a third reading.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of Jacob Shaeffer, (a corporal in the Army,) who obtained his discharge after twenty months' service, and now asks for the bounty in land; and the report of the Committee on Private Land Claims, on the petition, having been read, Mr. STERLING, of Connecticut, moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, for the purpose of destroying it. This motion gave rise to a debate of something like an hour. It was supported by Mr. STERLING, and opposed by Mr. W. SMITH, of Virginia, and Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, the chairman of the committee which reported it. Finally, the motion was negatived, and the bill being reported to the House, was, after a few observations, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. BRENT, of Louisiana, moved that the memorial from Mr. Cox, agent of the Marquis of Maison Rouge, presented by him a few days since, and laid on the table, be referred to a select committee.

This motion gave rise to some debate. A motion was made by Mr. COCKE to refer the claim to the standing Committee on Public Lands, instead of a select one. The argument pro and con lies in a small space. The great amount, importance, and intricacy, of the claim, were the reasons assigned for referring it to a select committee, which was objected to on the ground that select committees were always supposed to be favorable to any subject referred to them, whilst standing committees, selected without reference to any particular claim or object, might be considered in the light of impartial tribunals, fully possessed, by experience and inquiry, of the law, and the principles applicable to cases brought before them.

The gentlemen who engaged in the debate were, on the one side, Mr. COCKE, Mr. STERLING, Mr. CONDUCT, and Mr. FOOT; and, on the other, Mr. BRENT, Mr. LIVERMORE, and Mr. MALLARY.

The memorial was at length referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. McDUFFIE, from the committee appointed "to inquire into the expediency of recommending to the several States the propriety of amending the Constitution of the United States, in such manner that the mode of electing the members of the House of Representatives in Congress may be uniform throughout the United States; also, that the mode of choosing Electors of President and Vice President of the United States may be, in like manner, uniform; and, also, that the election of the said officers may, in no event, devolve upon the House of Representatives;" made a detailed report, accompanied by a joint resolution, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in respect to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States; which resolution was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union. The report and resolution are as follows:

The committee, profoundly impressed with the importance of the propositions embraced in the resolution under which they have been appointed, have felt a corresponding sense of the magnitude and difficulty of the duty imposed upon them by the order of the House. To devise a plan for the election of members of the House of Representatives, and of the President and Vice President of the United States, which will correct existing and obviate impending evils, and, at the same time, harmonize the conflicting views of States, variously situated, and variously affected by it, has been the anxious desire and laborious effort of the committee. How far they have been successful in accomplishing these great objects, they submit it to the indulgence and liberality of the House to determine.

The Constitution of the United States provides, that "the times, places, and manner, of holding elections for Representatives, shall be prescribed, in each State, by the Legislature thereof; that Congress may, at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations." It also provides, that "each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of Electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in Congress."

The plan submitted by the committee, proposes that each State shall be divided into as many districts as will equal the number of Representatives to which the State may be entitled in Congress; and that each of the said districts shall elect one Representative. It also proposes, that each of the said districts shall choose one Elector of President and Vice President of the United States; and that the Electors, thus appointed in each State shall have the two additional Electors to which the State is entitled.

From this collated view of the existing provisions and proposed amendments of the Constitution, it will be seen that a fundamental change is contemplated, in reference to the mode of choosing members of the House of Representatives, and Electors of President and Vice President of the United States. It is a change, however, which counts among its strongest claims to our favorable consideration, its absolute efficacy in preventing changes. For it will fix upon uniform principles those creative operations of popular sovereignty, which are now liable to be controlled by the diversified and clashing expedients of twenty-four States, mutually independent. Indeed, an attentive consideration of the nature and functions of a written Constitution, will lead us to the extraordinary but manifest conclusion that, in relation to the mode of choosing the popular branch of the National Legislature, and of the Chief Executive Magistrate of the Republic, we have no Constitutional provision at all.

A fixedness and permanence, not liable to be disturbed by ordinary acts of legislation, are essentially involved in the elementary notion of a Constitution. Accordingly, in all Governments having any just pretensions to civilization or freedom, it has been a primary object to secure those fundamental canons which give organization and impulse to the political system, against any changes proceeding from an authority less solemn and weighty, than the source of sovereignty itself. To secure liberty against the violent tyranny of successive and temporary factions, and, also, against the more systematic encroachments of ambition, this extraordinary stability of the law, which constitutes the Government, has been found, by universal experience, to be an indispensable safeguard. Yet, in direct violation of this primary and essential principle of regulated freedom, the very foundations of the two most important branches of this Government are permitted to fluctuate with the mutable counsels of twenty-four separate Legislatures. The committee, therefore, believe that the plan proposed is recommended, not less by the consideration that it permanently and uniformly fixes the rule which it introduces, than by the intrinsic superiority of that rule to any other that has been adopted, amidst the changes incident to the existing state of Constitutional laxity.

Under the existing system, if system that may be called, which is without system, the inquiry in the respective States is not, which is intrinsically the best mode of choosing Representatives in Congress, and Electors of President and Vice President of the United States, but what is the best defensive expedient to counteract the regulations of other States, and secure the utmost relative weight in the affairs of the Union. The party which happens to have the ascendancy will thus be furnished with pretexts, at least plausible and imposing, for the adoption of measures calculated to deprive the minority of their just rights, and tending to produce, as they invariably have produced, that acrimonious political excitement which inevitably results from injustice and oppression, however disguised or palliated by motives of public expediency. To prevent majorities from exercising this sort of oppression, is one of the primary objects of a written Constitution.

With these general preliminary views, the committee will proceed to the separate consideration of the amendments embraced in the plan submitted to the House.

It has been seen that the "times, places, and manner," of electing the members of this House, are now liable to be prescribed by the Legislatures of the several States, subject to the controlling and superseding power of Congress.

In addition to the remarks already made on the political solecism of placing it in the power of every State government virtually to change the Constitution of the Union, the committee feel bound to examine briefly the nature and tendency of the power thus vested in Congress.

If it should happen to this, as it has happened to all other free countries, that the administration of the Republic should fall into the hands of a faction; of men who, having acquired power by corrupt combinations, would be disposed to retain it in opposition to the will of the people and to exert it in opposition to their interests, the power in question would become exceedingly dangerous. It is in such periods that the barriers of the Constitution are most essential; because it is in such periods that those, from whose reluctant grasp the sceptre of dominion is about to be wrested by an indignant people, are exposed to the strongest human temptation to perpetuate their authority by every desperate expedient not absolutely prohibited.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Amendments to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

And does not the Constitution almost literally place in their hands precisely such an expedient in the power of regulating the elections of the members of this body? It is susceptible of demonstration, that the elections might be so arranged by a party in power, that a small minority of the people would elect a majority of the national representatives. The mode of operation would be various, according to varying circumstances. Sometimes the object would be accomplished by changing the district into the general-ticket system; sometimes by an artificial arrangement of districts; and sometimes by a skillful combination of both. As nothing is too desperate for a faction, struggling for existence, let us suppose that they should prescribe, as they would have the unquestionable power to prescribe, that, in all those States where a majority of the people were favorable to their purposes, the representatives should be elected by a general ticket, thus suppressing the voice of the minority; and, that all the States opposed to their domination, should be divided into districts, in such manner that the minority of the people should elect a majority of representatives. As examples of such high-handed proceedings are already to be found in the history of several of the State governments, the supposition that the General Government, with more powerful inducements to mislead it, will, at some future period, pursue a similar course, cannot be considered extravagant or improbable.

The committee therefore feel the deepest conviction, that the power now vested in Congress, of controlling the election of its own members, is utterly inconsistent with every just conception of Constitutional liberty, and ought no longer to exist.

Having thus attempted to show the necessity of a plan of such permanence, as equally to exclude the disturbing influence, both of the General and State Governments, the Committee propose to examine the comparative advantages of the general ticket and district systems of electing the Representatives in Congress. It will scarcely be denied, that a just regard for the relative weight of each State in the affairs of the Union, requires that one or the other of the systems should prevail in all the States. Upon any question of national policy, in relation to which the interests or wishes of two States should stand mutually opposed, it would be obviously unjust that the one should have, by means of a general ticket, an undivided vote in this House; while the other, electing by districts, might be almost neutralized by her divisions. It remains, therefore, only that we inquire which of the two systems is intrinsically the best.

In favor of the general ticket system, it has been urged, with considerable plausibility, that, by extending the sphere of selection, the number of competitors, of competent qualifications, will be proportionally increased, and that the influence of demagogues, who can only operate effectually in a small sphere, will be greatly diminished.

It cannot be denied that it sometimes happens that a particular district might select a representative residing out of its limits, better qualified than any residing within them; but, it is to be remarked, that there is nothing in the system proposed, which will prevent a district from electing any resident citizen of the State, without regard to the particular place of his residence. It is true that each district will generally elect one of its own citizens, from obvious considerations justifying the preference. But this, so far from being an objection, would tend to produce a distribution of the talent of the State, in every view desirable; for it has been found that talents, like every thing else, will naturally seek the market which promises the most appropriate reward.

That part of the argument under consideration, which assumes that the district system is calculated to give to the arts of demagogues an undue ascendancy, is worthy of a more serious consideration. It will be admitted that this system enables the constituent to become better acquainted with his representative than is practicable under the other. Can it be maintained, then, that, in proportion as we increase the opportunities of the people to obtain a knowledge of the character and qualifications of the candidates, we diminish the chances of a judicious selection? It is true, that, in a fair competition before the people, art and hypocrisy will prevail over talent, integrity, and independence? On the contrary, it is confidently believed that truth will ultimately prevail in all competitions before the people, if maintained with an ability and firmness equal to that by which error is supported. This proposition is the basis upon which only a representative democracy can be sustained. If it be not true, it then becomes expedient to devise some scheme which will virtually take from the people the elective power. And the committee are of opinion that the general ticket system is precisely of this description.

In a State of any considerable extent, almost every candidate must, in the nature of things, be unknown to the great body of the people. They, of necessity, vote by faith, and not by knowledge; and the few distinguished politicians who are selected to concentrate the popular opinion, acquire a control over it little short of the power of absolute dictation. Universal experience teaches us that few men are to be found, of sufficient firmness and purity to resist the temptation to abuse such power. Cabals and factious combinations, stimulated by selfish views of aggrandizement, are the inevitable consequences.

But it is not to be expected that this sort of domination will be quietly submitted to by those politicians who have no participation in it. A contest for the dictatorship ensues, agitating the community and destroying the harmony of society, by mere personal and family feuds, when there is no difference of principle between the contending parties.

Nor would the evil effects of this state of things be confined to the State. As the political course of opposing parties is very much determined by feelings of mutual antipathy, it would frequently happen that when one party supported the existing administration of the General Government, the other would stand opposed to it. Under these circumstances every revolution produced by the alternate successes and defeats of these rival parties, might increase or diminish the supporters of the General Government, by the whole number of the Representatives of the State in Congress. Besides the mutability which would be thus communicated to the national councils, the General Government, feeling its power to be identified with the fate of a State party, would be tempted to interfere in the political struggles of that State. And when we consider the effect which might be produced by the judicious distribution of patronage amongst the leaders in such contests, we cannot doubt that the facility and the means of such interference are equal to the temptation.

It may be justly said of the plan of voting by a general ticket, that it is not consistent with the true theory of a popular representation. The popular branch of the National Legislature should exhibit a faithful image of the people. When, for example, a State is divided in its interests and opinions, when some districts are agricultural, some manufacturing, and some commercial, and, if you will, when some are republican and some federal, each of those districts of people should have a fair representation in Congress. Because one interest or one party happen to be predominant in a State, it is no adequate reason that the rest should be disfranchised and have no voice in the national councils. This, indeed, would not be a representation of the people, but of the States; giving to this House a federal, instead of a popular origin and character.

A little reflection will convince us that this is not a mere nominal distinction. Upon all the great political questions, by which this, like all other free Governments, must be often divided into parties, the general ticket system, by entirely suppressing the voice of the minority, would cause the representation from each State, in Congress, to be unanimous, on one side or the other. Thus would States be arrayed against States on this floor, stimulated by pride, heated by collisions, and estranged by feelings of rivalry, and throwing into the discussions here all the violence of local feelings and local prejudices. By the inevitable tendency of this state of things to produce a geographical formation of parties, we need not the prophetic spirit of Washington to warn us that the harmony of the Union would be destroyed, and perhaps its existence endangered.

Every thing that tends to strengthen the peculiar and exclusive feelings of State pride and sectional prejudice, inevitably weakens the bonds of the Union. We are, therefore, urged, by all the considerations that attach us to this great palladium of our security and happiness, to adopt such an organization as will break those large masses of political power, whose collisions can never fail to shake our system to its deepest foundation. It ought never to be forgotten, that the citizens of this Republic, though subdivided into States for certain essential purposes, are one people, in all that relates to the General Government. Born to a common inheritance, purchased by the toils, the sacrifices, and the blood of their common ancestors, they should be united, not less by the ties of common sympathy and kindred feeling, than by those of common interest. With a view to give strength and durability to these essential bonds of union, it is of the utmost consequence that the local minorities in the several States, and various geographical divisions of our extensive country, should have a fair and full representation in Congress. In periods of deep political excitement, nothing is better calculated to allay sectional animosities, and subdue the angry spirit of faction, than the mediatorial influence of such representatives.

The committee propose now to consider, more particularly, that part of the resolution committed to their charge, which makes it their duty to inquire into the expediency of establishing a uniform mode of appointing the Electors of President and Vice President of the United States.

Three modes now prevail in the different States. In some, the appointment is made by the Legislature; in some, by the people, voting a general ticket; and in some, by the people, voting by districts. By giving each of these modes a separate consideration, we shall be the better enabled to ascertain the relative merits of that which is submitted to the House for its adoption.

Pre-existing bodies, sufficiently small and permanent to be exposed to the tampering and seductive arts of intrigue and corruption, ought to have no agency in the election of a President of the United States, upon any ground short of absolute necessity. State Legislatures are bodies of this description, and there is no pretence of a necessity for interposing them between the people and the Electoral College. According to the true conception of our political system, the people exercise the elective power. When, from considerations of convenience, agents are appointed for this special purpose, it is not, as in the case of a legislative trust, to exercise their own judgments, but simply to execute the popular will. The assumption, that the Legislatures would make a better choice than the people, involves the admission that their choice would be different from that of the people; an admission which, if the foregoing view be correct, furnishes, in itself, an unanswerable objection to the interposition of such an agency. In proportion, therefore, as the number of intermediate agencies is increased, the chances are multiplied that the will of the people will be defeated, in the choice of a Chief Magistrate. The committee have no confidence in that sort of artificial and complicated machinery, through which some suppose it necessary to filtrate the popular will, in order to purify and enlighten it. The stream of elective sovereignty is no where so pure as at its source. Every remove from this, is an advance in a course inevitably ending in corruption. Indeed, it is apparent, that the framers of the Constitution, by ordaining that "each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may prescribe," the Electors of President and Vice President, intended to exclude the Legislatures from making the appointment themselves. That this is the true interpretation of the Constitution, is abundantly obvious, as well from the fair import of the words of that instrument, as from the profoundest commentary ever written on it. The authors of the "Federalist," in speaking of the election of the President, use these words: "It was desirable that the sense of the people should operate in the choice of a person to whom so important a trust was to be confided. This end will be answered by committing the right of making it, not to any pre-established body, but to men chosen by the people for the special purpose, and at the particular conjuncture."

Whatever objections may be urged against the appointment of the Electors by the people, no one, it is presumed, will allege that corruption will find, in that mode of proceeding, any scope for its operation. Neither have we any just ground to apprehend that intrigue, operating by means less palpable than corruption, and appealing to motives less profligate than venality, will produce any impression upon the vote of ten millions of freemen, scattered over the vast domain, which is their favored inheritance. The fact that these principles are, from their very nature, incapable of acting upon multitudes, would prevent them from operating upon the people, even if we had not the higher security furnished by their virtue and patriotism.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Amendments to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

But it is frequently objected, that the great mass of the people are not sufficiently intelligent to decide upon the qualifications of so important an officer as the Chief Magistrate of a great Republic; and yet, that, in voting for Electors, who are merely the organs of their will, they in fact determine that question. As the history of all nations, of any considerable extent, gives at least a plausible coloring to this objection, it deserves to be deliberately examined. No political principle is more firmly established by the experience of nations, than that the freedom of political institutions cannot rise higher than the intelligence of the people. All attempts to erect free Governments upon any other basis than an intelligent population, have always resulted, and must ever result, in re-action and disaster. If, therefore, the committee could believe that the people of the United States are not sufficiently intelligent to perform so essential a function of popular sovereignty as the election of their Chief Magistrate, they could not resist the unwelcome conclusion, that our system of government is but a delusive hope, resting upon unsubstantial foundations, and containing within itself the principles of rapid degeneracy and certain dissolution. Responsibility to the people, all must admit, is the only adequate security for freedom, the great conservative principle of a representative government. And what would be the value of the responsibility of a public agent to a people not capable of electing him? If, therefore, it could be shown that the people are not competent to elect the President, an argument would result, which it would be difficult to resist, in favor of those political combinations which, under various forms and pretences, are ever ready to assume the province of dictating to the people, and which can only be regarded, when habitual and permanent, as synonymous with corruption.

Under these circumstances, we have a source of just consolation and pride in the reflection that, in all that relates to the maintenance and enjoyment of a system of practical freedom, history has left no record of a people at all to be compared to the citizens of these United States.

A very brief notice of the prominent circumstances which distinguish our social and political condition from that of the republican nations of antiquity, and of the civilized nations of modern Europe, will furnish, at once, the evidence and the explanation of this superiority.

No estimate of the comparative condition of this and the ancient republics can be just which does not embrace the invention of the art of printing, and the consequent establishment of a free press. These causes alone have produced a permanent revolution in the political condition of the human race. Societies of freemen have been improved and enlarged to a degree utterly unattainable without these efficient means of diffusing intelligence, and the republican system has consequently received a modification and extension which the wisdom of antiquity would have pronounced impossible. The harangues of their orators, delivered to collected multitudes, were almost the only means of political intelligence enjoyed by the people of the ancient republics. The extent of a republic, or, in other words, of a government, emanating from the people, and responsible to them, is confined, by an imperious political necessity, to such limits that the proceedings of the central administration may be promptly, certainly, and generally, communicated to the extremes of the country. Adverting, therefore, to the limited means of communicating intelligence possessed by the ancients, the reason is apparent why their republics were so extremely contracted. They were, of necessity, simple democracies; and, in the days of their greatest purity and splendor, the portion of the people which really governed was confined to their chief cities, because that portion alone was within the reach of the only existing sources of political intelligence. On the contrary, the great body of the people of the United States, dispersed over an immense region, to whose soil they are attached by the strongest ties, receive daily, in the tranquillity of retirement, from books, documents, legislative discussions, and the chronicles of passing events, that knowledge of the affairs of the Republic, which the Greeks and Romans received almost entirely from the occasional debates of their orators before the assemblies of the people. It is, therefore, extremely obvious that any inference unfavorable to the political capabilities of the American people, which can be drawn from the history of those republics, must be founded upon loose analogies, calculated rather to delude than to enlighten.

A comparison between the United States and the civilized nations of modern times, will lead to results equally flattering.

All the great political societies of modern Europe, having a feudal origin, are constructed upon feudal principles. A permanent inequality of property, maintained by law, and consecrated by usage, has naturally produced the extremes of a proud aristocracy and a degraded populace, without any intermediate power sufficient to control their irregular tendencies. In such a state of things, it is not difficult to conceive that a popular election of the Chief Executive Magistrate would throw the hostile elements of society into such violent collision as to involve in anarchy and ruin all that is sacred in the institutions of the country. But all the American communities which compose the United States, are essentially different, both in their origin and construction, from those of modern Europe. Our ancestors, in the full maturity of reason, with no consecrated errors to embarrass them, reared up, from its simplest elements, a system of practical freedom; and, from the first settlement of the country, every successive generation has been accustomed to exercise the functions of self-government, in every form, and in every variety of combinations. Nor are we less favorably distinguished in the composition of our social system, than in its origin.

The abolition of the laws of primogeniture has produced a general equality of property, and this again, together with the equality of civil and political privileges, has produced a general diffusion of knowledge, of which history furnishes no example. Almost the entire mass of our population corresponds, in character and situation, with what is denominated the middle interest in England, and which is justly considered, by her most enlightened statesmen, as the soundest part of her population. In extending the elective system in the United States, therefore, beyond all former precedents, we do nothing more than adapt our political to our social system. In fact, so widely different is our situation from that of any other nation, that it may be truly said that the people would be less liable to make an injudicious choice of a chief magistrate than of any other important officer of the Government. Such is the admirable distribution and subordination of political powers in our system, and such the variety of practical schools of preparation and trial through which a statesman must pass, before he can aspire, with any just or reasonable expectations of success, to the highest office in the Republic, that the qualifications and pretensions of the candidates can always be determined by the wisdom of their past measures, and the importance of their past services. As these are the only indications of wisdom upon which it would be safe to rely, in the selection of an officer of such vast responsibility and importance, it is satisfactory to reflect that they are indications, also, of so palpable a kind, that they cannot fail to make their just impression, both upon the intelligence and gratitude of an enlightened and patriotic people.

But another objection, of a kindred spirit with that which has been just considered, is frequently urged against the change proposed. It is said that the appointment of Electors by the people, would so directly involve the canvass for the Presidency itself, as to produce a degree of popular excitement subversive of the order and peace of society. The remarks already offered, in relation to the dispersion of our population, the peculiar structure of our society, and the general diffusion of intelligence, are sufficient, to show, that nothing in the experience of other countries can be regarded as a just foundation for such an apprehension. But, there are other views of the subject, which will lead us to the conclusion, that the tendency of the proposed change, upon which this object is founded, is one of its strongest recommendations.

The order of social virtues and social duties in the United States, is nearly the reverse of that which existed amongst the Greeks and Romans. In an ordinary state of things, when no great emergency calls for patriotic sacrifices, the duty which principally engrosses the feelings and the efforts of an American citizen, is to make provision for his comfortable subsistence, and to satisfy the claims of his family. Whereas, the first consideration of a Greek or a Roman citizen, both in peace and in war, was the glory of his country. Our tendency, therefore, is to give too exclusive an attention to private pursuits, and sink into indifference in relation to the general concerns of the Republic; while the tendency of the Greeks and Romans was to intermeddle perpetually in public affairs, to the neglect and detriment of their private concerns. Our danger, therefore, is too much popular apathy; theirs, was too much popular excitement. And though the state of things existing here, is more deeply founded in nature, and furnishes a more substantial basis for a durable and extended system of liberty, it certainly indicates the necessity of such Constitutional arrangements as will rouse the attention of the people to so great a national question as the election of a Chief Magistrate. No stronger evidence need be offered, of the existence of such a necessity, than the actual state of public opinion on that subject, at this moment, in many parts of the Union. The people have been so long accustomed to have no practical agency in the election of a President, that the idea is not uncommon, that they have nothing to do with it. As the inevitable tendency of this state of popular indifference, is to increase the power and influence of political managers and unprincipled combinations, it is of the last importance that it should be corrected, if possible. The committee are of the opinion, that the plan submitted will furnish the remedy.

But it yet remains that we inquire whether the people should vote by a general ticket, or by districts. The committee will, therefore, proceed to state the considerations which have induced them to adopt the latter system. It was as evidently the intention of the framers of the Constitution, as it is the dictate of sound policy, that the President of the United States should be the choice of the people, and not of the States. It is true, they contemplated an infusion of the federal principle into the election, in the proportion of the Senators to the Representatives in Congress; and this proportion is retained in the plan proposed by the committee.

But, to extend the federal principle to the whole body of the Electors, would be nothing less than sacrificing the rights, the interests, and the power of the people, to the false and imaginary idol of State consolidation.

Assuming it as an undeniable position, that a majority of the people of the United States have a right to elect the President, and that the will of such majority ought to prevail, it can be demonstrated that the system of voting by a general ticket would render this fundamental principle of our Government the sport of accidental combinations. Six of the States, for example, if they give a unanimous vote, can elect the President. But, if they vote by a general ticket, the candidate who obtains a bare majority of the popular vote, receives the unanimous Electoral vote of the State. So that, assuming the population of the United States to be eight millions, a little more than two millions of the people might elect the President. Let us again suppose that there are two States, one containing nine hundred thousand people, and entitled to thirty Electoral votes, and the other containing eight hundred thousand people, and entitled to twenty-six Electoral votes. Let us further suppose, that there are two candidates for the Presidency, of whom one is supported by five hundred thousand of the people of the first supposed State, and the other by the remaining four hundred thousand, and the entire eight hundred thousand of the other State. Under these circumstances, the candidate who obtains the support of only five hundred thousand of the people, would receive thirty Electoral votes, while twelve hundred thousand people could give the opposing candidate only twenty-six! According to this system of false equations, a large minority of the people is precisely equal to no minority at all. By thus entirely excluding the State minorities from the calculation, in making up the general aggregate, the people are literally immolated, by hundreds of thousands, at the shrine of an artificial and delusive system, which, by making a majority equal to the whole in each State, gives a minority an equal chance for the ascendancy in the Union.

The true popular principle, in the opinion of the committee, is that which prevails in all other popular elections throughout the United States. In the election, for example, of the Governor of a State, by the people, a candidate does not count the unanimous vote of every county where he happens to obtain a majority, but the respective majorities of the several candidates are added to their respective minorities, and the aggregates thus produced are taken as the true expression of the popular will. If, then, in all that relates to the "common defence and general welfare," the people of the United States are really to be regarded as one people; if all the citizens of the Republic, whether their lot happens to be cast on the one side or the other of an imaginary line, are equally entited to their vote and their voice in the common concerns and common councils of the Union; if it be wise to exclude from those councils the peculiar and exclusive feelings of States; and if the man who is to preside over the common destinies of all, should have peculiar obligations to discharge, and peculiar feelings to indulge, towards none of the States; we are under the most solemn obligations to reject a plan for electing the President, which would array States against States in ambitious conflict for the mastery, and equally sacrifice the inalienable rights of the people, and the general harmony of the Union.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Amendments to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

But there is another objection to the system of voting by a general ticket, which the committee consider unanswerable.

It is a practical proposition, conclusively established by the experience of all the States where the experiment has been made, that this system tends, by an inevitable necessity, to transfer into the hands of a few the power of controlling the entire suffrage of the State. In a State entitled to thirty Electors, and composed, perhaps, of fifty counties, it must be apparent that almost every county would vote for an entire ticket of its own; and that the popular will would be thus exposed to such distraction as completely to endanger its success, without some means of giving it concentration. And as the power of the individuals selected for this purpose must be co-extensive with the wills which it would be their objects to concentrate, it would follow, that they would virtually decide which of the Presidential candidates should receive the whole Electoral vote of the State. At the first commencement of such a system, when the persons clothed with the authority of uniting the popular will were really its representatives, no great evil would be experienced. But the slightest attention to the history of ambition, the tendency of power, or the lessons of our own experience, will convince us that such combinations change, in the natural course of things, from temporary expedients to permanent institutions; and that, from being the mere organs of the will of the people, they assume, under pretexts which ambition is seldom at a loss to devise, the power of dictating to the people.

In making these general remarks, the committee feel conscious that they are rather recording the history of the times in which they live, than their own speculations. And it is upon this high authority that they predicate the opinion, that, if the plan of voting by a general ticket were established, a central power would spring up in almost every State, consisting of the ruling politicians of the day, who would be bound to the people by no tie of regular responsibility, and be, in every respect, more liable to cabal, intrigue, and corruption, than the Legislature itself. And when we reflect that the entire Electoral vote of a State, upon which the Presidential election itself might turn, would frequently depend upon the integrity of a few men, perhaps of a single individual, it is difficult to conceive a state of things in which there would be stronger inducements, or greater facilities for intrigue and corruption. By dividing the States into districts, all these evils would be avoided. The will of the people would be fairly expressed. No political combinations would be necessary or practicable. Every district would, at least, have its own centre of operation, upon which corruption would be brought to bear with its inducements vastly diminished, and its consequences proportionably less to be dreaded.

The last branch of the resolution under which the committee are acting, remains to be considered.

They have found it impracticable absolutely to exclude the possibility of the election of President and Vice President devolving, in any event, upon Congress; but they believe, under the plan submitted, the contingency would not happen once in a century, upon which the election would devolve upon that body. They propose, in the event of no person receiving a majority of Electoral votes at the first balloting, that the Electors shall again meet, forthwith, in their respective States, and vote for the two persons having the highest number of votes in the first instance. This will almost invariably insure an election by the Electors at the second balloting. Indeed, it may be fairly presumed, that every candidate who is convinced he cannot be one of the two highest, in the first instance, will withdraw from the contest; and, in this manner, the probability of an election at the first balloting will be very much increased.

This branch of the amendment is recommended by all the reasons which can be urged against the election of the President by the House of Representatives. And these, in the opinion of the committee, are cogent and conclusive.

All history teaches us the melancholy truth that, in the election of a Chief Magistrate of a great Republic, intrigue and corruption, under the various and insidious disguises which they are capable of assuming, are the deleterious principles against which the precautions of human wisdom are least capable of providing an effectual resistance. The danger to be apprehended from these principles is in direct proportion to the temptation and the means of rendering them efficient instruments in promoting the views of ambition. And what prize can hold out more attractive temptations to the ambitious, than the Presidency of the United States? In pursuit of what object is even a virtuous mind so much exposed to the blandishing delusions of that wretched casuistry, which makes the end sanctify the means? And when we advert to the immense store of patronage which would be placed for distribution in the hands of the successful aspirant, it cannot be disguised, that he would have precisely those means of tampering with the members of the House of Representatives, by which the wages of wickedness might be received in the disguise of virtue's recompense; and the wretch who sold his integrity, might almost delude himself into the belief that he was serving his country. It is exceedingly unpleasant to indulge the idea, that the representatives of a virtuous and enlightened people could ever be swerved from any duty by selfish or sinister views; but we have the authority of more than human wisdom for saying, "lead us not into temptation." It is therefore the deliberate opinion of the committee, that the only effectual mode of preserving our Government from the corruptions which have undermined the liberty of so many other nations, "is to confide the election of our Chief Executive Magistrate to those who are farthest removed from the influence of his patronage."

As long as the National Legislature continues to have so direct an agency in the election of the President, even excluding the supposition of corrupt influence, the most injurious effect must be produced upon the character of its members and the temper of its deliberations. The Legislators of the Union will be converted into partisans of the respective candidates for the Presidency; their mutual criminations will unavoidably distract and embarrass the essential business of the country; and, instead of devoting themselves, exclusively, to the great objects of their legislative trust, their time will be engrossed in holding consultations and projecting devices, for the purpose of controlling public opinion on the Presidential election; and it would but too certainly result, that principles would be sacrificed to men.

It may be fairly assumed, that, until the Constitution is amended, the President of the United States will, in general, be elected virtually by Congress in one form or another. Without intending to blend the consideration of temporary questions and passing events with the general views here presented, the committee will be excused for adverting to the fact, that the eventual choice of the President by the House of Representatives, in a mode which makes a single member from one State equal to thirty-six from another, will always furnish an argument, or a pretext, for those preliminary combinations, which all admit to be evils in themselves, and only to be excused as the means of avoiding greater evils. In this manner, we are not only exposed to the contingent evil, growing out of the Constitution itself, but the certain evil of combinations for the avowed purpose of avoiding it. Congress will not only have the power of choosing a President from the three persons who shall receive the largest number of electoral votes, but will have a plausible argument in favor of nominating a President, before the electoral vote has furnished them with any certain indication of popular opinion, to direct their choice and limit the extent of their discretion.

It cannot be disguised, therefore, that the tendency of the state of things now existing under the Constitution, is to convert Congress into a permanent electoral body. Under these circumstances, the candidates for the Presidency, instead of devoting themselves to the service of the country, by measures calculated to promote the welfare and secure the confidence of the people, will be tempted to devote themselves to those arts of conciliation and management, by which the members of Congress may be most effectually secured in their interest. The ultimate consequence would be, that our Chief Magistrates would be elected by cabals of politicians, having views and interests alien from those of the people, and that the country would be governed by a succession of factions, each proscribing the members and destroying the work of the one which preceded it, and communicating to the operations of our system all the unsteadiness of a turbulent democracy, and all the tyranny of a temporary despotism.

The committee, therefore, believe, that the only effectual mode of rendering the Government efficient and steady in its operations, and at the same time consistent with the security of the general liberty, is to infuse more of the Democratic principle into the election of the President, making him, in fact, as he is in theory, the choice of the people.

Having thus attempted to show, they trust not altogether without success, that the rights and interests of the people imperiously demand that the proposed amendment should be adopted, the committee will offer a few concluding remarks upon the manner in which the States will be relatively affected by it.

It may be justly doubted whether, on such a question as the present, the States, as separate communities, can have any interest different from that of the people of the States, considered merely as portions of the common mass of our general population. But, as it is not to be expected that one class of States will surrender, without an equivalent, the relative power secured to them by the Constitution, the committee have endeavored to introduce into their plan such principles of compromise as will be most likely to secure a general acquiescence.

The division of all the States into districts will prevent them from moving in consolidated masses, and will diminish the relative power of the large States more than that of the small States; but for this there is an ample and equitable equivalent, in the diminished probability that the election of the President will come into Congress, and in the surrender by the small States, of their equal power, even when that contingency shall happen. This compromise is forcibly recommended by the consideration that the powers given up, both by the large and the small States, are powers which they ought not in justice to possess, and which are not transferred from one to another, but surrendered by both to the people.

As it is obvious that neither the large nor the small States ever will consent, or perhaps ever ought to consent, to correct the great and increasing evils of our present system, without mutual equivalents, similar to those provided in the plan submitted by the committee, the question for both to determine is, whether they will submit to the existing evils, great as they are, by the admission of all, or magnanimously offer up, on the altar of their common country, powers which are neither consistent with the rights of the people, the purity of the Government, or the harmony of the Union.

Resolved, &c., That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths thereof, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the said Constitution:

"For the purpose of choosing a President and Vice President of the United States, each State shall be divided by the Legislature thereof into so many districts as the State shall be entitled to Representatives in Congress, and each district shall be composed of contiguous or coterminous territory, and contain as nearly as may be conveniently the number of persons for whom the State is entitled to a Representative according to the apportionment; which districts, when laid off, may not be altered until after another census shall have been taken. The inhabitants of each of the said districts, who shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, shall appoint one Elector of President and Vice President, having the same qualifications. The Electors appointed shall meet in their respective States, and appoint the two other Electors to which the State is entitled, and also fill up vacancies, if such there shall be, from death, sickness, inability, or non-attendance, of electors appointed by the people. The whole number of Electors of each State shall then vote, by ballot, for the President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves. They shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and, in distinct ballots, the person voted for as Vice President; and they shall make lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice President, showing the number of votes given for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit, sealed up, to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate, who, on receiving the same, shall call a joint meeting of the Senate and House of Representatives, in which he shall preside. He shall, in the presence of such joint meeting, open all the certificates, and the votes shall be counted. If any person shall have the votes of a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, he shall be the President; and if no person shall have the votes of such majority, the President of the Senate shall, by proclamation, and by notification to the Executive of each State, as also to each of the Electors appointed, declare the fact, that no person is chosen President, and the names of the persons having the two highest numbers of votes. The Electors shall thereupon meet again in their respective States, fill up vacancies in their body, if any shall have occurred, from death, sickness, inability, or failure to attend, of any of the Electors previously appointed, and shall then proceed to vote for one of the persons, as President, who, at the first meeting, had one of the two highest numbers of votes of all the Electors; they shall make and transmit, as already prescribed, lists of the persons voted for at the second meeting, which shall be counted in like manner as the votes given at the first meeting; if, on counting the votes given by the Electors of such second meeting, it shall appear that one of the persons who had one of the two highest numbers of the votes given at the first meeting, has a majority of the votes of all the Electors given at the second meeting, he shall be the President; and if no person has such majority, the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, in joint meeting, shall, without separating, voting individually, and not by States, choose the President, in manner following: a majority of the whole number of Senators and Representatives present, and voting, being necessary to a choice; if there be two or more persons, each of whom have the highest number of Electoral votes, given at the second meeting, each one of them shall be chosen; if there be only one person having the highest number of Electoral votes, less than a majority, one of the persons who have one of the two highest numbers of votes shall be chosen; whenever more than two persons shall be eligible by the joint meeting, and no choice shall be made on the first ballot, the number shall be reduced, by dropping those who shall receive the smallest number of votes, until no more than two remain, one of whom shall be chosen; if two persons shall receive an equal number of votes, being each one moiety of the whole number given, he who had the highest number of Electoral votes, given at the second meeting, shall be the President; and if they had an equal number of votes at such second meeting, he who had the highest number of Electoral votes given at the first meeting, shall be the President; and if they had an equal number of Electoral votes, given at the first meeting also, then the Senators and Representatives shall ballot until one of them is chosen.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Amendments to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

"The person having the highest number of votes as Vice President, given at the first meeting of the Electors, shall be the Vice President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, and a President shall not have been chosen at such first meeting, the same proceedings shall be had for the choice of a Vice President as are prescribed for the choice of a President; but if, at the first meeting of the Electors, a President shall have been chosen, and a Vice President shall not have been chosen, then, from the persons having the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators; and a majority of the number present, and voting, shall be necessary to a choice.

"The Congress may, by law, fix the day for appointing Electors for President and Vice President, and the days for giving their votes the first and second time, which days shall be the same throughout the United States; and the day for giving their votes the first time, shall be not less than ten, nor more than twenty days from the day fixed for the appointment of Electors.

"The Legislature of each State shall have power to appoint the places of holding elections for the appointment of Electors, to prescribe the manner of voting, and to provide for the appointment of proper persons to conduct such elections, with authority to declare, definitively, the result thereof; but the Congress may, by law, make or alter such regulations, and may also lay off into districts, for appointing Electors, any State, the Legislature whereof shall have failed to lay off the same as herein directed."

Mr. McDUFFIE, from the same committee, also reported a joint resolution, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as respects the election of members of the House of Representatives; which resolution was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, &c. That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths thereof, shall be part of said Constitution:

"For the purpose of electing representatives in Congress, each State shall be divided, by the Legislature thereof, into as many districts as will equal the number of Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, and each district shall be composed of contiguous or conterminous territory, and contain, as nearly as may be conveniently, the number of persons which entitles the State to a representative in Congress, according to the apportionment; which districts, when laid off, shall not be altered until after another census shall be taken. Each of the said districts shall elect one Representative to Congress, and the times, places, and manner, of holding the elections in the said districts shall be prescribed by the Legislatures of the States respectively; but the Congress may, at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations."

TUESDAY, December 23.

Another member, to wit: from Virginia, JOHN FLOYD, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. COBB presented a petition of Peter L. Jackson, of the State of Georgia, setting forth that he is a native of England, and arrived in the United States in the year 1802, a minor; that he has not been naturalized according to the laws on that subject; but that, having arrived a minor; having grown into manhood; having married a native American woman, and raised a family of children;

H. OF R.

Imprisonment for Debt.

DECEMBER, 1823.

and having, in the late war with Great Britain, repeatedly performed military duty; and, subsequently, been repeatedly appointed to office by the Executive and by the people of Georgia, he ever considered himself a citizen of the United States: but that, owing to information lodged by some evil disposed persons, he has been, recently, ejected from a civil office, to which he was elected by the people of Putnam county, in Georgia, in consequence of its being decided by a judicial tribunal that he is not a citizen of the United States; and praying that a special act may be passed, admitting him, forthwith, to the rights of a citizen of the United States; which petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. OWEN presented a petition of Thomas F. Townley, on behalf of himself and the other heirs at law of the late Don Miguel Eslava, praying that all right of the United States to certain tracts of land granted by the late Spanish government of Louisiana to their ancestor, may be relinquished to the petitioners; which petition was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill to repeal in part an act, entitled "An act to lessen the compensation for marshals, clerks, and attorneys, in the cases therein mentioned;" which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the same committee, who were also instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing costs in certain suits concerning the rights of patentees, reported a bill concerning costs in certain cases; which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill last mentioned.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, asked to be discharged from the consideration of the petition of sundry inhabitants of Pembina, or Lord Selkirk's settlement, on Red river of Hudson Bay, on the ground that there was nothing in their petition upon which the Judiciary Committee could act; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. NEWTON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of William Bartlett and John Stearns, owners of the schooner Angler; and Nathaniel Carver, owner of the schooner Harmony, and others; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on private Land Claims, made a report on the petition of John Jenkins, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the same committee, made a report on the petition of William Kendall, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill last mentioned.

On motion of Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, for compelling the attendance of witnesses before commissioners named in commissions issued by the courts of the United States, for taking evidence in other districts of the United States than those where the courts are held: And, also, into the expediency of establishing, by law, a mode of taking evidence in equity cases depending in the courts of the United States.

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Sarah Chitwood; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, which is as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I herewith transmit to Congress a statement, by William Lambert, explanatory of his astronomical calculations, which were made with a view to establish the longitude of the Capitol.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, December 23, 1823.

The Message was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Joint Library Committee.

Mr. MALLARY laid the following resolution on the table, for consideration to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House such information as he may possess, (which may be disclosed without injury to the public good,) relative to the determination of any sovereign, or combinations of sovereigns, to assist Spain in the subjugation of her late colonies on the American continent; and whether any Government of Europe is disposed or determined to oppose any aid or assistance which such sovereign, or combination of sovereigns, may afford to Spain for the subjugation of her late colonies above mentioned.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill from the Senate supplementary to the act "for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt," reported the same, with an amendment, changing the whole tenor of the bill.

Mr. WEBSTER explained the grounds on which the Committee on the Judiciary had proposed this amendment. The act of 1800, he said, provided that the oath, in the case of insolvent debtors, should be administered by the district judge; but, if he resides more than twenty miles from the place of imprisonment, then the oath may be administered by a commissioner, to be appointed by the district judge. The bill from the Senate proposes to provide, further, that, where a citation has been issued, in case of absence or inability of the judge, &c., the oath may be administered by a commissioner, according to the mode prescribed by the act of 1800. The committee of this House, on examining the subject, thought it better to provide that in all cases the required oath may be administered by a Judge of the Supreme Court, the district judge of the district in which he resides, or by any commissioner appointed by either of them. In the shape in which the bill came from the Senate, it would not afford a remedy, it was believed, in the very case which gave rise to it.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Commerce with Greece.

H. OF R.

The House concurred in the amendment reported by the committee; and, thus amended, the bill was ordered to a third reading.

LIGHTHOUSES, BEACONS, &c.

The resolutions submitted yesterday by Mr. LIVINGSTON, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information respecting lighthouses and beacons, on the Bahama banks and coast of Florida, and requesting that the President may negotiate for the cession of so much land on Abaco as is necessary for the erection of a lighthouse, were taken up.

In supporting the resolutions, Mr. LIVINGSTON observed, in relation to the first of them, that he was well aware that measures had already been taken by Government, preparatory to the erection of lighthouses on two of the points referred to, viz: on the Dry Tortugas, and at or near Cape Florida. But, although the necessary surveys were nearly completed, much time must unavoidably elapse before a report of the proceedings could be laid before the department to which they appertained; and, in the meanwhile, sufficient information might be laid before Congress to authorize them to act upon the subject, so that the Secretary of the Treasury could advertise, the ensuing season, for contracts for erecting the several works contemplated in the resolutions. Those works, Mr. L. said, were of pressing necessity. The navigation of the seas, over and within the vicinity of the Bahama banks, was exposed to very great danger, and had already suffered much from shipwrecks. Not to mention the losses which had thus occurred to vessels in the merchant service, the United States had suffered, in wrecks of her public armed vessels in those seas, more than would have sufficed to cover the expense of the entire system of measures proposed in these resolutions.

The second resolution he conceived to be necessary for making the navigation of the Bahama channel, both ways, secure. Ships were continually passing over the Bahama banks, where the water was shallow, and the neighboring land very low; in consequence of which, they were imminently exposed to shipwreck. The wrecks on Abaco alone would, he said, amount to an immense sum. A lighthouse on that island, at or near the site of the Hole in the Wall, would greatly, if not entirely, remove the danger which now existed, and render navigation safe. But, for the erection of such lighthouse, previous negotiation would be necessary, in order to obtain the ground on which to build it. Of the success of such negotiation, there could be no doubt. The British Government had no interest hostile to such a measure; but, on the contrary, they were interested in its favor, for the same reason with ourselves, although not to the same extent. Besides the spots on which lighthouses were erected, there were others which ought to be designated by buoys.

The third resolution, Mr. L. said, was intended to obtain information in respect to a class of islets, concerning the true jurisdiction of which he confessed himself to be ignorant; he meant those small rocky islands which are separated from the Bahama bank by deep channels, and therefore might possibly be considered as not included in the British jurisdiction, which confessedly extends over the bank itself. If, on investigation, it should appear that these islets do belong to Great Britain, then they would be included in the range of the second resolution, which relates to the cession of the requisite territory for lighthouses and beacons. But if, on the contrary, it should be ascertained that they are not British territory, then a question would arise, whether they were not liable to become ours by right of occupancy. They would afford temptations to occupancy for no other purpose than that proposed in the resolution. They contain, in general, no soil, being little more than bare rocks washed by the sea, yet are of such formation as to admit of the placing of buoys and beacons upon them for the warning and direction of the mariner, &c.

The question was then taken on the resolutions of Mr. LIVINGSTON, and they were agreed to, without opposition.

The resolution yesterday offered by Mr. HERRICK, calling for detailed information respecting the extent of post routes, amount of postages, &c., was called up and adopted.

COMMERCE WITH GREECE, &c.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. BRECK, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for the amount of exports and imports to and from Greece, Asia Minor, and Egypt, from 1820 to 1822, with the duties on these imports, was next taken up.

Mr. BRECK, in explaining the object of the resolution now before the House, said that it was obviously necessary, before we entered into any measure, such as that proposed by a resolution now before the House respecting a mission to Greece, which might be deemed by the Turkish Government a measure of a hostile character, that we should fully understand the amount of the trade, which we might, in consequence of such hostility, be obliged to relinquish, as well as the probable amount of revenue to arise out of the trade we may, in consequence, gain. With this view, the resolution calls for distinct statements of the amount and value of imports and exports from and to the countries now under the control of the Turkish Government, and from those possessed by the Greeks in arms.

Mr. NEWTON (Chairman of the Committee of Commerce) observed, that he was always in favor of obtaining information; but, in the present case, if the gentleman who had moved this resolution would turn to the documents already before this House, he would there find all the information he seeks. The exports and imports of the United States to every part of the world are there distinctly stated. In the annual report of last year, the exports of the year ending September 1822, to Africa, are stated to amount to $115,544 and the exports to $141,378. A report of this description is made every year; and that for the present year will soon be before the House. Mr. N. thought, therefore, that, as the officers of Government have so much to do already, it was a pity to burden them with labors of supererogation.

Mr. BRECK replied.—From the remarks of the honorable gentleman, he was persuaded he had been misunderstood. The object he wished to get at was a statement of the commerce of this country to Greece, to Smyrna, and to Egypt, separately. That to Greece would be included in the tables relating to Europe, and that to Smyrna in those of Asia; so that the statement of the gentleman respecting our trade to Africa did not reach the case he aimed at. Besides, it would be a matter of much labor to pick out of the general statements from the Treasury the information he wanted. One gentleman would state it at one amount and another at another, but a clerk in the office could do all he wished to have done in half an hour, and then the statement would be clear and intelligible to all. Then the House would be able to see, at a glance, what we must lose by a quarrel with the Turks, and what we are likely to gain by it, even should the Greeks succeed in establishing their independence.

Mr. CAMBRELENG said he was not disposed, any more than the gentleman from Virginia, to object, in general, to inquiries for information—but he really thought that now proposed unnecessary. The information, said Mr. C., which the gentleman seems to desire, may be reached by consulting a single line of the documents from the Treasury. For we have no trade to Egypt, of any kind, nor any direct trade with the Archipelago. All our direct trade is with Smyrna, at least all contracts are made there, &c. Even the oil and wine we obtain from Greece we get through Smyrna. All, therefore, that the Secretary of the Treasury can give, in answer to this call, will be simply a statement of the exports and imports to Smyrna.

Mr. NEWTON made a few further observations to the same import as those already reported.

Mr. WEBSTER said that he had no objection to the call for information, if the gentleman wished it—but the gentleman had mistaken the purport of the motion he had formerly made on the subject of the Greeks, if he conceived that the scope of that resolution was such as to produce a quarrel with the Turkish Government. His object in rising now, was to state, that he had submitted no resolution which, in his judgment, would lead to any such thing—and he wished to prevent any such impression from going abroad as that his resolution was a declaration of war against the Turks. No doubt the United States had a valuable commerce with Smyrna—but so they had in the ports of Spain, when similar inquiries, with respect to that country, were made in Congress. There was no jeopardy of our commerce implied in either case. The object of my resolution, said Mr. W., is simply an authorized inquiry into facts. With these remarks, he said, he had no objection to the resolution now before the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, in support of the resolution, observed that its object was not to obtain the amount of the commerce to Smyrna, but that to the Peloponnesus, to Greece, to "Greece in arms." The tables to which gentlemen had referred the mover, did not discriminate Greece proper from the Greeks in Asia Minor. The seat of the contest between the Greeks and the Turks was Greece proper—and the resolution asked the amount of our trade to this part of Greece, that we might be able to form some estimate what we should gain, as well as what we should lose, by any measure that might go to involve us in any degree in their controversy.

Mr. STORRS said, that to him it appeared that the obtaining of the information sought for by the resolution, was, in the nature of the case, impracticable. There is none to be obtained on which we can practically rely. He would submit to the honorable gentleman himself, who had moved the resolution, whether it was possible to get the distinct facts he wished to obtain. From whence were they to be had in any authentic form? And if they could be got at all, they must come too late in the session to bear on the discussion contemplated. All that was useful to the House was to be found in the statistical table which had been referred to. The motion did not propose to call for any statements since 1822. What is asked for, was the amount of our commerce to Greece and the Levant, previous to that time, and that was already in the possession of the House.

Mr. WOOD, in further explanation, said, that the object of the resolution proposed by Mr. WEBSTER, and now laying on the table, was to form a basis for intercourse with Greece, either political or commercial. If a political intercourse was the object, he did not want the information now called for; but he took it for granted that the great object aimed at, and the sole one consistent with prudence, was a commercial intercourse. Then, before we incurred the expense of an Ambassador or Plenipotentiary, or other public agency, it was first proper to ascertain whether the productions of that country were so valuable, or its consumption so extensive, as to make it an object worthy of the expense of the proposed mission.

Mr. CAMBRELENG said, that he was sorry again to trouble the House, but he felt persuaded that he was himself able to give the gentleman all the information he aimed at, without troubling the Department for it. To Greece proper, that is, to Macedonia, the Peloponnesus, and Thrace, we have not now, and never have had, any direct trade at all. All we had, of any kind, with Greece, was through Smyrna, on the one side, or Trieste on the other. A call, therefore, for a statement of our commerce to Greece proper, would certainly produce no result.

Mr. BRECK explained.—He never had intended to insinuate that the resolution of the honorable member from Massachusetts was intended to lead to hostilities with the Turks—all he said was, that the Turks might choose to view it as a hostile measure, for which it was proper we should be prepared. The gentleman from New York had said that we have no direct trade whatever with

DECEMBER, 1823.

Adjustment of Land Claims.

H. OF R.

Greece proper. How was this to be reconciled with the fact stated by Mr. Hobhouse, in his late account of his travels in that country, that the United States have a Consul at Patras, an important port in the Morea? However, since the gentleman had kindly offered to furnish the information at which he aimed by the resolution, he would forbear to press it for the present.

On motion of Mr. BRECK, his resolution was then ordered to lie on the table.

ADJUSTMENT OF LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. Cook, of Illinois, offered the following resolution for consideration :

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill to provide for the appointment of a board of commissioners to examine and adjust all claims to land by individuals against the United States, where such claims depend on titles derived either from any law of the United States, or act of any foreign Governments, and which have been granted to the United States by virtue of any treaty or compact with such foreign Governments.

In offering this resolution,

Mr. Cook said that something more than four years experience in the House had led him to the conclusion, that much of the time of the House might be saved by the establishment of a tribunal of the description which he proposed, and much of the money of the people, too, the expenditure of which is caused by the protracted sessions of Congress. It had long been a desirable object to take from this House a great portion of the labor which grows out of the investigation of these claims. It was impossible, indeed, from the nature of things, that the House could thoroughly understand and correctly decide upon the vast number of claims which are continually presented for their consideration. His object, then, was, that some plan should be presented to the House, the details of which might become a subject of consideration after the bill was reported. He adverted to the fact, that more than a million of acres of land are reserved from sale for the purpose of satisfying such claims as should be found admissible, which claims have been kept in suspense, some of them for nearly a quarter of a century, and all of them too long. Injustice was thus done to the Government, by keeping up the land from sale, or to the individuals who claim it by withholding from them their right. A board of commissioners, if established, might either pass upon the claims definitely, or collect evidence, and digest and report it to Congress, with their opinion thereupon. More justice would in this manner be done, as well as much time be saved. For the last four years it had been seen that many measures of national importance had been entirely passed over, for the want of time on the part of the House to act upon them. In consequence of the time occupied by the discussion of land claims, in which members felt, for their constituents, a deep interest, the great subject of manufactures, for example, among many others, had been tossed aside, or permitted to slumber on the tables.

It was to endeavor to provide a remedy for this crying evil, that he had proposed this resolution.

Mr. FOOT, of Connecticut, moved to lay the resolution on the table. Negatived, seventy-five to sixty-five.

Mr. FOOT said his object in this motion was to avoid a discussion, off-hand, on this proposition, which, being affirmative, could not be expected to pass without a discussion of the principle which was involved in it.

Mr. Cook said it was by no means his object to invite discussion, or to consume any considerable portion of the time of the House. He had offered it from a firm conviction that there was a disposition, on the part of this House, to resort to some plan to abridge the labor to which it is now subjected. The resolution presented to the House no question but that of the expediency of having a plan presented for its consideration, which was all that the select committee would have to do. It was not his wish to bring on a discussion now, of the principle which the plan would involve.

Mr. CONDIOT moved to amend the resolution so as to inquire into the expediency of reporting a plan, &c.

Mr. Cook accepted this amendment as a modification of his motion. He said it would probably answer his purpose as well as his original motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, moved to amend the resolution, so as to direct the Committee on the Public Lands, instead of a select committee, to inquire into the subject.

Mr. Cook said he had as much disposition as any one to refer to the standing committees of the House the things which come properly within the sphere of their duties. But the Committee on the Public Lands was already overwhelmed with business. There were persons not on any committee, who might be very usefully employed in the investigation of this subject. He referred particularly to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana, (Mr. LIVINGSTON,) whose talents and experience would be of important service in the discussion of the subject, &c.

Mr. WILLIAMS said, that the reason which induced him to move the amendment was a very obvious one. The gentlemen who composed the Committee on the Public Lands were presumed to be acquainted with the subject of land claims, more than other members, and there was a propriety in any general measure on that subject emanating from that committee.

Mr. BRENT supported the amendment. The resolution required the committee to inquire into the expediency of the plan proposed. To do this, it was necessary that they should be acquainted with the claims preferred, and the state of them severally. For another committee to acquire this knowledge, would necessarily consume much time; which, in the other case, would be saved. The intimate knowledge, too, possessed by the standing committee, would enable them, when they reported on the plan, to accompany and support their opinion, whether favorable or otherwise to the measure, with full and satisfactory reasons.

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Mr. RANKIN rose to propose a modification of the motion of Mr. WILLIAMS. Though not courting the reference of business to the Committee on Public Lands, he was willing, as one of that committee, to take upon himself the responsibility which properly belonged to that committee, and he thought the Committee of Public Lands would be probably as competent to the due examination of this subject as any committee which could be selected. The amendment which he was about to propose, Mr. R. said, would go further than that of the gentleman from North Carolina. The gentleman from Illinois, it appeared to him, had not well explored his ground. His proposition went to the appointment of commissioners to decide on claims. But, Mr. R. said, other plans had been heretofore suggested for a decision of these claims. One of them proposed to refer the adjudication of them to the Secretary of the Treasury; another to the district courts of the United States in the respective districts; and a variety of plans had been proposed, which might be equally proper with the one suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. This, however, was not the only objection to the shape into which the gentleman from Illinois had thrown his motion. The House would find, upon examination, that the resolve would include all land claims that had ever existed from the beginning of the Government, thus opening anew the whole field of legislation on that subject. In anticipation of something of this kind being proposed, Mr. R. said, he had prepared a resolution which he intended to offer by way of amendment. It was, he admitted, very important to the Government, and to individuals, that some final decision should be had on this subject. Whatever were the merits of the claims, they ought to be settled. He should, therefore, move an amendment which went to refer the subject to the Committee on Public Lands, with greater latitude for inquiry than the resolution as it stands would allow to them.

Mr. WILLIAMS withdrew his motion, to make way for Mr. RANKIN's; when

The SPEAKER proceeded to the orders of the day, which supersedes, for the present day, the further discussion of original motions.

The engrossed bill for the relief of Jeremiah Manning, and the engrossed bill for the relief of Thomas W. Bacot, were then severally read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence. And the House adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, December 24.

Mr. CASSEDY presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Jersey, engaged in the manufacture of duck and cotton bagging, praying that additional duties may be imposed on duck and all coarse cloths manufactured from hemp, tow, and flax, which may hereafter be imported into the United States; which petition was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, made a report on the petition of sundry distillers of Berks county, in the State of Pennsylvania, accompanied by a bill for the relief of said distillers; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McL., from the same committee, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill making provision for a private secretary for the President of the United States; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill making provision for the correction of errors in the entry of lands at the land offices, reported the bill with an amendment, by which the whole of the former bill, after the enacting clause, was stricken out, and a new bill substituted.

The bill was read, as amended, and referred.

Mr. R., from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Arkansas, praying for land for the sites of certain public buildings, reported a bill granting to the Territory of Arkansas the right of pre-emption to certain quarter sections of land; which was twice read, and committed.

Mr. COCKE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill appropriating a certain sum of money to Benjamin Huffman, of the State of Indiana; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel Wharton; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to authorize the surveying and making a road from Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, to Little Rock, in the Territory of Arkansas; which was read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. H., from the same committee, to whom the subject was also referred, reported a bill to authorize the laying out and opening certain public roads in the Territory of Florida; which was read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Postmaster General, in obedience to the resolution of the 16th instant upon the subject of "distributing post offices;" which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report from the Secretary of State, made in obedience to the resolution of the 8th instant, calling on him for information respecting sick and disabled American seamen, who may have been provided for in the infirmary or hospital, at Liverpool, in England, under the direction of the American Consul at that place; which report was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report of the Secretary of War, on the petition of George Burton; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. GURLEY, the Committee on the Public Lands were directed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the register and receiver of the land office at St. Helena Courthouse, in the State of Louisiana.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Partridge's Military Academy.

H. OF R.

On motion of Mr. FRANCIS JOHNSON, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a judicial district in Kentucky, on the south of Green river.

Mr. LIVINGSTON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That provision ought to be made by law for increasing the establishment of the Military Academy at West Point, so as to admit five hundred cadets as students in the same; and that the committee on that part of the President's Message which relates to the Military Academy, be directed to prepare and bring in a bill accordingly.

The resolution, on motion of Mr. L., was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. McARTHUR, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing a more adequate punishment than is provided by the existing laws, for postmasters and other persons employed in the management or transportation of the mail, who may be guilty of robbing the same.

The bill from the Senate entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act entitled an act for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt,'" was read the third time, and passed as amended.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill for the relief of Brintnell Robbins, (for loss in a contract for building boats at Pittsburgh, to be delivered at Cleaveland, in Ohio.) The bill was reported without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill for the relief of Loudon Case. Mr. RICH, from the Committee of Claims, having explained the circumstances of this claim, the bill was reported without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

PARTRIDGE'S MILITARY ACADEMY.

On motion of Mr. BUCK, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be directed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of War to permit the issue of ammunition to Captain Alden Partridge, Superintendent of the American Literary, Scientific, and Military Academy, for the improvement of the pupils of said Academy in practical gunnery.

Mr. BUCK said, that, before the question was taken, he wished to explain to the House the object aimed at by the resolution. It was a motion for inquiry merely. The motion proposes to instruct the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of issuing such ammunition as might be necessary for improving the young men who were students under Captain Partridge, in the practical part of the art of gunnery, and other military science connected with it.

The high reputation of Captain Partridge could not but be well known to the members of this House. He had formally superintended the military school at West Point, and he had since set up a similar institution in the State of Vermont.

It was conceded by all that this institution was of great utility. It operated as a powerful auxiliary to the progress of military science in our country. There were at present in it one hundred and fifteen young gentlemen, who received instruction in the various branches of military education, all which were taught with acknowledged ability. But it was not to be expected that the resources of an individual could provide for the expenses of practical, as well as theoretical instruction. All that he asked, in order to perfect this department of the Academy, was the issue, at the expense of Government, of so much ammunition as was requisite for practising the students in the use of fire-arms, and in the application of the principles of gunnery. The quantity was left wholly to the discretion of the committee, and could not be large. The Government, Mr. B. observed, has not only a general interest in this institution, as one eminently promoting the improvement of military science; but a particular and direct interest in it, arising from the fact, that many of the students at this moment receiving its benefits were officers in the United States Army.*

Mr. HAMILTON supported the resolution. He hoped that the inquiry for which it asked would not be precluded. He was acquainted with the high character and eminent attainments of Capt. Partridge; he did not doubt they were generally known and acknowledged by this House. They had drawn the public notice to the Seminary over which he presided. For himself, he felt certain, that, whatever labor might arise in making the inquiry, would be willingly undertaken by the Committee on Military Affairs, of which he had the honor to be a member. He did not mean by this remark to be understood as expressing any opinion, or giving any pledge as to what opinion the committee might express, as the result of the inquiry, or what Congress might conclude to do on the subject; but he thought the inquiry proposed was due to a Seminary which formed a powerful auxiliary to that at West Point, &c.

The motion of Mr. BUCK was then agreed to.

* DECEMBER 26, 1823.

Messrs. GALES & SEATON,

Gentlemen: In your report of the few remarks I had the honor to address to the House of Representatives, in support of my motion, on the 24th instant, there are two mistakes, which it may be important to have corrected. The first is in relation to the number of Cadets in Captain Partridge's Academy, which is stated at one hundred and fifteen. The true number is one hundred and fifty-five. The second error is in the statement that there are officers of the Army who are members of the above mentioned institution. There are several gentlemen holding appointments in the Navy who are members of the Academy, and some gentlemen who contemplate procuring appointments in the Army, but none, to my knowledge, who have already procured commissions in the Army. Will you have the goodness to correct the mistakes above mentioned, and oblige yours, respectfully,

D. A. A. BUCK.

H. OF R.

South American Colonies—Naval Pensions.

DECEMBER, 1823.

SOUTH AMERICAN COLONIES.

The resolution yesterday offered by Mr. MALLARY, calling on the President for any information he may possess (and which may be disclosed without injury to the public good) relative to the determination of any sovereign or sovereigns to aid Spain in regaining her American Colonies; and the disposition of any other European Government to oppose it, was taken up.

In support of his resolution, Mr. MALLARY rose and observed, that it would be recollected, by every gentleman present, that the message received at the opening of the present session from the President of the United States, was of an extraordinary and strongly marked character. Its introduction prepared the House for subjects of great importance; nay, the President went so far as to say that "there never was a period, since the Revolution, when, regarding the condition of the civilized world and its bearing on us, there was greater necessity for devotion in the public servants, to their respective duties, or for virtue, patriotism, and union, in our constituents." When we come to examine the body of the message, said he, we discover nothing to which this language can apply, except the situation of the great European Powers, and the bearing which that situation may have upon this country. Those Powers had united their efforts against the cause of freedom on the continent of Europe, and had successfully put down every struggle to maintain it. It was possible they might extend their plans across the Atlantic, and that their attention would next be directed to the Republics of South America. Such appeared to be the impression of the President; and if such were actually the state of things, the United States must probably become deeply involved in the event of such a contest. It was impossible we could be indifferent to the attempts of despotic power to crush the cause of freedom in our own hemisphere. That some plans of this sort were in agitation, was plain, from the tenor of the message. The President would not have warned the two Houses of Congress that all their firmness would be called for, if there were not something of serious moment in the political horizon, not seen by all. And as, in this public document, the Chief Magistrate had thought proper to go so far, it was certainly proper in the House to meet his communication by requesting such information, on the subject to which he had alluded, as he might deem it consistent with the public welfare to disclose. It was proper and desirable that we should know as much as possible of the dangers to which we are exposed.

The question was then taken on the resolution, and it was agreed to without opposition.

CLAIM OF BEAUMARCHAIS.

Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, rose to call the attention of the House to a message from the President to the House of Representatives, transmitted at the first session of the Seventeenth Congress, exhibiting the correspondence between the United States and the French Government, relative to the claim of Beaumarchais. He would not take up the time of the House by any remarks on the merits of that claim, this not being the proper stage of business in which to speak of them. His object in rising was to move the reference of this correspondence to a select committee. He should have moved the reference of it to the Committee of Claims, but that the chairman of that committee had expressed an unwillingness to take cognizance of it. It was high time, Mr. T. said, that this claim, which has been standing now for thirty odd years, whatever be its merits or its fate, should be finally and conclusively disposed of.

The motion to refer the correspondence to a select committee was agreed to, without a division; and Mr. TUCKER of Virginia, Mr. LIVINGSTON, Mr. BUCK, Mr. TYSON, and Mr. RIVES, were appointed said committee.

NAVAL PENSIONS.

The bill to continue for five years longer the half-pay pensions to the widows and children of officers, seamen, and marines, of the Navy, who have died in service, passed through a Committee of the Whole without debate, and the question being about to be stated on ordering it to a third reading—

Mr. COBB said he was not willing that the bill should pass without some reason being given why it ought to pass. Our system of pensions, he thought, had been too far extended. All the efforts on the subject seemed to be to ascertain how far it could be extended, instead of how far it could be reduced and narrowed down. These pensions were at first allowed for five years—afterwards, for five years more; and now it was asked of the House to extend them for another five years. To ascertain whether the House was disposed to go on, without reason, in extending these pensions, he moved to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. CROWNINSHIELD said that the general reason why the bill should pass is, first, that those pensions are not paid out of the Treasury; the money comes from the captures made by these very officers and seamen, and is by law reserved for the special purpose to which it is by this bill proposed to appropriate it. That fund, Mr. C. said, is adequate to pay all the pensions that can be charged upon it. There is now a surplus of that fund to the amount of fifteen or twenty thousand dollars per annum. If this money, the proceeds in part of captures, is to be taken from the officers and seamen to constitute a fund for pensions, he did not see why those pensions should be withheld from them. The fund is their property, and not that of the nation, and why shall they not have the benefit of it? So far as depends on me, said Mr. C., I would not deal it out to them in this manner—I would declare the pensions at once for life, and not stint the widow and the orphan of their allowance.

Mr. LIVERMORE observed, on what had fallen from the gentleman from Massachusetts, that, if it was impossible that the number of claimants to the benefits of this fund could ever increase, the reasoning of the gentleman would be entirely conclusive; but their number may, and, in case of a war, certainly will, increase very greatly. He, therefore, thought it most advisable to let the fund accumulate. Are gentlemen afraid, asked Mr. L., of having money on hand for any purpose, or in any shape? He was, with his present impressions, against this bill.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Adjustment of Land Claims.

H. OF R.

Mr. CAMBRELENG, in replying to the gentleman from New Hampshire, took occasion to notice the origin and character of this fund. In 1800, Congress, varying from the British rule of granting the whole of the prize money to the captors, appropriated one-half of the proceeds of all prizes of inferior force to create a Navy Pension Fund for the support of invalids. During our late war, after the fall of some of our most gallant officers and seamen, a question arose whether, in strict justice, their widows and orphans should not be provided for out of that fund which a share of their prize money had contributed to create. Congress, by the acts of 1813-'14, granted pensions to them, and the pension roll now embraces invalids, widows, and orphans.

In replying, particularly, to the argument of the gentlemen from New Hampshire, who seemed to apprehend the insufficiency of the fund, and desired to see it accumulate, he remarked that, previous to eighteen hundred and twelve, the amount was inconsiderable. During the war, however, it augmented very rapidly. It is now ample. While this fund continued to be regulated by existing laws, it was impossible that it should not be always sufficient to provide for the pensions charged upon it. In peace it must inevitably increase by death or marriage, or by the children's reaching the age to which their pensions are limited. In war, although the pension roll would be enlarged, yet, through captures, the fund would still more rapidly accumulate. In peace, the accumulation would be gradual but uniform—in war, rapid. Should the portion of prize money now appropriated by law be continued to this fund, it will probably be larger than will be necessary to accomplish the purposes designed. It is all-sufficient, and must continue as long as the Government stands. It is invested, principally, in Government stock. Such was the condition of a fund which, through the provident care of Government, had been reserved out of the prize money of our officers, seamen, and marines, for the use of themselves when disabled—their widows and orphans. By the original act, the faith of the Government was forever pledged to keep this fund sacred, and to appropriate it to these purposes. He hoped we should discharge the condition of the trust, and provide for their widows and orphans. He was unwilling, at all times, to appeal to the passions of the House, but there was something in the very character of this bill calculated to rouse the patriotism and excite the sympathy of every American. We were now renewing pensions to the widows and orphans of our gallant mariners. Of the veteran Barney, whose valor is recorded in the histories of two wars—of Lawrence, whom fate selected as a victim to soothe for a moment—but for a moment—the wounded pride of an enemy over whom he had previously triumphed—who died as he had lived, bravely fighting for his country. Of Blakeley and his gallant crew. In the career of Blakeley there was something peculiarly splendid—in his brief story, something sublime. His ambition was of an elevated cast; it disdained the pursuit of helpless enemies. He at once crowded his canvass for the British coast—he eagerly sought dangerous war amidst fleets of armed enemies. He found it and triumphed. Scarce had we ceased our rejoicings for this victory, when we heard of him again literally surrounded by enemies—sinking one—engaging a second, and retiring only on the approach of a third. Unhurt, though exposed, in this unequal combat, he gallantly steered his course to southern latitudes. But here the historian of human affairs drops his pencil—another, more worthy to note the deeds of gallant men, seizes it as it falls—the recording angel registers their fate—where the fate of brave men should be—in Heaven!

It is for the widows and orphans of these gallant men we are now providing. The only objection to the bill he conceived to be the limitation to five years. That ought to be struck out—the fund was ample, and would undoubtedly remain so. He trusted the House would pass the bill promptly and unanimously.

Mr. COBB replied that the explanation given by the gentleman from New York was entirely satisfactory. He was happy to understand the nature and flourishing situation of the fund, and, since it was in so prosperous a state, he hoped that Congress would not be called on to grant out of the public treasury any more pensions to the wives or children of navy officers. He hoped that Mrs. Lawrence, Mrs. Perry, and others, whose names had been mentioned, would be provided for out of this fund, which was so abundantly able to supply whatever it was deemed proper to allow. And with these remarks he withdrew the opposition he had made to the bill.

Mr. LIVERMORE rose merely to say that he was fully satisfied with the explanation given, and would now cordially vote in favor of the bill.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ADJUSTMENT OF LAND CLAIMS.

The following resolution, proposed by Mr. Cook, of Illinois, and discussed yesterday, was again taken up:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill to provide for the appointment of a Board of Commissioners to examine and adjust all claims to land by individuals against the United States, where such claims depend on titles derived either from any law of the United States, or act of any foreign Governments, and which have been granted to the United States by virtue of any treaty or compact with such foreign Governments.

Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, moved to amend the same, by striking out the whole of it, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the decision, by some tribunal, of all claims to lands in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Missouri, and in the Territory of Arkansas, which claims have been heretofore presented to some one of the Boards of Commissioners heretofore appointed to examine titles and claims to land in said States and Territory, but which have not been finally acted upon because the quantity claimed exceeded that which said boards were severally authorized to confirm, or report to Congress for confirmation."

Mr. Cook objected to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, because it fell entirely short of reaching the object he had in view in the original resolution, and which he thought the circumstances of the case required. There were many land claims against the United States which had never been presented to any of the Boards of Commissioners; these were, by the amendment, wholly excluded, and yet they constituted precisely that class of claims for which it was most necessary to provide a mode of settlement. There were, within his knowledge, many such in some of the States. Mr. C. said, it was true that the object which he had in view was general and universal; yet the proposition he had presented to the House was far from extending so far, or being of such an indefinite kind, as the gentleman from Mississippi seemed to have supposed. He owed it to himself to say, that the meaning imputed to the resolution by that gentleman, in his observations yesterday, was one which never entered into his thoughts. That which the gentleman urged as the principal objection to the proposition, was, in its very nature, impossible. He seemed to apprehend that it would be the operation of this resolution to disturb the title of occupants, and who held, under warrants from the United States, by reviving claims which have been rejected. This was impossible. A vested right could never be divested—Congress could not divest it—the attempt would be a direct violation of the Constitution. But, though these cases could not be disturbed, there were others which, on the face of them, appeared to be equitable, which must be omitted if the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi prevailed, and would consequently be thrown upon Congress, which it was the object of his motion to prevent. Mr. C. said, he had no particular preference with respect to the committee to whom the inquiry was to go. All he wished was, that it should go to some competent committee of the House, by whom the general measure might be considered. Some gentlemen seemed strongly in favor of sending these claims to the Judiciary for settlement; but, on further reflection, they would perceive that there are many objections to such a course. If they go to the Judiciary, it must be because they are proper subjects for legal adjudication; and, if so, they must go through the whole process of a regular trial in each case. The cost of such trials will be enormous, the delay enormous, and the difficulties altogether insurmountable.

Mr. RANKIN replied. In the remarks he had yesterday made, touching the unlimited range contemplated by the resolution, he was far from aiming at the motives or intention of the gentleman from Illinois—he spoke merely of the resolution as it stood; and its terms did certainly bear him out in what he had said. What is the plan of the gentleman from Illinois, as it is expressed in his resolution? It is to submit to a Board of Commissioners, without limit or restriction, "all claims to lands by individuals against the United States, where such claims depend on titles derived either from any law of the United States, or acts of any foreign Governments, and which have been granted to the United States by virtue of any treaty or compact with such foreign Governments;" that is, all claims derived from the British Spanish, or French Governments. Such a plan will manifestly rip up all decisions on land claims from the very formation of this Government. By the decisions of the Boards of Commissioners for the investigation of land claims, many claims have been rejected, and the titles of many claimants have been barred by the statutes of limitation. All these claims will, under this resolution, come up again for decision—they are all within its terms. I do not believe at all that the honorable mover intended to include them—but such is the fact. My object is not to bring before this new tribunal, which is proposed to be established, claims which have already been before previous boards of the same general description, and there decided—this would be endless. I wish to present to this general tribunal only such claims as have never been presented at all, or which, having been preferred before the several Boards of Commissioners heretofore appointed, have, on account of their magnitude, or for other reasons, been left undecided. Large quantities of the public lands are subject to claims of this description; and, though held back from sale on that account, are, nevertheless, becoming partially settled. In a little time these settlers will be so numerous as to become too strong to be controlled by the decisions of any Board of Commissioners; and, in truth, as it is, Congress would probably be gainers by giving away some of these tracts without waiting for a decision upon the claims.

Mr. Cook, in answer, said, that he was sorry the gentleman from Mississippi had entered so much into detail in the present stage of this measure. Such was not now his intention. He wished to give the committee to whom the inquiry was to be submitted, general and unrestricted powers over the plan, to extend or to limit it as they might prefer. The amendment would go to deprive them of this power. It cuts off at a blow twelve or fifteen hundred claims from the State of Missouri, which have indeed been barred by the statute of limitations, but which have equity on the face of them. A cold-hearted Government, which repels the holder of a just and bona fide claim to a tract of land because he was not fortunate enough to get sight of a newspaper acquainting him with some recent decision of Congress respecting land claimants, or because he happened to be unavoidably absent when such regulation was enforced, is not the Government which Mr. C. said he wished to have any share in administering—the amendment goes to cut off claims equitable in their nature, which have been pressing several years for settlement, and which, if that amendment prevails, the House will still have hanging on its hands. In this House they cannot have a full and deliberate investigation—the thing is impracticable. Then let the committee have full powers to prepare a plan, which shall provide for disposing of them as it shall think most expedient. Do not forestall their decision.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. of R.

Mr. McCoy, of Virginia, was in favor of the amendment. He hoped the general tribunal would be confined to the adjudication of such large claims as have been presented, but, from their magnitude, not acted upon. As to such as at this late time of day have never been presented at all, he should entertain great doubts of their soundness. Boards of Commissioners have been in existence in most of the States and Territories from 1805 to 1822. Surely, in all those years, the claimants had had sufficient time at least to present their claims. The members all knew that many claims had been presented before those boards and rejected as fraudulent. To erect a tribunal now, to go back and disturb all these decisions, would be to create an evil tenfold greater than that sought to be removed.

Mr. FULLER, of Massachusetts, was opposed to the amendment, as going too much into detail, and improperly restricting the committee. He saw no evil which could arise from adopting the original resolution; it only directed an inquiry. It was merely an inceptive measure towards obtaining a general plan for effecting an object which he believed was generally desired. He was convinced the honorable gentleman near him, who presided in the Committee of Private Land Claims, would say that, by the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, many claims which now come before that committee would be excluded from the proposed tribunal, and of course left still on the hands of this House.

Mr. RANKIN explained. He was sure the gentleman from Illinois was too well acquainted with the subject of land claims not to know the mischiefs which would result from so broad a measure as the resolution certainly contained. The gentleman from Massachusetts, it was not to be presumed, was as well informed on the details of this subject. Mr. R. here went into some details on the nature and relative merits of several descriptions of land claims. The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, he said, virtually proclaims to all claimants, "come now and present your old grants, and we will disturb the whole of the decisions had against you." In presenting such a state of things, Mr. R. thought there was nothing cold-hearted or illiberal. That private may be known from public lands, the claims must necessarily be presented within some fixed period. A limitation had been found necessary, and had accordingly been adopted. But, if the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois is adopted, the whole mass of claims, barred or not, will be opened to investigation. This, said Mr. R., will certainly excite alarm. But, even if you erect such a tribunal, if you give it any limitations at all, particular claims will still come up to this House for examination. He believed that many of the claims from Missouri were equitable in their nature; and Congress might, if it thought proper, pass a general law providing for them. The House cannot prevent people from petitioning; but, if the plan proposed in the amendment be adopted, the petitions excluded from the tribunal will come with far less grace before this House than at present, because they will all be for claims which have already been submitted to commissioners, and rejected.

Mr. Cook went into a farther explanation, in which he insisted on the ground he had already taken. He would repeat, that it was, in his judgment, a cold-hearted policy, while great tracts of land are held in reserve for the express purpose of meeting and satisfying just claims against the United States, to turn away a claimant who has an equitable demand, merely for default in point of time or of formality, when he can fairly account for his ignorance or his delay.

The SPEAKER here rose, and objected to the scope of discussion in which gentlemen had indulged themselves. The simple point before the House for discussion was the fitness of the inquiry proposed.

Mr. SCOTT said, that he was opposed to the measure in toto, in either of the shapes in which it was now presented—being unwilling to lash the claims of Missouri to the fate of any others whatever. To allow time to prepare such an amendment as he should like, he moved that the resolution and amendment be laid on the table and printed; which was carried.

FRIDAY, December 26.

Mr. CROWNSHIELD presented memorials and petitions from sundry merchants and underwriters of Salem, Marblehead, and Gloucester, in the State of Massachusetts, praying compensation for spoliation committed on their lawful commerce, by French cruisers, between the years 1793 and 1800; which memorials and petitions were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHARPE presented a memorial signed by a committee on behalf of the citizens of the city of New York, convened by general notice in said city, praying that the tariff of duties may be so increased as to shield the manufactures of the United States from foreign competition.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented a similar memorial of sundry citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia in the State of Pennsylvania.

The said memorials were referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of Charles Gratiot, lieutenant colonel of engineers, praying extra compensation for extra services rendered by him as principal artillery and ordnance officer in the Northwestern army, commanded by General Harrison in the late war with Great Britain; which petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. OF R.

Jacob Schaeffer.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Mr. SLOANE, from the Committee of Elections, made a report on the petition of sundry inhabitants of Norfolk county, in Massachusetts, remonstrating against the election of John Bailey, a member of this House, on account of his having not been, at the time of his election, an inhabitant of the district and State in which he was elected, but a resident at the city of Washington; and asking for power to send for testimony; which leave was granted nem. con.

The report of the Secretary of State, of the 24th instant, in relation to seamen provided for in the hospital at Liverpool, in England, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion of Mr. WAYNE, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were instructed to inquire into the expediency of fixing, by law, the net amount of annual income which shall disqualify any applicant from being placed on the pension list, under the acts of March 18, 1818, and May 1, 1820.

Mr. RANKIN laid the following resolution on the table, for consideration, viz:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be directed to inform this House if the situation of his office and the public interest requires an additional number of clerks to be employed therein; and if so, what number, and for what length of time their services will be required.

Engrossed bills, of the following titles, viz: An act further extending the term of half-pay pensions to the widows and children of officers, seamen, and marines, who died in the public service; an act for the relief of Brintnell Robbins; and an act for the relief of Loudon Case, were respectively read a third time, and passed.

JACOB SCHAEFFER.

The engrossed bill for the relief of Jacob Schaeffer was then read a third time; and the question being on the passage of the bill—

Mr. TAYLOR moved that it be recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims, with instructions "to inquire into the expediency of so amending the same, as to provide for the allowance of bounty land to the non-commissioned officers and privates of the United States Army, and to their representatives, who enlisted for five years or during the war, and were honorably discharged previous to the expiration of the respective terms of their enlistment."

The case of this claimant may be stated as follows: He enlisted as a private in the Army of the United States for five years; but, after serving some eighteen months, he was discharged, the war being over, and he being anxious to rejoin his family, on condition of relinquishing his claim to bounty land. He now asks for the passage of a law to give him his bounty land. [There was an additional ground for his claim for 160 acres of land, viz: that he had purchased the assignment of the claim of another soldier to his bounty land, but not with sufficient formality to give him a legal title to it; but this ground was little relied upon, the debate turning upon the principle involved in the other claim.]

On the principle of this bill a debate arose, in which considerable eloquence and ingenuity were displayed, which occupied the whole day; in the course of which, the claim was opposed by Messrs. TAYLOR, ROSS, STERLING, WRIGHT, LIVERMORE, KREMER, RANKIN, and COOK; and advocated by Messrs. W. SMITH, A. SMYTH of Virginia, CAMPBELL of Ohio, MALLARY, HOUSTON, WEBSTER, and STORRS.

The general grounds on which this bill was opposed, were, that it was unfair to make a difference between the case of this soldier and so many others who were discharged under similar circumstances. If any act was passed, it ought to be a general one—that Schaeffer could not claim either on the ground of his own services or those of Sharp, because, in his own person, he had not served the five years for which he had enlisted, and had, besides, expressly covenanted to relinquish his bounty land; and the transfer of Sharp's warrant to him was directly in the face of an express law prohibiting such transfers. If this petition should be granted, there was nothing to hinder all the soldiers who, at the close of the war, had relinquished their bounty land for the sake of a discharge, from still demanding it, even although (as was the case with some) they had served but a few weeks. The petitioner had not obtained, what the law expressly demanded, an "honorable discharge," with "a certificate of having faithfully performed his duty."

The ground taken by the advocates of the bill was, that Schaeffer had fulfilled his contract with Government, having served till discharged; that his discharge was to be considered as an "honorable" one, since nothing appeared to the contrary; and that his relinquishment of his bounty land was void in law, the officers having had no right to interpose conditions on the discharge of a soldier; such an act, under the circumstances, being an unfair advantage taken of his situation.

The motion of Mr. TAYLOR was negatived by a large majority.

After further debate, the question was at length taken on the passage of the bill, the yeas and nays having been required by Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbot, Alexander of Tennessee, Allen of Tennessee, Archer, Ball, Baylies, J. S. Barbour, Bartley, Beecher, Blair, Brown, Buckner, Burleigh, Campbell of Ohio, Collins, Condict, Conner, Crowninshield, Culpeper, Dwight, Edwards of Pennsylvania, Ellis, Floyd, Foote of New York, Forsyth, Frost, Garrison, Gazlay, Gist, Gurley, Hamilton, Hemphill, Henry, Hooks, Houston, Isacks, Johnson of Virginia, F. Johnson, Kent, Lawrence, Leftwich, Letcher, Locke, Long, McKean, McLean of Ohio, Mallary, Marvin, Moore of Kentucky, Neale, Newton, Patterson of Ohio, Plumer of Pennsylvania, Reynolds, Richards, Sandford, Sharpe, Sibley, Sloane, Arthur Smith, Alex. Smyth, William Smith, Standefer, J. Stephenson, Strong, Thompson of Georgia, Trimble, Tucker of South Carolina, Tyson, Vance of Ohio, Van Rensselaer, Webster, Whipple, Whittlesey, White,

DECEMBER, 1823.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Williams of New York, Wilson of New York, Wilson of South Carolina, and Wilson of Ohio—79.

NAYS—Messrs. Alexander of Virginia, Allen of Massachusetts, Allison, Bailey, Barber of Connecticut, Bartlett, Bassett, Bradley, Breck, Buck, Cady, Cambreleng, Carter, Cary, Cassedy, Cobb, Cocke, Cook, Crafts, Craig, Cushman, Day, Durfee, Dwinell, Eddy, Foot of Connecticut, Fuller, Gatlin, Hall, Harris, Harvey, Hayden, Herkimer, Hobart, Hogeboom, Holcombe, Jenkins, Kremer, Lathrop, Lincoln, Litchfield, Livermore, McArthur, McCoy, McDuffie, McKim, Mangum, Martindale, Matlack, Matson, Mitchell of Pennsylvania, Moore of Alabama, Nelson, O'Brien, Owen, Patterson of Pennsylvania, Plumer of New Hampshire, Randolph, Rankin, Reed, Rich, Rives, Ross, Spaight, Sterling, Stewart, Stoddard, Swan, Taylor, Ten Eyck, Thompson of Kentucky, Tod, Tomlinson, Udree, Vance of North Carolina, Van Wyck, Vinton, Wayne, Whitman, Williams of Virginia, Williams of North Carolina, Henry Wilson, Wood, Woods, and Wright—85.

So the bill was rejected. And then the House adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, December 29.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of a committee appointed at a numerous and respectable meeting of the citizens of New York, assembled to take into consideration the situation of the Greeks, praying Congress, at a convenient and proper season, to recognise the independence of the Greek nation, now engaged in arms in the maintenance of their independence against the power of the Ottoman or Turkish Empire; which memorial was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONDUCT presented a petition of Oliver Hull and others, cultivators of the castor bean, and manufacturers of the castor oil, extracted from the same, praying that additional duties be imposed on foreign castor oil, upon the importation thereof into the United States; which petition was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. McKIM presented a memorial of sundry underwriters and merchants of the city of Baltimore, praying for the aid of the Government of the United States, in their endeavors to procure redress for their ships and merchandise, seized in certain ports of Europe, under edicts issued by the Government of France; which memorial was laid on the table.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, presented a petition of Curtis Lewis, praying that the district judge of the district of Alabama may be directed to deliver up to the Executive of the State of Alabama, certain negro slaves captured by him, while commander of a revenue cutter of the United States, in the year 1818; which petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WHITTLESEY from the Committee of Claims reported a bill for the relief of William T. Nimmo, which was read, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. RANKIN, the Committee on Public Lands was discharged from the consideration of the petition from Michigan Territory for a road from Fort Meigs to Detroit, and it was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. HOGEBOOM submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what further provision ought to be made by law, relative to the Military Academy at West Point.

The said resolution was disagreed to by the House.

On motion of Mr. STRONG, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were instructed to inquire into the propriety of restoring the name of Archibald Jackson to the pension roll.

On motion of Mr. FLOYD, a Committee was appointed to inquire into the expediency of occupying the Columbia or Oregon river, and to regulate the intercourse with the Indian tribes; and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. FLOYD, Mr. GURLEY, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BASSETT, Mr. FROST, and Mr. BAYLIES, were appointed a committee, pursuant to the said resolution.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, that every Postmaster intending to resign his appointment, shall give a reasonable notice, at his office, of such his intention.

Mr. CAMPBELL stated, in support of his resolution, that Postmasters are now in the practice of resigning secretly, and recommending a successor; whose appointment is often the first intimation any body receives of the intention of the predecessor to resign. He thought this inexpedient and unfair.

Mr. HAMILTON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a navy yard either at Beaufort or Charleston, South Carolina, for the building, repairing, and equipment of sloops of war, and vessels of a smaller class, in the Navy of the United States.

The said resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COOK laid the following resolution on the table, for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House a statement, showing the amount of money remaining to be paid by the purchasers of public lands prior to the 1st day of July, 1820, designating the amount due for lands purchased in each State.

On motion of Mr. FARRELY, it was Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the organization and number of the engineer corps, and ascertain whether any alteration be necessary in the same.

Mr. FARRELY observed, that the President, in his Message, informed the House that the engineer corps had been extensively employed, during the last Summer, on Lake Erie, on the waters of the Ohio, and on the Atlantic coast; and if he was not mistaken in his recollection, an honorable gentleman (Mr. COCKE,) from Tennessee, has proposed the employment of them to explore the waters in Tennessee, for the purposes of canals. It is contemplated still further to employ them, in examining the routes for canals between the waters of the Ohio and the Potomac, and those of Lake Erie and the Ohio. Perhaps at the time the corps was organized, these additional duties were not contemplated; and, as now organized, they may be inadequate to the performance of them. The primary objects of erecting fortifications on the frontiers, might have been then only contemplated: these could only be used in time of war. But these secondary objects I have mentioned, which can be used in the calm of peace, might not have been thought of. He hoped the resolution would pass.

H. OF R.

General Land Office—Garrett Fountain.

DECEMBER, 1823.

On motion of Mr. RICHARD, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of opening a road between Mount Clemens, in the county of Macomb, and Fultonville, near the mouth of Pine river, in the county of St. Clair, in the Territory of Michigan.

[The object of this resolution, as stated by the mover, is to open a road into the public lands, that they may be the sooner sold and settled.]

On motion of Mr. STORRS, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the 30th section of the act, entitled "An act to establish the Judicial Court of the United States," passed September 24, 1789.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of William Bartlett, and John Stearns and others; which, after some debate, in which Messrs. NEWTON, MCCOY, HOBART, REED, and TOMLINSON, took part, was reported without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of Jacob Babbitt, which was read, together with the accompanying report of the Committee of Claims, reported without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

The resolution presented by Mr. RANKIN on Friday, calling for information as to the state of the General Land Office, and the necessity for more clerks therein, being taken up—

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, inquired of the mover the reasons for a call of this character. There were generally enough applications made to Congress for additional clerks in the Departments, without inviting any more.

Mr. RANKIN explained, and stated, in substance, that, owing to neglect on the part of the former Commissioner of the Land Office, the business of that office had fallen into much confusion. Many maps were wanting, which could not be had, the only draughtsman in the office having more than he could possibly attend to. If a few assistants were employed to bring up the arrears of business, not only might they be soon dispensed with again, but some of the clerks, now necessary, might be also dispensed with.

Mr. TAYLOR objected, he said, not to the object in view, but to the mode of attaining it. The House was not in the habit of applying to subordinate officers, but to the Heads of Departments, for the information they required. He hoped the gentleman would throw his motion into the form of a resolution, directing the employment of the requisite assistants, and he would have no objection to vote for it; but, as it stood, he must move that it lie on the table.

Which motion, after a few words from Mr. RANKIN prevailed, and the resolution was laid on the table.

GARRETT FOUNTAIN.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee of Claims unfavorable to the petition of Garrett Fountain.

Mr. TYSON, of New York, moved to amend the report, by striking out the word "not," in that part of it which recommends that the prayer of the petitioner shall not be granted; which gave rise to a debate of more than an hour, in which Messrs. SHARPE, WOODS, and BUCK, advocated, and Messrs. MCCOY and WILLIAMS opposed the claim.

The debate was somewhat desultory, much of it being aside from the point to be determined. The circumstances of the case are briefly these: Garrett Fountain, the petitioner, was agent to a contractor for furnishing provisions for the troops at a post in the bay of New York, on the Long Island shore. There being there no public store, he applied for and obtained permission from General Dearborn, to erect a store at his own expense, on the public ground, at the post. The building cost him $1,000; when he ceased to be an agent, he offered the store to the Government at a rent of $150 which was refused, and General Dearborn ordered the deputy quartermaster to take possession of the store, and allow Fountain $100 per annum. The Government occupied the store for three and an half years, and the present claim is for that rent. It was refused at the Treasury for want of a law recognising the payment of rent by the United States for a store house, the law only providing that at every permanent post a store house shall be built at the public expense. The claim was advocated on the ground of its equity and legality, and resisted on the plea that as this was not a permanent but a temporary post, contractors must put up such buildings as they wanted at their own expense. But the claim was not for the cost of the building, which was confessed to be forfeited, but merely for the rent of it when no longer occupied by the owner, but by the United States.

The amendment, to reject the unfavorable report, was adopted, ayes 88, noes 59; when the Committee rose, and, the House concurring in the amendment, on motion of Mr. TYSON, the amended report was recommitted to the Committee of Claims, with instructions to bring in a bill pursuant thereto.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Costs in suits by Patentees.

H. OF R.

MARSHAL'S FEES.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, on two bills reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, viz: a bill repealing, in part, the act to lessen the compensation to clerks, marshals, and attorneys in the courts of the United States; and an act concerning costs in certain cases.

The first of these bills provides:

"That so much of the act, passed on the 18th day of April, 1814, entitled 'An act to lessen the compensation for marshals, clerks, and attorneys, in the cases therein mentioned,' as prohibits the allowance of daily compensation to marshals and attorneys in the districts in said act mentioned, be, and the same hereby is, repealed; and, that there hereafter be allowed to the marshals and attorneys for said districts, the same daily compensation as is allowed to the same officers in other districts."

Mr. WEBSTER stated the object of the committee in reporting this bill. By a reference to the actual law on this subject, it would be found that the general law of 1799, making provision for the compensation of the marshals and attorneys of the several States, provided, among other things, that a daily allowance of five dollars per day's attendance on the courts on the business of the United States should be allowed to the marshal, and a like sum to the attorney of the United States, for each judicial district. In the year 1814, an act was passed, which applied to particular districts, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, the eastern district of New York, &c. repealing the daily allowance to these officers in those districts. The ground of this partial change was, that under the peculiar circumstances of that day, during the war, the commercial districts afforded to these officers so great emoluments, in the shape of fees and forfeitures, that the stated compensation was thought to be superfluous, and was, therefore, repealed as to those districts. After the cessation of the war, this state of things became changed, and, in different years, subsequently, propositions have been made again to equalize the compensation of these officers, but, for want of time, or from some other cause, they have not been acted upon. The subject being brought before the Judiciary Committee at this session, one of two courses appeared to them obviously proper; either to extend the law to all the districts, or to repeal it as it now stood. For, whatever might be thought of one or the other course, nothing could be said in favor of retaining the present partial character of the system of compensation. On full examination, the committee had thought the better course would be to repeal so much of the law of 1814 as relates to the subject, and to place the compensations to the officers on the same footing as they stood upon previous to its passage.

An amendment was offered, by Mr. HAYDEN, going to restrict the fees of clerks in certain cases, but, after some conversation, he withdrew it, with the design hereafter to present it in a distinct proposition, and the bill was agreed to.

COSTS IN SUITS BY PATENTEES.

The bill concerning costs in certain cases, was then taken up by the Committee.

This bill provides, "That in suits commenced in the Courts of the United States, after the passage of this act, to recover damages for the violation of any right arising under letters patent, lawfully issued, for any new and useful invention, discovery, or improvement, costs shall be allowed to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, in all cases, where the sum recovered by him or them shall not be less than one hundred dollars."

Mr. WEBSTER explained the reason of the committee for reporting this bill. The general law forbids all recovery of costs in the Courts of the United States, where the amount of the judgment is less than five hundred dollars. This minimum, as applicable to cases generally, Mr. W. said, was perhaps too high, but, as related to cases of recovery of damages for violation of patent rights, it was supposed there were particularly strong reasons why it should be reduced. Suits of that description are instituted not so much to recover great damages as to establish the right of the inventors. The right may be a very important one, and yet the violation of it in particular instances may not involve heavy damages. In ordinary cases, the right of suing in the Courts of the United States has been regarded as a privilege, persons possessing it having the option to avail themselves of it or to resort to the State courts, &c. But, with respect to patent rights, as that subject is exclusively in the possession of the General Government, the whole right being created by the laws of Congress, and the injured person being obliged to sue in the courts of the United States or no where, it seemed right to enlarge the law so far as to allow costs to the plaintiff in all cases arising under the law of patents, where the damages awarded should amount to one hundred dollars. For that purpose this bill had been reported.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, moved as an amendment, that the minimum should be reduced to thirty dollars. Very useful patents often applied to articles of comparatively small value, where an infringement in any single case would not entitle the patentee to damages amounting to one hundred dollars. It was incumbent on Congress to provide for these cases, and as Government charged the patentee thirty dollars for his patent, there was a propriety in fixing upon that sum as the limit of damages on which he might obtain costs.

Mr. WEBSTER not objecting, the amendment was agreed to.

The Committee then rose and reported both bills, and they were both ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

TUESDAY, December 30.

Another member, to wit, from Kentucky, THOMAS METCALFE, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill to confer certain powers on the levy court of the county of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. P. P. BARBOUR, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were instructed to inquire into the propriety of reinstating Henry Hines, of the county of Louisiana, on the Revolutionary pension list.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of explaining and amending the third section of an act, entitled "An act for providing compensation for the marshals, clerks, attorneys, jurors, and witnesses, in the Courts of the United States, and to repeal certain parts of the acts therein mentioned, and for other purposes," so far forth as the provisions thereof affect the compensation of the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States.

Ordered, That the report of the Committee of Claims on the petition of Charles Minifie, be committed to a Committee of the whole House tomorrow.

Engrossed bills, of the following titles, viz: An act for the relief of Jacob Babbitt; An act for the relief of William Bartlett and John Stearns, owners of the schooner Angler, and Nathaniel Carver, owner of the schooner Harmony, and others; An act to repeal, in part, an act, entitled "An act to lessen the compensation for marshals, clerks, and attorneys, in the cases therein mentioned;" were, respectively, read the third time, and passed.

SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, who were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing an uniform system of bankruptcy, reported that it is not expedient to establish such system.

Mr. WEBSTER observed, that the committee had thought it proper to make an early communication of their opinion on this important subject to the House. In this opinion, a great majority of the committee concurred; indeed, he believed he was the only member who had the misfortune to differ from that opinion. The whole committee, however, were desirous of giving a fair opportunity to those gentlemen who, like himself, were in favor of the system, to bring the question before the House. Such an opportunity would now be afforded, as any member might move to amend the report, by altering it from a negative to an affirmative character. It seemed to him to be proper, on several accounts, that the opinion of the House, on the general question of the expediency of a bankrupt law, should be taken, before a bill should be brought in. In such a bill there must necessarily be much of prolixity and detail; and very much discussion might be expected to arise on particular provisions, which would seem to be misplaced, until there should be some room to think that the general measure itself was acceptable to a majority of the House. Until there was room to believe that, such a discussion upon details would have no effect but to consume time. If the House should now reverse this report, the committee would cheerfully prepare and bring in a bill. He would take the liberty to suggest, however, whether the best way would not be to proceed by resolution. In this way, perhaps, not only the general question might be settled, but, if settled in favor of the measure, subsequent resolutions might proceed to settle some of the general outlines of the system; such, for example, as what classes of persons the system should extend to; whether only to traders, technically or legally so called, or to all persons, by proper description, who have, ordinarily, occasion to use extensive credits; and whether it shall be a temporary or permanent system, &c. He made these suggestions only for the consideration of those who, like himself, were in favor of the system. And, to the end that they might have an option, to proceed by way of resolution, or by motion to amend the present report, he would move that the report lie upon the table.

The report was accordingly laid on the table.

TRADE WITH THE INDIANS.

Mr. RICH offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the practicability and expediency of adopting measures which shall more effectually restrain either citizens of the United States or foreigners from hunting or trapping on lands to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, and exclude foreigners from a participation in the Indian trade.

Mr. RICH, in introducing the above resolution, said, that he conceived it due to the House to state some of the reasons which induced him to offer it for adoption, and to hope that the inquiry it proposed would prove successful. During the last season, he was sorry to state, there had occurred on our Western borders, a killing and wounding of traders, and a slaughtering of Indians, which was much to be regretted. The attack made by the Indians is said to have been unprovoked; it may have been so; he hoped, for the honor of our country, that such would turn out to have been the fact. He did not entertain a doubt, that all that could, under the existing laws, be done to prevent so unhappy an occurrence, had been done by the Executive. He believed, however, it would, on investigation, be found, that the laws had been violated, and the rights of our red brethren infringed. In support of his remarks, Mr. R. asked leave to read certain parts of the correspondence which had been submitted to the House on this subject.—[He here read a letter of Mr. Pilcher to Major O'Fallon, communicating a letter from Mr. Gordon, which gave an account of the arrangements for hunting made by the party.] This unhappy fracas had arisen, it seemed, while our traders were marching, trapping, and counter-marching. [Here Mr. R. quoted the letter from General Atkinson to General Gaines, enclosing another from General Ashley to Major O'Fallon.] The object of this expedition, Mr. R. went on to say, was to procure and carry away that game to which the Indian tribes had as just a right as any of us have to the property we hold. In relation to that part of the resolution which refers to the exclusion of foreigners from this trade, unless we could effect this, he was persuaded we need look for nothing but a continual recurrence of events of the same kind as had occurred—a constant waste of human life. If more efficient means to preserve pacific relations with the Indian tribes could not be devised, or were impracticable, then we had better withdraw, at once, our troops from the Indian country altogether.

DECEMBER, 1823.

New York Contested Election.

H. OF R.

Mr. VANCE moved to amend the resolution by striking out the last clause, (to exclude foreigners from the Indian trade,) but afterwards withdrew the amendment, and the resolution was adopted, as moved by Mr. RICH.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. SLOANE, from the Committee of Elections, made a report on the petition of Parmenio Adams, contesting the right of ISAAC WILSON to a seat in this House, as one of the Representatives of the State of New York; which report was committed to a Committee of the Whole. It is as follows:

That, by the laws of the State of New York, "for regulating elections," all elections are by ballot, and are directed to be held by towns in each county within the State, and the supervisors, assessors, and town clerks of the several towns, or a majority of them, are to constitute a board of inspectors, whose duty it is to superintend the elections in their respective towns, and after making a canvass of the votes given at any election, to cause the same to be recorded in the town books, and transmit to the office of the county clerk a true return of the votes so canvassed, when the same shall be examined by a board of county canvassers. After the whole number of votes given in the county is ascertained, and an entry thereof made by the clerk on the records of the county, he shall immediately make out three certified copies thereof; one of which he shall forward to the Governor of the State, one to the Comptroller, and one to the Secretary of State, to be laid before the State canvassers. The State is divided into districts for the election of Representatives to Congress, and the county of Genesee forms the twenty-ninth district. The election for Representatives in the present Congress was held on the first Monday of November, 1822, and the two succeeding days. It appears that, at that election, Isaac Wilson and Parmenio Adams were candidates in opposition; and by the official certificate of the clerk of Genesee county, it appears that Isaac Wilson, by the returns from the several towns, had 2,093 votes, and that, by the same returns, Parmenio Adams had 2,077 votes. The petitioner rests his claim to a seat solely on the ground that, in the town of China, in said county, the board of inspectors made a mistake, by returning for the sitting member 67 votes, when, in fact, the true number given for him was only 45 votes, and ought to have been so returned. The sitting member relies on three points to support his right to retain his seat. 1st. That in the town of Attica a mistake took place, similar in its nature to the one which occurred in China, by which mistake the petitioner had 98 votes returned for him by the board of inspectors of the election in Attica, when the true number given was but 93 votes, and that so it ought to have been returned. 2d. That in the town of Middlebury, the board of inspectors rejected one vote which ought to have been counted for him, because, being a printed ballot with his name thereon, but partially erased with the stroke of a pen, it was considered as a blank vote; and, 3d. That in the towns of Stafford and Byron six ballots were improperly destroyed by the boards of inspectors in those towns, and not included in the canvass, which he contends were given for him, and ought to have been taken into the general estimate of those towns. In support of the different allegations of the parties, a number of affidavits are produced, taken in the presence of both. No attempt is made to impeach the character or veracity of any of the witnesses. They are principally officers of the election, chosen by the citizens of their respective towns, and presumed to be gentlemen of respectability. The committee have carefully examined the testimony, and consider it as entitled to full credit. They are clearly of opinion that the testimony respecting the return from the town of China establishes the fact that 22 votes were returned for the sitting member more than the number he actually received; and they are equally satisfied that, in the town of Attica, five votes were returned for the petitioner more than were given for him by the electors of said town. With respect to the vote which the sitting member claims in the town of Middlebury, the committee are of opinion that he has failed to produce proof sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the board of inspectors acted improperly in considering it a blank ballot. This ballot, it appears, was a printed one, and the name of the sitting member was impressed thereon, but "was excluded from the canvass and estimate, because" it was defaced "by one stroke of a pen drawn over the name, but that every letter was distinct and legible."

All the inspectors of election agree in the opinion that, from the manner in which this ballot was defaced, it must have been the intention of the elector who presented it, to have it considered as blank. It will be observed that these inspectors, from the nature of the trust confided to them, and from the obligations they would necessarily feel to discharge their duty with fidelity, together with the superior advantage which their situation afforded them of judging more correctly than any spectator or by-stander could do, must be presumed to be more competent to decide this question than any other persons could be. With the decision of the board of inspectors in this case, the committee are not disposed to interfere. They consider it a question on which it would be impossible to come to any deliberate conclusion, without being possessed of the same opportunity and advantages which were afforded to the board of inspectors. No person can undertake, with safety, to determine, from any description of a ballot of this sort, what decision he might be disposed to make from an actual inspection of the ballot itself. By the law of the State, the board were constituted the judges. They performed their duty, and are still convinced that their judgment was correct; and the committee are not disposed to question their decision. The claim of the sitting member to have certain votes, which are stated to have been given for him in the towns of Stafford and Byron, counted in his favor, is not considered to be sufficiently established by the testimony. All the inspectors agree that the ballots were folded together, and a reference to the poll lists confirmed the fact that more ballots were received than were names on those lists.

H. OF R.

New York Contested Election.

DECEMBER, 1823.

The suggestion of some of the witnesses, that these ballots might have been innocently delivered by the electors, without any intention of committing fraud, will not avail in a case of this kind. By the law of the State, every elector who conducts in that way forfeits his right of suffrage on that occasion. The law on the subject is positive. It provides that "if any two or more ballots are found folded or rolled up together, none of the ballots so folded or rolled shall be estimated." Upon a full view of the whole case, the committee are of opinion that the election was conducted with fair and honest intention on the part of the board of inspectors of the several towns to which their inquiries have extended; and that their testimony is competent, and ought to be received, to correct any mistakes which may have occurred in returning the votes given at said election. That justice, in this case, requires that there be deducted from the aggregate number of 2,093 votes returned for the sitting member, the twenty-two votes which were allowed to his poll by the mistake in the return from the town of China, which will make the whole number of votes to which he is properly entitled, 2,071; and that, in like manner, a deduction ought to be made from the aggregate number of 2,077, returned for the petitioner on account of the mistake of five votes returned for him in the town of Attica, more than were given for him in that town, which will leave to his poll 2,072 votes, being a majority of one vote over the sitting member. The committee, therefore, submit the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That Isaac Wilson is not entitled to a seat in this House.

"Resolved, That Parmenio Adams is entitled to a seat in this House."

MEMORIAL OF THE PETITIONER.

To the honorable the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States of America:

The petitioner of the undersigned, Parmenio Adams, humbly sheweth:

That your petitioner and Isaac Wilson were opposing candidates for the office of member of Congress in the twenty-ninth Congressional district of the State of New York, composed of the county of Genesee, at an election held in said district on the first Monday of November, 1822, and on the two succeeding days, in pursuance of a law of the said State, to elect a member to represent said district in the Eighteenth Congress of the United States of America; that the whole number of votes given for such member of Congress, at the said election, in the several towns composing the said district, as returned by the proper officers, was 4,170; and, of that number, 2,077 were returned as having been given for your petitioner, and 2,093 for the said Isaac Wilson.

And your petitioner begs leave further to represent that the board of inspectors of election for the town of China, in said district, returned to the board of canvassers, appointed by a law of the said State of New York, sixty-seven votes as having been given in said town for your petitioner for member of Congress as aforesaid, and, by mistake, sixty-seven votes as having been given for the said Isaac Wilson for member of Congress as aforesaid; which said number of sixty-seven votes for the said Isaac Wilson was counted, and allowed by the said board of canvassers, in order to make up the said number of 2,093 given for the said Isaac Wilson in the said district: whereas, in truth and in fact, your petitioner did receive sixty-seven votes in the said town of China; but the said Isaac Wilson received only forty-five votes in the said town; so that your petitioner did, in truth, receive 2,077 votes in the said district; but the said Isaac Wilson did, in truth, receive but 2,071 votes in said district; which gives to your petitioner a majority of six votes over the said Isaac Wilson, there being no other candidates for the office of member of Congress in the said district, at the said election, who received as many votes for the said office as either your petitioner or the said Isaac Wilson.

And your petitioner further states, that, from the facts above stated, which are proved to your honorable body by the affidavits and documents accompanying the prayer of your petitioner, he is entitled to a seat with your honorable body as a Representative in Congress, but that he cannot avail himself of what he considers to be his right, without the aid of your honorable body, the said Isaac Wilson having obtained a certificate of his election in the said district.

Your petitioner, therefore, prays that the seat of the said Isaac Wilson, in your honorable body, may be vacated, and your petitioner have leave to resume the same, in conformity to the will of the electors of the twenty-ninth Congressional district in the State of New York, as expressed in and by the said election.

And your petitioner will ever pray, &c.,

PARMENIO ADAMS.

WASHINGTON CITY, December 1, 1823.

Letter of the sitting member.

To the Hon. JOHN SLOANE,

Chairman of the Committee of Elections:

SIR: Inasmuch as it has been intimated that the Committee of Elections will indulge me in a few suggestions, growing out of the documents submitted to their examination, in relation to the contested election between Major Parmenio Adams and myself, I beg leave to call the attention of the committee to the following: The petitioner, it appears, seeks by affidavit to diminish the vote for the sitting member, in the town of China, where the return had been made out in due form under the statute law of the State of New York, officially signed by the inspectors of election, and returned to the district canvassers, and by them allowed and transmitted to the State Board, whereon they make their official certificate. Regarding the State law, it is believed that the return should be sustained entire as it is, or rejected altogether, on the ground of improper conduct of the inspectors, as appears from their own testimony. It will be noticed that the town clerk entered the said official return on the town book different from the number contained therein, at forty-five votes for the sitting member, without consulting any one of his associate inspectors, and, but a few days thereafter, made up his affidavit that the sitting member had received forty-six votes in said town of China. If, however, it should be adjudged proper by the committee, from the case presented, to correct the return of the town of China, in accordance with the memorial introduced by the petitioner, it is expected that the broad ground will be assumed of extending full and perfect equity to the parties, and that he who had the greatest number of votes in the ballot boxes, and was thereby fairly sustained by the greatest number of electors in the district, should be allowed to prevail. The petitioner claims a majority of six votes over the sitting member, by correcting the alleged mistake in the town of China. Under this view of the case, I proceed, sir, to an examination of the testimony produced on the part of the sitting member, remarking that he relies, with perfect confidence, on the accumulated testimony, to prove a mistake in the official return of the town of Attica, in said district, in returning ninety-eight votes for the petitioner, instead of ninety-three, the true number given for him in said town. Six of the seven inspectors and clerks, to wit, four inspectors and two clerks of election of the said town of Attica, all testify that they are clear and distinct in their recollections, and are positive that the canvass of that town gave the sitting member a majority of thirty votes over the petitioner; whereas the return to the clerk's office, and official canvass, show a majority of twenty-five only. Two of the inspectors, and the two clerks, are equally clear and distinct in their recollections of the particular number given for each candidate; and several of the witnesses recollect distinctly the whole number of votes given in said town for both candidates, and the number of names on the poll list; and, superadded to this weight of evidence, is a minute, in writing, of the candidates' names voted for at the election, with the number of votes given for each, in figures, set opposite, identified by Mr. Stevens, one of the clerks, to be in his own handwriting, taken down by him at the time of the canvass. These six witnesses were examined by the petitioner on interrogatory, and, in my humble apprehension, their answers strengthen the body of their affidavits.

DECEMBER, 1823.

New York Contested Election.

H. OF R.

The petitioner made an attempt to rebut their testimony. He introduces three witnesses; first, Simeon Williams, junior, member of the board, and town clerk, who made out the official return, and is made to say, in the body of his affidavit, "That when the said certificate was completed, and the number of votes received and canvassed, for members of Congress, inserted therein, as stated to this deponent by the said clerks, he, this deponent, called upon the inspectors and one of the clerks, to the reading, and comparing, &c., which being done, and no objection, &c., it was thereupon signed," &c. Whereas, in his answer to the last interrogatory, he confesses, that upon the call of the board to the reading, "and after the reading, one of the clerks said, you have not got the Congress votes down; to which he answered he had not, and one of the clerks then orally gave him the number of votes, &c., and he is not certain whether the returns were compared or not after the addition of the Congressional votes." Thus, in the body of the affidavit, and in the answer of the last interrogatory, are stated distinct facts, directly in collision with each other, which prove that the witness was mistaken in the body of his affidavit; and there is no doubt that, after the Congressional votes were set down, the returns were not read or compared, but were immediately signed and kept by Mr. Williams for record. Moses Disbrow, another witness, stood by one of the clerks, and counted the tally paper at ninety-eight, and saw the clerk count once and set down ninety-eight, as he supposed, by candle-light, and immediately left the room; did not see the clerk make a second count, nor did he see the other clerk count, or any comparison between them. David C. Miller, the last witness to this point, relates a casual conversation had with George Cooley, Esq., soon after the official canvass was published, and understood him to answer to this question, Do you believe there was a mistake? Answer, I do not think there was. And several weeks after, Esquire Cooley was understood to say, I have made no affidavit, (meaning to a mistake,) neither do I think I shall. In desultory conversations like these, it is not uncommon to mistake the intention of the person spoken to, and to put a different construction and complexion in detailing such conversations. The understanding of Esquire Cooley is explained in his answers to interrogatories to his own affidavit. And what does he testify? Merely that, after the whole number of votes were canvassed by the board, and put down by the clerks, and compared, the clerks announced to the board that the sitting member had a majority of thirty votes over the petitioner, and the deponent believes that he did receive a majority of thirty votes. Thus much for the attempt to avoid the mistake in Attica. We have proceeded so far on the ground of corrections, and the petitioner is one single vote in advance only. In the town of Middlebury all the testimony concurs in proving that one printed vote put into the Congressional election box, with the name of Isaac Wilson upon it, with every letter legible, and clearly and easily to be read, and without any other name or writing thereon, was thrown aside, and not included in the official return, because it was partially defaced, apparently with one dash of a pen, whereby one elector, who exercised his elective franchise, was excluded and thrown out of said return. Nothing can be more clear than that a blot or a stroke of a pen on the name, which is still perfectly legible, would not authorize the inspectors to throw it aside, on the violent presumption that it meant nothing. Names are to be written or printed on a ballot—if they are legible, it is enough. If this ballot is counted, the parties, pursuing the ground of correction, have an equal number, independent of the votes called double.

Permit me, in the next place, Mr. Chairman, to invite the attention of the committee to the testimony relating to the towns of Byron and Stafford. I mention the two in conjunction as being in some respects similar. I will, however, first advert to a circumstance which took place in the town of Stafford, at the canvass of the votes of said town, which was of an extraordinary character, and in direct violation of the State law—the denying the Electors the privilege of witnessing said canvass, and, to effect that object, withdrawing to a more private room, and fastening the usual door of entrance, and had actually made some progress in said canvass, when the first witness accidentally found means of entering the room by a back door. As proof of this, I refer to the affidavits of General W. L. Churchill and Ira Gilbert. In the towns of Stafford and Byron it appears that six votes that were in the Congressional election boxes, and given for the sitting member, were thrown aside, and not included in the returns; the inspectors, as they testify, supposing that the State law required their exclusion as double votes. But it is confidently believed that an attentive examination of the evidence in those cases will satisfy every candid and liberal mind that they were not "folded or rolled up together," (the words of the State law,) that is, enfolded together for the purpose of deception, before they were delivered to the inspectors to be put into the boxes.

It is abundantly in proof that those six votes were folded in the usual manner, and as the other votes in the boxes were folded, with the edges out on both sides. For the two votes in the town of Stafford, I refer to the testimony of Ezekiel Hall and Marvin Lord, inspectors, and General W. L. Churchill, Ira Gilbert, and Alfred Churchill, and controverted by none. The particular description of the folding is also given by the witnesses, and clearly shows that they might have slipped together in the boxes; and the presumption is strong that they did so slip together, as it is proved by B. Brooks, Esq., S. Griswold, Esq., and General W. L. Churchill, that votes in the State of New York are not unfrequently found thus slipped together, and when thus found have been canvassed and allowed. That the four votes mentioned in Byron were folded in the usual manner also, I refer to the testimony of Bartholomew Benham, Edmund Wilcox, inspectors, and Samuel B. James, present at the canvass. That the whole six votes were given to the sitting member, is proved by several witnesses, and stands uncontradicted by any one. I am aware that it will be urged that the circumstance of a disagreement of the poll lists with the votes in the boxes, is proof that the votes were put in double by the electors; but I humbly conceive that it is far from being conclusive proof, when we reflect that they were folded in the usual manner, so that they might have slipped together, and that it is not unusual that they are found thus slipped together; and moreover that it often happens that there is a disagreement between the poll lists and the votes in the boxes, as is proved by General W. L. Churchill, B. Brooks, Esq., and S. Griswold, Esq.; and not unfrequently an excess of votes, which may well happen by the neglect of clerks, through the hurry and bustle of an election, to enter the name of every elector who puts his vote into the boxes, especially when there are three boxes and three poll lists for each elector. From these and other circumstances, is not the presumption too strong to be resisted, that some of them, if not the whole six votes, were given in singly? And, while on this subject, it may be observed that the only possible ground on which the six votes can be set aside, is a fraudulent intention in the electors.

H. OF R.

New York Contested Election.

DECEMBER, 1823.

It is not only possible, but very probable, as has been shown, that these votes had slipped into each other by carrying about the boxes from one day's election to another, and from the votes having to pass the scrutiny of the inspectors as they are put in. If these votes are decided to be fraudulent, it must be from presumption merely. It is not easy to distinguish this case from all others, where fraud is never to be presumed, but must be most conclusively proven. Again, suppose that these six votes were all given in double, we have it in proof, to wit, by General Churchill, Gilbert, and James, that they might not only possibly, but probably, in that case, have been hastily received from distributors of votes thus together, and without examination put in, not knowing there were two; and, if so, no fraud could attach to the elector, and, upon the broad principles of perfect equity, disregarding the State law, the double votes should count one. From the production of the affidavits of D. C. Miller and J. B. Lay, identifying a printed sheet of votes, and proving the same to be similar to all the Congressional votes printed at the said Miller's office for the election of November, 1822, it is presumed the petitioner intends to infer a mistake by some of my witnesses in describing the caption or label of votes. The proof does not establish the inference; other votes than those printed at that office might have been circulated. But, suppose they were mistaken in that incidental circumstance, which was only introduced to show a dissimi-larity between the captions; it may well be supposed that they might misplace the words of the caption, and yet be clear and correct in their recollections as to its object, to wit, designating the different candidates; and all that is said in relation to captions is not material, as the name of the sitting member was seen by the witnesses on five of the said six votes, and there is no pretension, in proof, to the contrary. Upon a review of this case, is it not clear that the election of the sitting member was equitably sustained by a fair majority of his district? And that such will be the decision of this honorable committee, and of the House, I think the answer will unanimously be in the affirmative.

Respectfully submitted,

ISAAC WILSON.

Reply of Petitioner.

To the Hon. JOHN SLOANE,

Chairman of the Committee of Elections:

Humbly referring your honorable body to a rehearsal of the documents submitted by your petitioner, he respectfully submits the following suggestions:

1. Your petitioner, on a particular examination of the evidence relative to the votes given in the town of China, assumes the conclusion as irresistible that the facts set forth in the petition relative to those votes are established beyond controversy. In answer to which, the sitting member endeavors in part to balance the majority in favor of your petitioner, resulting from the correction of the mistake alleged by him, by showing a mistake in your petitioner's favor in the town of Attica, to the number of five votes.

On this part of the case it is humbly suggested that a statement of the result of the canvass drawn up at the time (the attention of the inspectors being particularly drawn to the state of the Congress votes, and the whole being certified by and in the presence of each of the said inspectors as the constituted judges) should preponderate as a matter of authenticated record evidence over the recollections of any set of men, in the absence of the original canvass itself, which was preserved, and forms the groundwork from which all the inferences are drawn in relation to the votes in the town of China.

2. Should the sitting member be deemed to have established the alleged mistake in the town of Attica, (which, however, cannot for a moment be admitted,) still there will remain a majority of one vote in favor of your petitioner. It is contended, nevertheless, that a legitimate vote, given for the sitting member in the town of Middlebury, was not counted. On this point it is sufficient to remark that the inspectors of the election, having ocularly examined the vote itself, were better capable of determining on its legitimacy than any body of men can be from a description of the vote given by the inspectors themselves. And again, the inspectors are, by the election law of the State of New York, made the judges of the validity of that vote; they acted judicially upon it, and it is respectfully submitted that their decision ought to be conclusive in the premises, and not in the nature of a mistake, subject to future revision and correction.

3. In reference to the double votes given in the town of Byron and Stafford, the law of the State of New York makes the inspectors who institute an examination at the time (referring to the proper check provided by the same law, viz: the examination of the poll lists) the sole judges. And if, in their judgment, honestly formed, the votes were deemed to have been put in double, then the fraud intended to be guarded against is presumed, and the votes are consequently void.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Ordinance Department.

H. OF R.

And your petitioner has the honor to be, &c.,
PARMENIO ADAMS.

The resolution offered yesterday by Mr. COOK, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement of the amount of money remaining to be paid by the purchasers of public lands prior to the 1st of July, 1820, and designating the amount due for lands in each State, was taken up and agreed to, nem. con.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. FLOYD, of Virginia, advertng to a Message of the President of the United States, transmitted to this House on the 8th day of January last, in answer to certain resolutions of the 8th January, 7th May, and 17th December, 1822, calling for certain information respecting the expenditures in the Ordnance department, said the document to which he referred had not been ordered to be printed until the close of the session, so that, during the last session, it was not practicable to pursue the inquiry which he, as the mover of one of the resolutions calling for the information, had intended to follow up. He now moved that the Message and documents in this case be referred to a select committee.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, called for the reading of the Message proposed to be referred, to see whether the appointment of a select committee in the case was advisable.

Mr. SAUNDERS, of North Carolina, said he was glad that the attention of the gentleman from Virginia had been directed to the report of the last session respecting the expenditures of the Ordnance department. Since the meeting of the present Congress, Mr. S. said he had occasion to look into that report. The examination which he had given first showed that something like a check should be put upon the expenditure of that department, if it could be done. He preferred the document being referred to a select committee, because, if gentlemen would look into it, they would find it to be very voluminous, comprising the accounts of the Ordnance department for several years, and it would be impracticable for a committee to examine it in the manner in which it ought to be examined without abstracting its attention from every other subject.

Mr. TAYLOR said the gentleman from North Carolina had mistaken him, if he understood him as opposing the reference of these documents to a select committee. He only wished the Message of the President read, to understand precisely what the subject was which was proposed to be referred, with a view to ascertain whether it would be proper to refer it to a select committee or to the Military Committee.

The Message was then read.

Mr. SAUNDERS resumed his observations. He disapproved of a reference of this subject to the Military Committee, because, he said, of the voluminousness of the documents, and the necessity of a more minute examination of the subject, than it would probably be in the power of that committee to give it. He would state some of these expenditures in the Ordnance department, which, he said, would strike this House with something like astonishment. In 1819, for example, it would be found that eight or ten dollars per barrel had been paid for corn for the use of this department. If there had been such a scarcity of that article in any part of the country as to raise it to that price, he knew not of it. It would be found, on looking at another item, that a very large sum had been paid—

The SPEAKER here checked the debate; it was not in order, on a motion for reference, to go at large into the subject proposed to be referred.

Mr. HAMILTON, of South Carolina, said, that, as a member of the Military Committee, he was not desirous of appropriating to that committee an undue proportion of labor; but he submitted to the House whether, under the general duties enjoined on that committee, that of examining this subject did not properly fall. Unless otherwise specially instructed by the House, he thought the subject was already fully within the scope of the duties of the committee, which, from the nature of the business which came before it, might be supposed to be fully competent to its investigation, and might therefore come to conclusions thereupon different from those of a select committee.

Mr. LITTLE, of Maryland, then moved to refer the papers in question to the Committee on the Expenditures of the War Department, whose duty he thought it peculiarly was to investigate subjects of this description.

Mr. FLOYD, after expressing an unwillingness to take up the time of the House on this subject, said that it had been heretofore almost uniformly the practice, (to which he knew of but a single exception,) where a subject was brought before the House by any member, with a desire to have a committee appointed upon it, that this request should be granted to him. It was perfectly competent to the gentleman from South Carolina, who was now at the head of the Military Committee, to have had this document referred to that committee at an earlier day, when the committee had little to do. The gentleman from Maryland, too, must agree that the practice of allowing a particular inquiry, when asked by a member, was almost an universal practice of the House. Here was an expenditure, to a vast amount, in one of the departments. Desirous to see the nature of the expenditures, Mr. F. said he had called for an account of them. The information was now here, and all that he asked was, that it should be referred to a committee, which would have time to examine the subject, and take it under their particular care. It was very true, as the gentleman had intimated, that the Military Committee might come to a different conclusion from a select committee. Mr. F. said he believed, however, that any committee to whom the subject should be referred, would come to the same conclusion; but, if, in making this motion, he was about to thead on any tender place, perhaps he had better withdraw it.

H. OF R.

Costs in Suits for Patent Rights.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Mr. LITTLE, disclaiming any intention to oppose an inquiry in this case, said it was the particular duty of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, to inquire into expenditures of this description, and therefore he wished the subject referred to them, presuming that they would not neglect their duty, and that every member of the House felt the same interest as he himself did in the correct administration of the public concerns.

Mr. DWIGHT, of Massachusetts, thought that to refer this subject to any other committee than that on the expenditures of the War Department, would be to interfere with the appropriate duties of that committee. He read a part of the rule establishing that committee, to sustain his position. It was very well known that that committee had heretofore had very little business before them. It seemed most proper, therefore, that this message should be referred to that committee: any other course, indeed, it appeared to him, would be irregular.

Mr. HAMILTON said the gentleman from Massachusetts had anticipated him in what he had said; for, on reference to the rule, he was very well satisfied that the suggestion of the gentleman from Maryland was perfectly correct. To show that it was so, Mr. H. requested the Clerk to read the rule.

The rule was read by the Clerk.

Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, said he hoped the motion to refer the message to this standing committee would not prevail. The House, since it had heard the rule read, would see that the duties imposed on that committee, which consists of three members only, were very arduous. These duties could not be so well performed in the committee room, but the committee were under the necessity of going to the War Department to prosecute their inquiries. The consequence was, that, when that committee, some time ago, made a report to this House, they recommended the number of the committee to be increased, but that recommendation had not been acted upon. That committee, at least he spoke for himself as one of them, would be very much obliged to any gentleman who would divide their labor with them. If that committee should meet every day of the session, and the session were to endure for twice its usual term, it would be impossible for them to examine all the vouchers, &c., for the expenditures in the Department. They were even now obliged, in some measure, to slur over their inquiries, from the want of time to pursue them, &c. It would be very gratifying to that committee, he said, to have the subject now before the House referred to a select committee.

Mr. FLOYD said, in making this motion, he had not taken any course unusual in the House; he was only pursuing an inquiry which he had himself commenced. It was not because he supposed there was any unwillingness or inability in the standing committees to examine the subject, that he proposed to refer it to a select committee, but because he had commenced the inquiry himself, and he wished himself to pursue it.

The question was then taken on the motion to refer the subject to the standing Committee on the Expenditures of the War Department, being first in order, and negatived—99 votes to 67.

The question was then taken on referring it to a select committee, and agreed to; and Messrs. FLOYD, SAUNDERS, DWIGHT, METCALFE, TRACY, SHARPE, and SPENCE, were appointed the said committee.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill for the relief of William Kendall. The bill, together with the report of the committee on the case, having been read, the bill was reported without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill for the relief of John Jenkins, which was recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill for the relief of Sarah Chitwood; which was reported without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

COSTS IN SUITS FOR PATENT RIGHTS.

The engrossed bill "concerning costs in certain cases," was read a third time.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, had an objection to the bill. As he understood the bill now to stand, if a party, suing in the courts of the United States, recovered only ten dollars, he would be entitled to costs; because the clerk of the court was ordered to record a judgment of damages for three times the amount awarded by the jury; and, for the same reason, as the law formerly stood, a plaintiff recovering no more than $160, was entitled to costs, because the damages were to be entered at treble the amount. The gentleman from Massachusetts had, indeed, otherwise stated the law, and he was probably better acquainted with the law than himself, yet such were his convictions; and, with this view of the practical operation of the bill, he could view it as little else than a bill to aid individuals to impose upon the public. Such, at least, would be its effect in the Western country. That country, he said, swarmed with persons professing to have patent rights for new discoveries. An instance had not long ago occurred, of a man coming into that country, and maintaining that he had a patent for wing gudgeons, and succeeding so far as to exact large sums of money from individuals, who were intimidated by a threat of his going to law with them. Pass this law, said he, and adventurers of this kind will come along with the law in their pocket, and threaten those on whom they practise their impositions, to drag them from the extremity of Missouri, Illinois, &c., to the circuit courts of the United States. No matter if, when they got them there, they should recover only ten dollars, the bill, as it now stood, would give them the costs of suit. Almost all the light machinery employed in that region of country, Mr. V. said, came from the Eastward. The articles were consigned to a merchant in some intermediate town, Pittsburg or Wheeling, for example, and he sent them forward to agents in the interior. There they were purchased and used, and then comes along some man from the Eastward, claiming a patent right to the article—the user cannot trace the person from whom the articles were procured to the Eastward, and dreading a suit, prefers to pay the unjust demand of a mere adventurer. As an instance of which, he cited the case of Wood's patent plough, which was much used in the prairies of the Mississippi, and which had given occasion to great abuses of this description. No law could be better calculated to encourage litigation, he thought, than this.

DECEMBER, 1823.

Relief of Distillers.

H. OF R.

Mr. WRIGHT said, that he was in favor of the bill, as originally reported; in its present form, he should be opposed to its passage. By the act of 1799, where $500 or more was sued for in the United States courts, and less than $500 recovered, no costs were allowed. But the case now to be provided for rests on a different principle. All costs, he said, are matters of special legislation, being, he believed, unknown to the common law. They were not allowed in suits under the patent law, because that law provides that judgment shall be given for three times the amount of the verdict obtained. This provision of the existing laws he considered as a full equivalent for costs, and a sufficient security to the rights of the patentee. He thought that a reduction of the minimum of damages, on which costs are recoverable, would have a tendency to multiply law suits. It had been said, that suitors under the patent laws were compelled to have resort to the courts of the United States, as they could sue nowhere else. He conceived the law to be otherwise. He believed that the United States courts had not exclusive, but only concurrent jurisdiction, in cases of this description. Doubtless, the subject of allowing costs had been within the view of Congress when the original act was passed; and why were costs not then allowed? For the reason he had stated—the triple amount of the verdict being allowed in lieu of them. Besides, in most cases, the damages assessed did not go to the original patentee; they went to persons who claimed to have an assignment from him. Such persons abounded—they literally swarmed in some parts—vending patent rights had become a perfect trade. They impose upon the ignorant, and threaten the timid, till they often succeed in fleecing both. Sometimes, however, they meet with an individual of sterner stuff, who consents to abide a suit; but he does not know whether the patent is valid or not, and, in the issue, he is cast; damages are awarded against him; the law trebles those damages, and now costs are to be superadded to all the rest. He hoped the bill, at least, in its present shape, would not pass; and he therefore moved that it be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to restore it to its first form, by altering the minimum of damages on which costs should be allowed from $30 to $100.

The question being taken on this motion without further debate, it passed in the affirmative, and the bill was recommitted accordingly.

RELIEF OF DISTILLERS.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill for the relief of certain distillers of Berks county, Pennsylvania, which having been read, together with the report of the Committee of Ways and Means thereon, made at a former session of Congress—

Mr. KREMER moved to amend the bill by striking out the words, "in the county of Berks."

Mr. McLANE said he should not object to this amendment. The bill had been reported by the committee in its present restricted form, because the petition on which it was founded was limited to persons residing in Berks county. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania knew that there were others in that State who needed its provisions, he was willing to extend the bill to them also.

Mr. KREMER replied, that though he did not certainly know this to be the fact, he thought it highly probable; and it might save trouble, and could do no harm, to extend the bill.

Mr. FOOT, of Connecticut, suggested, as a modification of the amendment, to strike out the words "in the State of Pennsylvania," leaving the bill to operate generally throughout the Union. To this modification of his motion, Mr. KREMER consented.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of Pennsylvania, said that, in his opinion, it was enough to remedy grievances when we know them to exist. The patent to which the bill refers, is in operation only through a small part of the State of Pennsylvania. Lancaster county, the only other county materially interested in the relief proposed by this bill, has already applied for, and has obtained it. What good end would be answered by a farther extension of it? The practical effect would be to hold out a temptation to distillers, who never thought of such a thing, to try to bring themselves, by some construction, or on some pretext, within the relief it is intended to grant in this particular case.

Mr. FOOT said he had no idea, in offering the amendment he had proposed, to embarrass the passage of the bill; but he had offered it because he thought that Congress were equally bound to do justice to all; and if there were any other persons, beside the petitioners, interested in the object of the bill, he could conceive of no reason why they should not be equally provided for. As to the construction of the patent law as applying to this case, there was no room for dispute—the patent was one well known.

Mr. McLANE said that when the amendment was first proposed, it did not occur to him that there could be any objection to it; but, on further reflection, he was inclined to believe that the extent which the honorable member from Connecticut wished to give to the provisions of the bill would be productive of consequences such as that gentleman did not anticipate. The bill was framed with a view to those particular persons, all of whom are provided for as persons living; but if it is extended to the whole Union, many of those concerned in the operation of the patent will prove to be persons now dead, and further provision will have to be made for refunding to their heirs or representatives the amount claimed as overpaid. The terms of the bill would need to be greatly changed. He thought the more expedient course would be to pass the bill as it stood, granting the relief to those who asked for it.

Mr. KREMER replied, and advocated the amendment, on the ground of doing equal justice to all concerned. Had the first bill on the subject been a general one, the House would not now have been troubled with this one; and if made so now, it would prevent more trouble in future. Congress ought not to act towards the persons embraced in this bill like a father to a spoiled child, and treat the rest as outcasts. He hoped the bill would pass on the broad ground proposed by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was decided in the negative; and the question being on the bill as reported by the committee,

Mr. SANDFORD expressed his disapprobation of the course pursued in making, in this case, a partial instead of a general provision. The mode of distilling referred to in the bill, had spread, he believed, far, both to the South and the West. It was in use in North Carolina, in Tennessee, and Kentucky; and if we waited to relieve those in these States who were equally entitled to relief, until they petitioned this House and the ordinary forms had time to be gone through, many of the petitioners would probably be dead before the bill would pass. It was a waste of time to legislate for county by county, as was proposed by the bill.

The Committee rose and reported the bill without amendment, and it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

WEDNESDAY, December 31.

Another member, viz. from Pennsylvania, DANIEL H. MILLER, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce in the city of New York, praying for the establishment of a uniform mode of bankruptcy, for the United States; which memorial was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented the petition of a number of pensioners of the United States, now assembled at the City of Washington, adopted at a meeting of said pensioners, of which meeting Thomas Cox was chairman, and Daniel Palmer, secretary, praying for an increase of their pensions, respectively; which petition was referred to the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed a bill, entitled "An act concerning discriminating duties of tonnage and impost;" in which bill they ask the concurrence of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee of Claims, under the instruction of the House, reported a bill for the relief of Garrett Fountain. The bill having been read—

Mr. WILLIAMS moved that the same might be recommitted to the same committee, with instructions to inquire whether any deposits of provisions were required by proper authority to be made in advance at the place where the house of said Fountain was erected; so as to bring it within the true character or technical definition of a stationary post.

This motion for recommitment, was supported by Messrs. WILLIAMS and MCCOY; and opposed by Messrs. WOODS, MALLARY, and SHARPE; but was superseded by a motion to refer the bill to a Committee of the Whole; and the bill was referred accordingly.

Mr. GURLEY offered the following:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be directed to inquire into the justice and expediency of granting to actual settlers in that part of the State of Louisiana, lying east of the Mississippi and Island of Orleans, a right of pre-emption to public lands, in the same manner, and for the same period of time after possession thereof by the Government of the United States, as was granted to such settlers in the late Territory of Orleans, after possession thereof as aforesaid."

In advocating the propriety of this resolution, Mr. GURLEY observed, that there was a material difference between the situation of the two regions of country embraced within the State of Louisiana. Both of them had, indeed, been acquired at the same time, by the treaty with France; but, in one of these districts, possession was accompanied with title, in the other not. In the old Territory of Orleans, pre-emption rights extend to eleven years; in the other part of the State, only to four years. Mr. G. insisted on the impropriety of such a difference between citizens of the same State, as a ground for the inquiry proposed by his resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BEECHER moved to take up the bill for extending the Cumberland Road. Carried, ayes 73, noes 70. The bill was then, on motion of Mr. B., referred to the Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky, the Committee on Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing ports of entry and delivery at Louisville, Kentucky; Cincinnati, in Ohio; and St. Louis, in Missouri.

The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning discriminating duties of tonnage and impost," was read the first and second time; and a motion was made by Mr. COBB, to amend the said bill, by inserting, after the word "nation," where it occurs the first time in the 4th section, these words, "the independence of which has been, or hereafter may be, acknowledged by the United States." This motion was disagreed to by the House, and it was ordered to be read a third time to-day.

The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning discriminating duties of tonnage and impost," was read the third time, and passed.

Engrossed bills of the following titles, viz: An act for the relief of William Kendall; An act for the relief of Sarah Chitwood; and An act for the relief of certain distillers within the county of Berks, in the State of Pennsylvania; were, respectively, read the third time, and passed.

JANUARY, 1824.

Miami Purchase—Condition of Greece.

H. OF R.

[Mr. KREMER made an unsuccessful motion to recommit the last named bill with a view to enlarge its provisions.]

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee of Claims on the memorial of the Levy Court of Calvert county, Maryland.

Mr. NEALE moved to strike out the word "not," in this report.

[The claim involved in this case is for the value of the courthouse of the county, alleged to have been destroyed because it had been occupied as quarters by forces of the United States. The report is against the claim.]

Mr. NEALE supported his motion with great earnestness, and Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, (the chairman of the Committee of Claims,) opposed it with equal zeal. After a considerable contest between these gentlemen on the merits of the claim,

The question on striking out the negative word of the report, was taken, and decided in the negative—for striking out, 53; against it, 94.

The Committee then rose, and reported the resolution of the Committee of Claims, without amendment, and it was adopted by the House; thus rejecting the petition.

MIAMI PURCHASE.

Mr. GAZLAY submitted the following:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the title and right of the United States in and to one township of land reserved for certain purposes in the contract entered into with John C. Symmes, as mentioned in the laws passed in 1792 and 1803 relating thereto."

Mr. GAZLAY, in introducing this resolution to the notice of the House, stated that, in the year 1787, John C. Symmes had entered into a contract with the United States for one million of acres of land, commonly designated as "the Miami Purchase." In 1792, not being able to pay for the whole of this tract, he petitioned that the extent of his contract might be curtailed to 300,000 acres—certain reservations, made in the first contract, for the purpose of encouraging education, being continued unchanged. The patent which issued under this last form of the contract, reserved one entire township, as nearly in the centre of the tract as might be, for this use. In 1803, Congress passed another act on the subject, allowing the reservation of any one complete township, and, in case of non-compliance, compelling an execution of the trust, unless the payment of $15,360 would release the obligation. By this it was manifest that, at that time, Congress viewed itself as holding the fee of this land. In consequence, there was a charge to that amount standing against J. C. Symmes, on the public books, since the year 1792. It was on these facts that he offered the resolution. During a period in which we were gathering by basketsfull, Mr. G. said, an amount like this might be overlooked, but now, it was necessary to gather up the crumbs of the Treasury.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONDITION, &c. OF GREECE.

The following Message from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES was read:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit to the House of Representatives, a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying documents, containing the information requested by the resolution of the House, of the 19th instant, relating to the condition and future prospects of the Greeks.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31, 1823.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, Dec. 31, 1823.

The Secretary of State, to whom has been referred the resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States of the 19th instant, requesting the President of the United States, to lay before the House any information he may have received, and which he may not deem it improper to communicate, relating to the condition and future prospects of the Greeks, has the honor of reporting to the President, the papers in the possession of this Department, containing the information requested by the resolution of the House.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

List of Papers sent.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Adams, dated 13th December 1822—with Note, dated Corinth, 8th [20th] April, 1822—translation.

Note, Mr. Luriottis to Don Evaristo San Miguel, dated 21st November, 1822—translation.

Mr. Rush to Mr. Adams, 24th Feb., 1823—copy

Mr. Luriottis to same, 20th do. do.

Mr. Adams to Mr. Rush, 18th Aug. do. do.

Same to Mr. Luriottis, 18th do. do.

Extract of a letter to Secretary of State, dated Marseilles, 6th August, 1823.

Do. 27th do.

Statistical table of Greece—translation—original copy received from Mr. Middleton.

The Message, &c., was ordered to lie on the table.

The House adjourned to Friday.

FRIDAY, January 2, 1824.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications, viz:

I. A letter from the Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting the following statements received from the Third Auditor: 1. A statement of the names of such officers as have not rendered their accounts within the year, or have balances unaccounted for, on account of advances made one year prior to the 30th of September last. 2. A statement of accounts which have remained unsettled, or on which balances have been due more than three years, prior to the 30th September last. 3. An abstract of moneys advanced prior to the 3d of March, 1809, on the books of the late Accountant of the War Department, which remained

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

JANUARY, 1824.

to be accounted for on the books of the Third Auditor, on the 30th September last; all prepared in obedience to acts of the 3d March, 1809, and 3d March 1817; which letter and statements were laid on the table.

II. A letter from William H. Jones, accompanied with a proof, as far as finished, of Mr. Shriver's map of the country through which it is proposed that the Chesapeake and Ohio canal shall pass; which letter and map were referred to the committee appointed on so much of the President's Message as relates to said proposed canal.

III. A letter from the Secretary of State, enclosing a copy of a letter to him from George G. Barrell, Consul of the United States at Malaga, in Spain, accompanied with a portrait of Columbus, in half length, which he obtained from Seville, believed to have been painted by the same hand which painted the celebrated likeness of that great man now in the Palace of the Escurial in Spain; which picture he wishes to be placed among the portraits of other distinguished men in the Capitol: in which letter the Secretary of State also states, that "an exact fac simile, engraved on copper plate, has been made, by direction of the Department, of the original copy of the Declaration of Independence, and that two hundred copies have been struck, and are at the Department, subject to the disposal of Congress;" which letters were referred to the joint Library Committee.

On motion of Mr. COBB, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of directing, by law, the delivery to the administrator, executors, or other legal representative of John Michael, deceased, certificate No. 1095, for twenty thousand acres of land, in the Mississippi Land Company, issued in the name of Robert Williams; which certificate is now deposited in the office of the Secretary of State.

Mr. WICKLIFFE offered the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the twenty-fifth section of the act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, or so modify the same, that the writ of error, therein provided for, shall be awarded to either party, without reference to the manner the question shall have been decided by the supreme court of the State.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, in offering this resolution, stated the object which he had in view in proposing it. The twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary act contained a provision, among other things, for allowing an appeal or writ of error from the supreme court of any State to the Supreme Court of the United States, in any case in which the decision of the supreme court of the State shall involve the validity of any law of the United States or any provision of the Constitution. The first object which he had in view, Mr. W. said, was to annihilate this section of the Judiciary act altogether; believing that the power, given the Supreme Court of the United States to reverse decisions of the supreme court of any State, was a dangerous one. If he could not accomplish that, he wished to have that section so amended as that the right of the writ of error or appeal should be granted, on application, to either party.

The resolution was agreed to, without opposition.

Mr. WRIGHT submitted the following:

Resolved, That the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury to this House, dated the 27th of January, 1823, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and that said committee be instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, legislative provision is necessary to secure to the State of Ohio the full amount of the three per cent. arising from the sales of the public lands in said State, under the contract entered into between the United States and the State of Ohio, by the ordinance of the convention of that State, of 27th November, 1802, and the act of Congress of 3d March, 1803; and, also, whether any, and what, proportion of the expenses of surveying the lands of the United States in Ohio, have been paid by the purchasers of said lands.

Mr. WRIGHT said, that it might not be recollected, that the contract, referred to in this resolution, between the United States and Ohio, had received a construction, by the parties to the contract, upon which they continued to act for twenty years. After the lapse of that period, a different construction had been given to the contract by the General Land Office, which was considered by the State of Ohio as seriously affecting its interests. Of that construction he did not now mean to examine the accuracy or question the correctness. He wished merely to direct the attention of the Committee of Public Lands to that subject, satisfied that, on a full examination of the subject, they would come to a correct conclusion upon it.—The resolve was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. OWEN,

1. Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of altering and amending the land laws now in force, so as to induce those who purchased under the credit system to discharge the sums yet unpaid, by cash, advanced at discount, and by further relinquishment.

2. Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to actual settlers, prior to the first of July, 1820, in the State of Alabama, the right of purchasing, by pre-emption, of at least one quarter section of land, embracing their family residences.

3. Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting the right of pre-emption to all persons to mill-seats, on public lands, where the same have been actually improved, as such, by them.

4. Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to each county in each State, where there are public lands, the right of pre-emption to one quarter section of land, for the purpose of erecting and locating public and county buildings.

Mr. POINSETT laid before the House the following resolution, adopted by the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina, on the 20th of December, ultimo, viz:

Resolved, That the State of South Carolina regards with deep interest the noble and patriotic struggle of

JANUARY, 1824.

Commerce with Greece—Agent to Greece, &c.

H. OF R.

the modern Greeks to rescue from the foot of the infidel and barbarian the hallowed land of Leonidas and Socrates; and would hail with pleasure the recognition, by the American Government, of the independence of Greece.

The resolution was read, and laid on the table.

Mr. CALL presented to the House a printed copy of the "Acts of the Legislative Council of the Territory of Florida, passed at their second session, 1823;" which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMMERCE WITH GREECE, &c.

Mr. BRECK moved that the resolution some time since offered by him, and laid on the table, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement of the trade of the United States to Greece, Egypt, and Asia Minor, be now taken up, and considered.

Mr. B. said he should not again have troubled the House on this subject, had he been able to discover, in the statistical tables from the Treasury, the information it was his object to obtain; but several items were, in that statement, included in one line, and the whole was so "mixed up," that it was impossible for him to find what he wanted. He thought the procuring of the information the more important, as the subject of our relations with Greece was soon to be brought before the House.

Mr. WEBSTER gave notice that he should not hold himself bound, in calling up his resolution on the subject, to wait for the document called for by that now offered, and for the reason, that he did not think that the information now called for had any bearing on the merits of the proposition which he had submitted to the House.

Mr. FORSYTH suggested, as an amendment to the resolution, to strike out the clause which requires a distinct statement, in separate columns, of the countries under the Turkish Government, from those possessed by the Greeks in arms, in order to put the resolution in a shape in which it would be complied with.

Mr. BRECK accepted the amendment; and the resolution, thus altered, was agreed to by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish this House with the amount of exports from the United States to Greece, Asia Minor, and Egypt, during the years 1820, 1821, and 1822; also, the amount of imports therefrom, for the same period; also, the amount of duties paid on said imports into the Treasury of the United States.

BENJAMIN HUFFMAN.

The House then passed to the orders of the day, and resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the bill appropriating a certain sum of money, to enable Benjamin Huffman to recover his son, taken prisoner by the Indians.

Mr. COCKE briefly stated the circumstances of the case to be provided for. The father of the boy having applied for advice and assistance to Governor Cass, of Michigan Territory, that gentleman corresponded on the subject with the Secretary of State; in consequence of which the latter had a correspondence with Mr. Canning, the British Minister to this Government, and he, with the Governor of Canada, who discovered that the boy in question was in the possession of a British sergeant in Canada, who was unwilling to deliver him up. Without the consent both of the boy himself, and of this man who held him, the Governor of Canada was unwilling to deliver him over. In such circumstances, the committee who reported this bill, thought it right that Congress should interpose, in order to enable the father to go on to Canada, and take with him the requisite evidence of the facts, and obtain a habeas corpus for the boy. They had guarded against any abuse, first, by the smallness of the sum granted, and then by exacting security for a faithful account and a return of the balance, should any remain.

The committee reported the bill without amendment, and it was ordered to a third reading.

ROAD FROM MEMPHIS TO LITTLE ROCK.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for laying out and making a road from Memphis, Tennessee, to Little Rock, in the Territory of Arkansas.

Mr. HEMPHILL, in supporting the expediency of the bill, stated that a memorial on the same subject had last session been received from the Territory of Arkansas, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and a favorable report made, but not acted on. The committee now believed such a road to be necessary, and highly conducive to the prosperity of that Territory; but too expensive for its present population and means. It was for the purpose of uniting the two great bodies of settlers, the seat of government being at one end of the road, and the settlements on the Mississippi at the other end. The actual distance was but 150 miles; but the present circuitous road ran three times that length. The contemplated road would be valuable to the Union, as well as to the Territory, by affording transportation for public property, and by opening to speedier settlement the military lands in Arkansas. It was important in another view. The white population of that Territory was but about 16,000; and on its borders were nearly 50,000 Indians. It was evident how requisite it would be, in case hostilities should arise, to have an easier and more direct mode of communication than now existed. Many similar bills had passed the House, but none of them more proper, from all the circumstances, than this.

The bill, having been read by sections, was reported without amendment, and ordered to a third reading—ayes 79, noes 58.

AGENT TO GREECE, &c.

Mr. SLOANE, from the Committee of Elections, gave notice that he should, on Monday, call up the report of that committee on the subject of the contested election of Mr. WILSON, a member from New York.

The SPEAKER reminded the honorable member that notice had been given for the discussing of

H. OF R.

Report on the Finances.

JANUARY, 1824.

another subject, on Monday: alluding to Mr. WEBSTER's resolution for sending an agent to Greece.

Mr. POINSETT said, that the Speaker had referred to a subject, in regard to which, he wished to make a suggestion, for which he would use the present occasion. The motion, by his friend from Massachusetts, respecting Greece, stood under notice for Monday next. That question, he thought, would give rise to the discussion of other subjects connected with our foreign relations. It would be recollected that, after notice was given for the discussion of that subject on Monday next, a call for information, on another most interesting subject, had been made, on the motion of an honorable member from Vermont, (Mr. MALLARY,) which had not yet been answered. The King of Spain, it was understood, had declared his determination to reclaim his former possessions in America by force. It had been confidently rumored, that the confederated monarchs of Europe were about to take some measures in aid of this determination of the King of Spain. When the House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the subject of the agency to Greece, that would be a convenient occasion to bring forward this other subject. They were somewhat connected, and there would doubtless be a discussion of both. But the House would not be fully prepared for the discussion, till the reply should come in answer to the resolution adopted on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont. He wished, therefore, that his friend from Massachusetts would consent to omit the calling up of his motion on Monday.

Mr. WEBSTER said, he felt solicitous—perhaps too solicitous—to bring on his motion as early as convenient, especially as some mistaken notion, as he thought, of its nature and tendency, had gone abroad. He was fully persuaded that the course indicated by that motion was precisely that which he thought the Government ought to adopt; that nothing less than that would satisfy the public feeling or the public expectation, and that the sooner it was done the better. He thought the information communicated this morning was of a character to strengthen this conviction, where it existed, and to create it where it did not. Nevertheless, he was unwilling to bring on the motion, while his friend from South Carolina thought there would be a convenience resulting from delay. He would, therefore, not call up the subject on Monday. And, as it was probable there would soon be an answer to the resolution of the gentleman from Vermont, he would, after the receipt of that communication, call the attention of the House again to the subject.

REPORT ON THE FINANCES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, covering his annual report upon the state of the finances of the United States; which letter and report were ordered to lie on the table, and six thousand copies thereof ordered to be printed.

The letter and report are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Dec. 31, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a report, prepared in obedience to the "Act supplementary to the act to establish the Treasury Department."

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

To the honorable the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

In obedience to the directions of the "Act supplementary to the act to establish the Treasury Department," the Secretary of the Treasury respectfully submits the following report:

1.—Of the Public Revenue and Expenditures of the years 1822 and 1823.

The net revenue which accrued from duties on imports and tonnage, during the year 1822, amounted to - - - - - $20,500,775 91

The actual receipts into the Treasury during the year 1822, amounted to $20,232,427 94
Viz:

Customs - - - -	$17,589,761 94
Public lands, exclusive of Mississippi stock - - - -	1,803,581 54
Dividends on stock in the Bank of the United States - -	297,500 00
Arrears of internal duties and direct tax, and incidental receipts, and repayments under act of May 1, 1820 - -	541,584 46

Making, with the balance in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1822, of 1,681,592 24

An aggregate of - - - - $21,914 020 18

The expenditures during the year 1822, amounted to - - - - 17,676,592 63
Viz:

Civil, diplomatic, and miscellaneous - -	$1,967,996 24
Military service, including fortifications, ordnance, Indian department, revolutionary and military pensions, arming the militia, and arrearages prior to the 1st of January, 1817 - - - -	5,635,188 29

Naval service, including the gradual increase of the navy	2,224,458 98
Public debt - - -	7,848,949 12

Leaving a balance in the Treasury, on the 1st of January, 1823, of - 4,237,427 55

The actual receipts into the Treasury during the three first quarters of the year 1823, are estimated to have amounted to - - - $16,174,035 26
Viz:

JANUARY, 1824.

Report on the Finances.

H. OF R.

Customs - - -	$15,019,392 74
Public lands, exclusive of Mississippi stock - - -	657,505 73
Dividends on stock in the Bank of the United States - -	350,000 00
Arrears of internal duties and direct tax, and incidental receipts - - -	102,726 15
Repayment of advances made in the War Department, for services or supplies, prior to 1st July, 1816 - - -	44,410 64
The actual receipts into the Treasury, during the fourth quarter, are estimated at - - -	4,270,000 00
Making the total estimated receipts into the Treasury during the year 1823 - - -	$20,444,035 26
And, with the balance in the Treasury, on the 1st January, 1823, forming an aggregate of - -	$24,681,462 81
The expenditures during the three first quarters of the year 1823, are estimated to have amounted to - - -	$11,422,847 30
Viz:
Civil, diplomatic, and miscellaneous - -	1,510,735 14
Military service, including fortifications, ordnance, Indian department, revolutionary and military pensions, arming the militia, and arrearages prior to the 1st of January, 1817 - - -	4,383,715 62
Naval service, including the gradual increase of the navy	1,776,989 37
Public debt - - -	3,751,407 17
The expenditures during the fourth quarter, are estimated at - - -	3,894,559 74
Viz:
Civil, diplomatic, and miscellaneous - -	489,704 11
Military service, including fortifications, ordnance, Indian department, revolutionary and military pensions, arming the militia, and arrearages prior to the 1st January, 1817	899,449 93

Naval service, including the gradual increase of the navy	726,776 46
Public debt - - -	1,778,629 24
Making the total estimated expenditure of the year 1823 - - -	$15,317,407 04

And leaving in the Treasury, on the 1st January 1824, an estimated balance of - - -	$9,364,055 77
---	----------------

After deducting from this sum certain balances of appropriations, amounting to $2,897,086 47, which are necessary to effect the objects for which they were severally made, or have been deducted from the estimates for the service of the ensuing year, a balance of $6,466,969 30 remains; which, with the receipts into the Treasury during the year 1824, constitutes the means for defraying the current service of that year.

2.—Of the Public Debt.

The funded debt, which was contracted before the year 1812, and which was unredeemed on the 1st day of October, 1822, amounted to - - $17,189,852 60

And that which was contracted subsequently to the 1st of January, 1812, and was unredeemed on the 1st of October, 1822, amounted to - - 75,852,848 58

Making the total amount of funded debt, unredeemed on the 1st of October, 1822 - - - $93,042,701 18

In the fourth quarter of that year, there was paid the sum of - - 2,265,673 32

Viz:

Reboursement of six per cent. deferred stock	$265,673 32
Redemption of six per cent. stock, of 1820 - - -	2,000,000 00
Reducing the funded debt, on the 1st of January, 1823, to - -	90,777,027 86
From that day to the 1st of October last, there was added to the debt—
In three per cent. stock - - -	$132 39
Treasury note six per cent. stock - -	1,561 87
Treas'y note seven per cent. stock - -	135 00
	1,829 26

Making an aggregate of - - $90,778,857 12

During the same period, there was paid, in reimbursement of the deferred six per cent. stock - - 327,022 88

Reducing the funded debt, on the 1st of October, 1823, to - - $90,451,834 24

Since that day there has been added in Treasury note six per cent. stock - - 716 75

Making an aggregate of - - $90,452,550 99

It is estimated that the reimbursement of deferred stock, in the fourth quarter of the present year, will amount to - - $274,588 85

H. OF R.

Report on the Finances.

JANUARY, 1824.

Which will reduce the funded debt, unredeemed on the 1st of January, 1824, to - - - - - $90,177,962 14

The amount of Treasury notes outstanding on the 1st of October, 1823, is estimated at - - - - - $26,122 00

And the amount of Mississippi stock unredeemed on that day at - - - - - $21,258 87

3. Of the Estimate of the Public Revenue and Expenditure for the year 1824.

It will be perceived that the actual receipts of the year 1823, agree, substantially, with the estimate presented in the last annual report. The only deficiency is in the proceeds of the public lands; and that is understood to have been the consequence of an expectation, generally entertained, that the lands which were relinquished under the act of the 2d of March, 1821, and which are supposed to present the strongest inducements to purchasers, would be brought into market early in the ensuing year; with respect to the customs, however, the anticipations that had been formed, both as to the circumstances which were calculated to have an influence upon their productiveness, and as to the results, have been completely realized. It is believed, therefore, that data founded upon the same principles as those which governed in forming the estimate for the year 1823, may be satisfactorily presented as the basis of an estimate for the year 1824. With this view, the Secretary has the honor to state:

1st. That the gross amount of duties on imports and tonnage, which accrued from the 1st of January, to the 30th of September last, inclusive, is estimated at $17,800,000; and that of the whole year at $21,000,000. Of this sum, that portion which accrued in the first half of the year, is about $1,000,000 less than that of the same period in the preceding year; and that which accrued in the three first quarters of the year, is estimated at $1,700,000 less than that of the corresponding quarters of the preceding year.

2d. That the debentures issued during the three first quarters of the year 1823, amounted to $3,412,000; which exceed the amount issued during the corresponding period of the year 1822, by $1,500,000; and the amount of debentures outstanding on the 30th of September last, and chargeable upon the revenue of 1824, was $1,405,000; which is $500,000 more than was, on the same day, in 1822, chargeable upon the revenue of 1823.

3d. That the value of domestic articles exported from the United States, in the year ending on the 30th of September last, amounted to $47,155,711; being $2,718,368 less than those exported in the year preceding; and the value of foreign articles exported in the year ending on the 30th September last, was $27,530,469; being $5,244,267, more than those exported in the preceding year.

4th. That the aggregate value of the imports into the United States, during the year ending on the 30th of September last, is estimated at $77,486,432; which is less, by $5,755,109, than those imported in the preceding year.

5th. That the amount of custom-house bonds, in suit, which on the 30th of September, 1820, was $3,130,000, was, on the same day, in the year 1822, $2,795,000, and, in the year 1823, $2,817,000; whence, it appears, that, although a reduction of $313,000 had taken place during the whole period, yet the amount in suit on the 30th of September last, was greater, by $22,000, than on the same day of the year preceding.

Upon a consideration of all these facts, and the conclusions deducible from them, the receipts from the customs, in the year 1824, may be estimated at $16,500,000.

A considerable portion of the lands relinquished under the act of the 2d of March, 1821, will be brought into market in the ensuing year; but, as it is yet uncertain to what extent this may be deemed advisable, and as the sale of these lands will probably absorb a great portion of the means of those who are prepared to make investments in the public lands, it is considered prudent not to estimate the receipts from this source of revenue at more than $1,600,000; although it is believed that they will exceed that sum.

Under these circumstances, the receipts of the year 1824 may be estimated as follows:

Customs - - - - -	$16,500,000 00
Public Lands - - - - -	1,600,000 00
Bank Dividends - - - - -	350,000 00
Incidental receipts, including arrears of internal duties and direct tax - - - - -	50,000 00
Repayments of advances made in the War Department for services or supplies prior to July 1, 1816 - - - - -	50,000 00

Making together - - - - - $18,550,000 00
To which is to be added the sum of remaining in the Treasury, after satisfying all the appropriations chargeable upon the means of 1823, which makes the entire means of the year 1824, amount to - - - - - $25,016,969 30

The expenditures of the year 1824, are estimated as follows:

Civil, Diplomatic, and Miscellaneous - - - - -	$1,814,057 23
Military service, including ordnance, fortifications, Indian department, Revolutionary and military pensions, arming the militia, and arrears prior to 1st January, 1817 - - - - -	5,122,268 15
Naval service, including the gradual increase of the Navy - - - - -	2,973,927 51
Public Debt - - - - -	5,314,000 00

Making an aggregate of - - - - - 15,224,252 89
which, being deducted from the estimated means of 1824, will leave in the Treasury, on the 1st January, 1825, after satisfying the current demands of the year 1824, a balance, estimated at - - - - - $9,792,716 41

Under the existing laws, there is no probability that any portion of the balance remaining in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1824, or of the surplus which may accrue during that year, can be applied to the discharge of the public debt, until the 1st of January, 1825. Yet it is not deemed conducive to the general prosperity of the nation, that so large an amount should be drawn from the hands of individuals and suffered to lie inactive in the vaults of the banks. On the other hand, the high rate of interest of the great amount of debt which becomes redeemable on the 1st of January, 1825, renders it inexpedient for the Government to apply to other objects any portion of the means which it may possess of making so advantageous a reimbursement. It is believed, however, that every inconvenience may be obviated, if authority be given for the purchase of the seven per cent. stock, amounting to $3,610,000, during the year 1824, at such rates as may be consistent with the public interest. As it is now certain that the Government will possess ample means to redeem that stock on the 1st of January, 1825, it is presumed that the holders will be willing to dispose of it, during the interval, at a fair price; and, as a gradual conversion of it into money, at such times, and in such portions, as would be most favorable to its investment, would be most advantageous to the moneyed transactions of the community, it is presumed that it would be most acceptable to the holders.

JANUARY, 1824.

Roads in Florida.

H. OF R.

It is, therefore, respectfully proposed, that the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund be authorized to purchase the seven per cent. stock, during the ensuing year, at the following rates above the principal sum purchased:

1. For all stock purchased before the 1st of April next, at a rate not exceeding $1 25 on every $100, in addition to the interest due on such stock on that day.

2. For all stock purchased between the 1st of April and the 1st of July next, at a rate not exceeding 75 cents on every $100, in addition to the interest due on the last mentioned day.

3. For all stock purchased between the 1st of July and the 1st of October next, at a rate not exceeding, on every $100, the amount of interest which would have accrued on the last mentioned day.

4. For all stock purchased between the 1st of October, 1824, and the 1st of January, 1825, the principal and interest due on the day of purchase.

In proposing to the consideration of Congress this application of the surplus means of the years 1823 and 1824, the probable demands upon the Government, in providing for the awards of the Commissioners under the treaty with Spain, of the 22d February, 1819, have not been overlooked. It is believed, however, that funds may be advantageously supplied for the discharge of those claims, by the issue and sale, at not less than par, of five per cent stock, redeemable in 1832; and it is respectfully proposed that authority be given for that purpose.

Of the $10,331,000 of six per cent. stock, redeemable in 1825, about $5,000,000 will probably be redeemed in that year; and there will remain unredeemed, after the application of all the means at the disposal of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, about $5,331,000. This sum, it is believed, may be readily exchanged for five per cent. stock, redeemable in 1833, and it is respectfully suggested that provision be made, by law, for such an exchange of so much of the six per cent. stock as shall not be redeemed during the year 1825.

The views which are herein presented are founded upon the idea that no extraordinary expenditure is to be incurred. If, however, it be deemed advisable to give increased extension or activity to the Navy, or to aid in objects of internal improvement, it is believed that such additional means as may be required, may be obtained by a judicious revision of the tariff. Such a measure was recommended in the last annual report, with a view both to the increase of the revenue and the simplification of its collection; and further reflection and experience have tended to strengthen the opinion then entertained, that its operation, without being onerous to the community, would be advantageous to the revenue, salutary to the commerce, and beneficial to the manufactures of the country.

All which is respectfully submitted.

WM. H. CRAWFORD.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Dec. 31, 1823.

ROADS IN FLORIDA.

The following bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole:

A Bill to authorize the laying out and opening certain Public Roads, in the Territory of Florida.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be opened, in the Territory of Florida, a public road from Pensacola and St. Augustine, commencing at Deer Point, on the Bay of Pensacola, and pursuing the Old Indian Trail to the Cowpond, on the Choctawhatchey river; thence, direct to the Natural Bridge, on the Ecanfinan river; thence, to the Ochesee Bluff, on the Appalachicola river; thence, in the most direct practicable route, to the site of Fort St. Levis; thence, as nearly as practicable, on the Old Spanish road to St. Augustine, crossing the St. John's river at Picolata; which road shall be plainly and distinctly marked, and shall be of the width of twenty-five feet.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ the troops of the United States stationed in Florida, in such manner as he may think proper, in the completion, or in assisting in the completion, of said road.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That, for defraying the expenses of opening the said road, the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be surveyed and marked out, the most direct and practicable route for a public road from Cape Sable, passing by Charlotte Harbor and the Bay of Tampa, to the point where the Suwaney river will be intersected by the road to be opened from Pensacola to St. Augustine, and to cause to be surveyed and marked out, the route for a public road, from Cape Florida to St. Augustine.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That, for defraying the expenses of the surveys aforesaid, the sum of $3,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The first section having been read—

Mr. CALL, Delegate from the Territory of Florida, advocated the measure proposed by the bill, as one imperiously demanded by the exigencies and peculiar circumstances of that country, and eminently calculated to advance its settlement and prosperity. The population of what was lately the Floridas, he said, lies at the two opposite extremities of the territory, Augustine and Pensacola; the two points to be connected by the road now proposed. The course of the road passed through a region of country till now very imperfectly known, but whose fertility was calculated to attract emigration. The late treaty, by which the whole of this country had been transferred to the jurisdiction of the United States, opens a fine field for emigrating enterprise, and, from the richness of the soil, there was little doubt but that the interior would, in a short time, become densely peopled. The road which at present connects the two points he had mentioned, takes a circuitous route of more than seven hundred miles, through parts of Georgia and Alabama; whereas, the direct course of the new road would make the distance to be travelled about three hundred and seventy-six miles. The petition on which the bill is founded, asks only for $20,000 to defray the expenses of making this road—an amount which, when the nature of the country, and the magnitude of the undertaking is taken into view, will appear to every candid person, very moderate. The estimate had been made as low as circumstances would allow, but it was hoped that, by a judicious expenditure, that amount might be rendered sufficient. Almost the whole of the very fertile tract, through which the road is proposed to pass, is in the hands of the United States' Government, as public property; few or no grants having been made of lands in the interior. The road will, therefore, be a measure of policy to the Government, from its effect on the value of its lands, as well as of great benefit to Florida.

H. OF R.

Roads in Florida.

JANUARY, 1824.

Mr. GURLEY, of Louisiana, moved to amend the bill by striking out all that part of it which provides for the employment of the United States' troops in making the road. Favorable as he was to all measures of internal improvement, and to the particular object now proposed, he was not disposed, in the accomplishment of it, to jeopardize the lives of the soldiers by employing them in the work. It was a fact well known, that the employment of the troops in works of this description, had, in many instances, proved fatal to them. He had personally witnessed this, and knew it to be true. It had for some time been the policy of the United States so to employ them, but, when this policy was extended to southern climates, the soldiers became victims of the occupation. He repeated the assurance that he was friendly to the object of the bill, and would vote for it were this feature removed.

Mr. CALL, in reply, said, he hoped the amendment would not be adopted, as it would in effect defeat the bill altogether. The gentleman from Louisiana, while desirous of exempting the troops from the labor of making the road, had proposed no substitute for them. For himself, Mr. C. said, he was as much disposed to foster the interests and preserve the life and health of our soldiery as any man, and as much opposed to setting them at a menial or degrading employment; but this was not such an employment of them, nor was it a new proposition, but on the contrary a matter of every day occurrence. The object to be accomplished was one of great importance to the United States, in a national view, and might without impropriety occupy the leisure of a small portion of her troops. As to its exposing them to disease, he had himself lived for years in Florida, had traversed it in all directions and at all seasons, was thoroughly acquainted with its climate, and he did not apprehend any such consequence as the gentleman seemed to anticipate. Besides, if the bill shall now pass, the labor will be finished before the more sickly months arrive. The road we ask for, said Mr. C., can soon be made. We do not contemplate at present any great or costly road, such as it will occupy a long period to complete; all that we ask or look for will expose the soldiers to no great amount either of labor or danger. Were it a time of war, indeed, we should not think of so employing them; but it is a season of profound peace, and no detriment can arise to the public safety or interest from doing it. In fact, the road must be made in this way, or not at all, for the country is so sparsely settled that there is not in the Territory a population, either in sufficient number, or of the proper kind, to accomplish it.

Mr. COCKE, of Tennessee, wished to know from the gentleman who objected to this employment of the troops, how they could be better employed? We have had, not long since, a sad experience to teach us that, if not employed in something that is useful, they will soon employ themselves in what is mischievous. We have got them; we have paid for them; we must feed them; and of what service are they to us if we may not employ them?

Mr. GURLEY, in reply, said, it was possible he might have been deceived in his apprehensions; he presumed the gentleman from Florida was better acquainted with the circumstances of that country than he was; and he believed they were both disposed to act on the same principle. He was persuaded, if his fears were not visionary, and danger did really exist, all the gentlemen who were friendly to the bill would be as ready as himself to avoid incurring it. Certainly, the death of our soldiers was to be deprecated. We give a bounty to get them, and when they die the Government is a loser. What he had stated as to the danger of the climate, he had advanced from experience and personal observation. He knew, and could prove, that, out of a full company recruited in Boston, in May, 1821, and employed that summer in erecting public buildings at Baton Rouge, only fifteen were left alive at the close of the season. Was it right to expose our troops to a danger of this kind? It might be very true that, if employed at all, in time of peace, they could not be better employed than in making public roads. But, was there any necessity for employing them? Because we cannot employ soldiers every day in the year in actual labor, are we to disband them? Our soldiers are the salvation of the country; to them we look when her soil is invaded or her liberty threatened. It might be that the climate of Florida was attended with no such danger as he had mentioned, though, from its situation, he should expect its climate greatly to resemble that of Louisiana. He once more avowed that he was entirely the friend of the measure; and, if no substitute for his amendment could be provided, he should be unwilling, by insisting on it, to prevent the passage of the bill. He was decidedly of opinion that no better use could be made of the public money than to apply it to roads, canals, and internal improvements. We could not leave to posterity a better inheritance.

JANUARY, 1824.

Roads in Florida.

H. OF R.

Mr. TRIMBLE, of Kentucky, said he should be sorry were the amendment to prevail. The question of employing the troops of the United States in laboring at public works, was one which had been frequently discussed upon this floor; and he believed the mind of Congress, and of the nation, was made up on its propriety. The honorable gentleman from Louisiana had spoken of the mortality attending the Southern climate. But, were Congress to relinquish the idea of employing the soldiers on this road, and to send five hundred citizens from civil life to do the work, would not they be in as great danger as the soldiers, or was it important, in the question of climate, whether a man wore a military coat or a homespun one? If the object sought was the saving of the wear and tear of human life, then it was surely humanity to employ the soldiers; for, suppose we have in Florida five hundred troops, and we send in addition five hundred citizens, then the climate makes war upon one thousand human beings instead of five hundred. He remembered, indeed, that General Wilkinson had informed the nation that a soldier is a gentleman, and must do no labor; and yet the same great General, almost in the very same paragraph, had set this gentleman to carrying a knapsack with six days' provision on his back. For himself, his judgment had always been in favor of employing the troops in making roads upon our frontier. Forts, indeed, he would not set them to build; not because it was laborious, but because forts usually were built, and could be built, both better and cheaper, by contract.

Mr. SHARPE, of New York, recurring to the statement of the gentleman from Florida, insisted on the economy of employing the troops on this object. Here was a road of 350 miles to be made, and there were already 750 troops in the territory through which the road is to pass. These troops receive, when working on roads, 10 or 15 cents per day, additional wages, (no small matter to a soldier;) was it not better to hire hands at 10 or 15 cents a day than to send to the North for workmen, who must be paid at the rate of 75 or 100 cents?

Mr. HEMPHILL observed that our soldiery had frequently been employed in works of this description, and it was a general observation, that they were never healthier than when thus occupied. If they had experienced unusual mortality at the South, it was from the effects of the climate, not those of the moderate labor to which they were exposed. The troops now proposed to be employed were not to be sent into the climate of Florida; they were already stationed there, and it was a settled point, that the President might employ them at his discretion. The Romans always employed their soldiers on roads; this practice was common with the ancients, some of whose noblest monuments of public utility were the work of their armies. It was surely useless to keep soldiers in idleness, when useful and healthful employment could be found for them.

Mr. SANDFORD, of Tennessee, suggested that the fears of the gentleman from Louisiana might be obviated, and the general measure not prevented, if he modified his amendment, so as to confine the employment of the troops to certain months of the year, so as to avoid the sickly season.

Mr. GURLEY expressed himself willing to accept of this suggestion; but

Mr. SHARPE thought it was unnecessary, as it was discretionary with the President to employ them at such times as he thought expedient.

Mr. COCKE agreed in this opinion. We ought certainly to place some confidence in the Executive, who would not, he trusted, employ the troops of the United States in any manner that was calculated to destroy them. He could not help adding, he said, that this was the first time in his life he had heard the idea advanced that labor was worse than idleness for the preservation of health.

Mr. HENRY, of Kentucky, said, that the troops in Florida were stationed, and would be kept in that country to maintain our possession of it; no new destination of troops, therefore, was contemplated by the bill. Both the points intended to be connected by the proposed road were military stations. They were far apart, and in case one of them should be attacked, it was fit that there should be a direct and speedy communication between them. The power to employ the troops is discretionary, and in whose hands, asked Mr. H., is it reposed? In the hands of the Commander-in-chief of the Army. If the President of the United States, in the exercise of his sagacity and vigilance, should perceive danger to arise from such employment of the soldiers, he has it in his power, and doubtless will have it in his wish, to avoid that danger. But the danger is visionary. Would not the soldier himself, asked Mr. H., prefer employment to the dull monotony of garrison duty—to the eternal recurrence of the same scene in the same place? The fears expressed on this subject contradicted all theory and all experience; inaction has ever been found to produce both moral and physical maladies—while on the other hand, employment is healthful alike to body and mind.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. GURLEY, to strike out the second section of the bill, it was decided in the negative by a large majority.

After some further conversation on the details of the bill, it was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time on Monday.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the bill for the relief of Samuel Wharton, assistant marshal to take the census of manufactures in South Carolina in 1810.

H. OF R.

Costs in Patent Cases.

JANUARY, 1824.

The bill was reported without amendment, and ordered to a third reading; when the House adjourned to Monday.

MONDAY, January 5.

Mr. CAMBRELENG presented a memorial of the merchants, traders, and other citizens of the city of New York, praying that a duty of ten per centum may be imposed on sales at auction, excepting the effects of bankrupts, of deceased persons, goods sold for the benefit of underwriters, shipping, and real estate.

Mr. TOP presented a memorial signed by sundry members of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania.

Messrs. TOP, MILLER, and BRECK, also presented memorials of sundry inhabitants of the city and county of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, respectively praying that efficient measures may be taken for the security and protection of the manufacturing interest of the country.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented a memorial of sundry inhabitants of the city of Philadelphia, praying that additional duties may be imposed on iron and iron-castings which may hereafter be imported into the United States.

Mr. BRECK presented a memorial of Kreymsborg and Hagedom, quill manufacturers in the city of Philadelphia, praying that so much of the acts imposing duties on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, as imposes a duty on raw quills, may be repealed.

Ordered, That the said memorials be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. WEBSTER presented a memorial signed by a committee on behalf of the inhabitants of the city of Boston, and its vicinity, praying that the situation of the Greeks, now engaged in arms in rescuing their oppressed country and brethren from Turkish bondage, may engage the early and favorable attention of Congress; which memorial was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MERCER presented a memorial and petition of sundry merchants and underwriters of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia, praying for the interposition of Congress in procuring redress for spoliations committed on their lawful commerce on the high seas, by French cruisers, between the years 1793 and 1800.

Mr. BLAIR presented a memorial of the ninth convention of the Manumission Society of Tennessee, praying Congress to adopt measures for the prevention of slavery in future in any State where it is not now allowed by law, as, also, for its proscription in States hereafter to be formed and admitted into the Union.

Ordered, That the said memorials be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRECK presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce, in the city of Philadelphia, praying that an act may be passed prescribing an uniform system of bankruptcy for the United States; which memorial was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims, made a report on the petition of Mary James, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

An act appropriating a certain sum of money to Benjamin Huffman, of the State of Indiana, was read the third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

The engrossed bill to authorize the laying out and opening of certain public lands in the Territory of Florida, was read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

The engrossed bill for the relief of Samuel Wharton was read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence.

[This bill gave rise to some debate, which turned on the construction of the bond given by marshals employed to take the census, and on the question, whether the United States are bound for the pay of their deputies. (The person named in the bill being such deputy, and his principal having failed.) Mr. ISACKS of Tennessee, Mr. WHITLEY of Ohio, Mr. MCCOY, and Mr. TUCKER of South Carolina, took part in the discussion.]

PENELOPE DENNY.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TAYLOR in the chair, on the bill for the support of Penelope Denny, mother of James Denny, late a quarter gunner in the service of the United States.

The bill gave rise to some conversation between Mr. CAMBRELENG and Mr. FULLER, of Mississippi, in which, also, Mr. HAMILTON took part.

Mr. CAMBRELENG wished that the support of Mrs. Denny should be drawn from the navy pension fund. Mr. FULLER objected to this as being not within the words of the law creating that fund, which confined it to the widows and children of officers and marines, but did not extend to their other relatives. Mr. HAMILTON wished the subject referred for more mature consideration when, on motion of Mr. CAMBRELENG, the consideration of the bill was postponed.

COSTS IN PATENT CASES.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was recommitted a bill concerning costs in certain cases, reported the same, with the amendment directed by the instructions of the House, viz: the substitution of one hundred dollars in place of thirty dollars, as the minimum of damages awarded by a jury, on which costs should be allowed.

The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading as amended—

Mr. WEBSTER said, that, on the introduction of this bill to the House, a few days ago, he had stated the reason for proposing this bill, to be, that though the law limited the recovery of costs, in the courts of the United States, in general cases, to suits involving an amount not less than five hundred dollars, there was a propriety of a reduction of the minimum in the case of suits by patentees, because it was supposed to be matter of necessity for the patentee to sue in the Federal courts. An honorable member had, on a former occasion, suggested that the State courts have jurisdiction in cases of this description; but, Mr. W. said, if the honorable member would refer to the law, he would see that the act of Congress which creates the right prescribes the remedy, and provides that the patentee may sue for it in the circuit courts of the United States, and under that phraseology it was presumed that he could not sue elsewhere than in those courts.

JANUARY, 1824.

Costs in Patent Cases.

H. of R.

Mr. BUCHANAN had objections to the whole bill. What, asked he, is the law in the case of patentees as it now stands? A most extraordinary distinction over other clients is made in their favor, by granting them judgment for three times the amount of damages awarded by a jury. And what does the bill, now before the House, propose to do in favor of those favored individuals? To superadd costs to that treble verdict. He would ask, whether such a measure is right; whether it is politic; whether it is just? He thought it would be neither. He thought it far better to let the law remain as it now stands. What had been the history of this country on the subject of patent rights? It was known to all, that the privilege granted by the patent law, had been extensively diffused through the Union. The number of patents actually issued was very great; the number pretended to be enjoyed was greater still. Impositions were multiplied. In some districts of the Union very large amounts of money had been collected from such as were afraid of the expense of a law suit, by persons claiming to have a patent for the use or manufacture of certain articles; and, after they had gone through a whole region, thus practising on the fears or ignorance of the inhabitants, it turned out, when at last some one had hardihood enough to contest their claim, that they had no right at all. This was especially the case in those States which were of extensive size, and the distance from the circuit court occasioned formidable expense in resorting to trial. The claimant brings a patent in his hand, and thus has prima facie evidence of the validity of his right; he asks, perhaps, but eight or ten dollars for the article; who would not rather pay that sum than run the risk of travelling one or two hundred miles, to the circuit court, taking witnesses with him, at the risk, if he fails, of having treble damages to pay, and, if this bill passes, costs to boot? He could scarce conceive of a measure better calculated to enable designing men to roam at large and prey upon the community. He thought, for his part, that the law was already hard enough. It gave already enormous advantages to the patentee over his opponent; and, if costs were to be superadded, it destroyed all prospect of successful contest. Costs, it must be remembered, are, in their nature, very indeterminate; their amount might increase to such a sum as would ruin a man. To be sure, the amendment now reported makes the bill better, so far as it goes; but, even under the bill, as amended, if a patentee does but obtain a verdict for thirty-four dollars, he gets his costs also allowed him, because treble the verdict runs over one hundred dollars, and brings him within the provisions of the bill. Is it not proper, asked Mr. B., that the pretended patentee shall first be made to establish his right before his opponent is threatened with treble damages and costs? He thought the law should at least be left unaltered; for himself, he felt more disposed to curtail than to extend it.

Mr. LIVERMORE said, that, at first, he had viewed the object and provisions of the present bill as proper and expedient; but, on further reflection, he had seen reason to alter that opinion. He thought, however, that the fault of the system did not lie so much in that feature of it which allowed costs where damages over one hundred dollars were obtained, but in that which previously allowed the verdict of the jury to be treble. Why should not suitors under the patent law be placed on the same footing with other suitors? The alteration he wished to prevail was to repeal the treble damages and allow costs in all cases. But if it should be deemed proper to alter that provision, then he thought that costs should be given, rather where the amount was under one hundred dollars than over that sum. If a verdict was obtained for ten dollars and treble, the additional twenty dollars was not likely to be enough to cover the costs. He wished to see the whole system placed under the Committee on the Judiciary to be remodelled; he would also give the State courts concurrent jurisdiction with those of the United States, in cases under the patent law.

Mr. WEBSTER, in reply to Mr. BUCHANAN, said, that he felt no particular anxiety on the subject of this bill; but, having charge of the bill, it seemed proper of him to say something in its defence. The House would recollect, he said, that this whole case of patents is taken, by the law, out of the hands of the State courts, the jurisdiction over it being exclusively reserved to the courts of the United States. The power of legislating on this subject is taken from the States by the Constitution of the United States. And, at this time of day, and before this Assembly, Mr. W. said he need not argue that the right of the inventor is a high property; it is the fruit of his mind—it belongs to him more than any other property—he does not inherit it—he takes it by no man's gift—it peculiarly belongs to him, and he ought to be protected in the enjoyment of it. Precisely as the arts advance, Mr. W. went on to say, does property of this description become valuable; where the nicest machinery is in operation, it is there that the improvements of inventors are in the highest estimation—and with regard to those branches of industry which have been most successful in this country, they are more indebted to the ingenuity of inventors—to the power of mind in the improvement of machinery, than to another species of aid which they have received from time to time. It is to encourage these inventions that our patent laws are designed. Is it any answer to this argument in their favor, that impositions are sometimes practised under cover of these laws? Is it not so with every thing else? With regard to land, for example—are there not many persons pretending to have titles to land who really have no title? Are there not as many speculations in landed property as in the property of mind? And shall a man not recover his right to land because the world is full of pretensions of right to land where no right exists? Surely not. It was said by an honorable member from the West the other day, that the people in his part of the country did not know that there was such a thing as a patent office in the country, or such a clause in the Constitution as that which relates to patent rights. Mr. W. said, he did not know that on this account the House should accommodate its legislation precisely to that state of information. The error was not in the Constitution or the patent laws, but in the want of knowledge among the people, and could only be corrected by its diffusion. In restricting the patentee to the recovery of mere judicial damages, Mr. W. continued, justice was not done to him. He cannot sue for all his right at once, because the violations by which he is deprived of it are numerous. Suppose you were to compel a man, in suing for land, to sue for it acre by acre—he might get his land, indeed, but he would be ruined by the process of recovery. It was because the particular injury in the case of the violation of a patent right was small, and the expense of redressing it great, that the provision of this bill appeared to be expedient. A redress of the actual injury was not sufficient in this class of cases—if the penalty for the violation was not sufficient to act in terrorem, it was nothing. Do not all penal statutes, Mr. W. asked, go on the ground, that damages are not only to be given to indemnify a sufferer in a particular case, but to such an amount as to deter others from doing the like? The argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, besides, went too far. If the damages are awarded at five hundred dollars, as the law now stands, costs are allowed; whilst, if the damages be but ten dollars, they are not allowed. What justice was there in this? Where an action is brought to recover damages for the use of an invention or improvement in machinery, the common rule is, to settle the amount of damages at the sale price of the article; and one of the injurious consequences to defendants themselves, from the present state of the law, is, that the juries give as much damages as will carry the costs. He could assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whatever might be said in other parts of the country, there was no right which an independent jury of the part of the country in which he resided would protect with more certainty or vigilance, than the patent right. In a clear case, where the intention to deprive the inventor of the benefit of his patent was obvious, the jury would, in almost any case, give damages to the full amount of five hundred dollars. This bill, therefore, would, in this respect, be beneficial to the defendants themselves. On the part of patentees, there were so many things to be proved—for instance, that the invention is new, that it is useful, that the specification is accurate, &c.—so much nicety was required, as to throw sufficient obstacles in his way. The right of the patentee, Mr. W. said, was one which the Constitution of the United States had authorized and enjoined upon Congress to protect; the party injured has no security or resort elsewhere, but to the courts of the United States; and if it was reasonable that in such case he should be entitled to recover costs where the damages amount to one hundred dollars, then this bill ought to pass; if not, it ought not to pass.

Mr. BUCHANAN, in reply, observed, that no one could be more disposed to protect the just rights of patentees than he was; nor could any person concur more heartily than he did in the sentiments of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts respecting the property which an inventor has in that which is the product of his own genius; yet, he held it to be a principle in legislation, while guarding the rights of one individual, not to forget or to impair those of the rest of the community. A wise legislator was bound to give equal protection to the rights of all. Ever since the passage of the patent law under the Constitution, the courts had been open to patentees, and the burden of proof had always been cast on the violator of his patent. He must prove that his act was no violation of the patent, or that the patent was in itself invalid. This operated, at least in that part of the Union which he had the honor to represent, as a great hardship; yet it had been cheerfully submitted to, and the mere production of the patent was allowed to be presumptive evidence in favor of the patentee. But the law went farther; it not only threw the burden of proof on the alleged violator, but it tripled all damages against him. And now it was proposed to go farther still, and to allow all costs in the bargain, wherever these damages should, when tripled, amount to $100. Had he rightly heard and understood the gentleman from Massachusetts? Did he say that, in that part of the Union, a jury would always give a verdict of $500? If such were the fact, he did not wonder that the voice of the community was never heard against the provisions of the law. Who would not rather pay $10 than run the risk of a verdict of $500, to be tripled, with costs? No wonder there was a deep silence. The act, as amended by this bill, placed the community at the mercy of patentees. To oblige a man to go two or three hundred miles to court, then oblige him to prove the patent false, and, if he fails, to make him pay triple damages, and costs of suit, is to place an array of obstacles in the way that must, in most cases, effectually prevent the validity of patents from being ever contested. Such ought not to be the practical operation of law on this subject. If the law is left as it now stands, will the patentee suffer any injury? None at all. Suppose his patent is a good and valid one, and suppose he has to sue in order to establish that fact, will not such a suit be, in effect, a benefit? Can he not thenceforth exhibit with his patent the verdict that has confirmed it? But, if this bill becomes a law, it will go forth throughout the country to let loose unprincipled pretenders to prowl upon the community. He was very sorry it had been his lot to differ in opinion from the honorable member from Massachusetts, for whose opinions no man cherished a more profound respect; but he had been reluctantly urged by a sense of duty to oppose a bill which he conceived to be fraught with injury.

JANUARY, 1824.

Road from Memphis to Little Rock.

H. OF R.

Mr. CLARKE, of New York, then moved

"That the bill, with the amendment, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire into the expediency of repealing so much of the law upon the subject of the violation of patents, as provides for the recovery of triple damages in suits brought by patentees for such violation, and that where judgment shall pass for defendant, or the plaintiff become non-suit, or suffer discontinuance, the defendant shall recover double costs."

The motion was agreed to, and the bill recommitted accordingly.

ROAD FROM MEMPHIS TO LITTLE ROCK.

The engrossed bill to provide for surveying and making a road from Memphis, in Tennessee, to Little Rock, in the Territory of Arkansas, was read a third time.

Mr. BASSETT rose and said, that, as several bills on this subject were before the House, he wished that opportunity might be afforded, to those who have Constitutional objections to acting on the subject at all, to discuss the general principle before going into the details. This was more widely involved in the general bill which had been reported for estimates and surveys, &c.; and, in order to await a decision on that bill, he moved to lay this bill on the table, with an intention that it should not be called up until after the general bill should be acted upon.

This motion was negatived—ayes 76.

Mr. FLOYD, of Virginia, rose and inquired whether any part of this road was to pass through the State of Tennessee, or whether the whole of it lay exclusively in Arkansas? His vote would entirely depend upon the answer to this question. [After it was answered, that no part of this road would pass through the State of Tennessee, Mr. F. said he had then no objection to the bill.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Tennessee, advocated the bill, as it would be a saving of more than four or five hundred miles to emigrants, in reaching the lands of that Territory, and thus facilitate greatly the settlement of the public lands. It was no new precedent, but had frequently been done for Territories less insulated than Arkansas.

Mr. CONWAY stated the facts of the case. Memphis is situated on the East bank of Mississippi river, in the Southwest corner of the State of Tennessee, at the point on the river commonly denominated the Lower Chickasaw Bluffs. No part of the road, therefore, could go through Tennessee unless it was made purposely retrograde to effect that object. To show that the present was no novel application to Congress, Mr. C. referred to a series of acts making appropriations for similar objects. In 1806, $6,400 was granted for a road from the frontier of Georgia toward New Orleans, in the 31st degree of north latitude; $6,000 was granted the same year for a road from the Mississippi to the Ohio; $6,000 for another road from Nashville to Natchez.

In 1811, $6,000 was appropriated for two roads to the south of Lake Erie. In 1816, $8,000 was given for a road from Shawnee Town, on the Ohio, to Kaskaskia.

$10,000 had been granted, in 1816, to open a road from Fort Hawkins, in Georgia, to Fort Stoddard, in Alabama, and another from Columbia, Tennessee, to Madisonville, in Louisiana.

He enumerated also several grants of $4,000 and $5,000, for the repair of roads in several parts of the frontier. He was far from complaining of this liberality to others—all he asked was a proper participation by the Territory he represented. That Territory was insulated in its situation; with a population of but 50,000 white inhabitants, it contained from 40,000 to 50,000 Indians. From various indications of uneasiness among the latter, there was a general anticipation of another Indian war, twelve or eighteen months hence, possibly sooner. Without such a road, it would be impossible to transport troops and munitions of war into that Territory to any effect. What they asked for was a military and post road. The United States owned within that Territory more than fifteen millions of acres of land, which could not come to a market for want of a road to get to it. He had, besides, been informed, both by the Secretary of War and Quartermaster General, that the delay of mails to and from the Territory was so great that no returns had been received in proper time, if at all; the proposed road would remove this evil, and facilitate the communication with Government.

Mr. ISACKS, of Tennessee, advocated the bill at considerable length, dwelling on the facilities it would furnish to emigration, and to the protection of the Territory—on the importance of the Territory, as a part of our frontier toward Texas, and the policy of obtaining for it a substantial and speedy population.

Mr. CONWAY, perceiving that some members seemed to feel hesitation respecting the bill, as proposing a road which began its course in Tennessee, moved to recommit it, with instructions so to amend the bill, as to provide for the road's commencing within the Territory of Arkansas, at a point on the west bank of the Mississippi, opposite to Memphis.

Mr. TRIMBLE thought that there was no necessity for this, if a better road, and cheaper, might be obtained by passing for a few miles within the State of Tennessee. While up, he would remark, that many of the inhabitants of the Territory of Arkansas came within our jurisdiction solely by the treaty which ceded Louisiana to the United States; these had certainly a strong claim on us for protection. They were exposed to peculiar danger from the great accumulation of Indians within that Territory since it became United States property, which was produced by the wise policy pursued by our Government in other parts of the frontier in separating the tribes from each other. In Arkansas they were now in a measure concentrated, and being withal much dissatisfied, there was some prospect of war. 5,000 Cherokees are to be added to their numbers in the Spring. Should a war break out, the necessity for the road was manifest. Mr. T. was decidedly friendly to the bill.

H. OF R.

Memorial of D. W. Coxe.

JANUARY, 1824.

Some further conversation took place, when the bill was recommitted.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 6.

A Message from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, received yesterday, was read as follows: To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 18th of December last, requesting copies of contracts for cannon, cannon shot, muskets, and other small arms, which have been entered into since the 1st of January, 1820, and for other detailed information therein specified, I herewith transmit a report, with accompanying documents, from the Department of War.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, January 5, 1824.

The Message and accompanying documents were laid on the table.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom has been referred sundry memorials upon the subject, reported a bill to alter the judicial districts of Pennsylvania, and for other purposes; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NEWTON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of Isaac Collyer and others; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, to which was recommitted the bill to authorize the surveying and making a road from Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, to Little Rock, in the Territory of Arkansas, reported the same with an amendment, which was agreed to by the House, and the bill was ordered to be re-engrossed, and read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. MERCER, from the committee upon the subject of the proposed canal to unite the waters of the Chesapeake bay with those of the river Ohio, to which was referred the letter of William H. Jones, accompanied by a copy of Shriver's map of the country through which the said canal is proposed to pass, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to provide such charts, maps, and other furniture, for the several committees of the House, under the instruction of the Speaker, as may be, in his judgment, calculated to facilitate the performance of their respective duties.

The resolution was agreed to by the House.

On motion of Mr. J. S. BARBOUR, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were instructed to inquire into the expediency of changing by law the route of the main western mail from Staunton, in Virginia, to the city of Washington; and that the said committee inquire if it be not practicable to conduct the said mail by a shorter and better route than that which is now pursued.

Mr. BRENT moved that the House do come to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the report of the land commissioners in Louisiana, together with all the evidence, papers, and documents, on file in this House, relative to the claim of the representatives of the Marquis de Maison Rouge to a tract of land in Ouachita, in Louisiana, containing thirty square leagues, or upwards, be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, with instructions to report thereon, with a view to the final disposal of the same.

The resolution, after some debate, was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. COOK, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of altering the time of holding the terms of the district court of Illinois.

On motion of Mr. SLOANE, it was Resolved, That Parmenio Adams, who contests the election of Isaac Wilson, returned a member of this House, be permitted to appear within the bar, and be heard in support of his petition, during the discussion of the report of the Committee of Elections on said petition.

On motion of Mr. COBB, the Committee on Indian Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing an act, entitled "An act making provision for the civilization of the Indian tribes adjoining the frontier settlements," passed on the 3d day of March, 1819.

On motion of Mr. PRINCE, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting the right of pre-emption to one quarter section of land in the county of Parke, in the State of Indiana, upon which to locate the seat of justice for said county: provided, the same shall be selected previous to the public lands in said county being offered for sale.

The House then passed to the order of the day, which was the unfinished business of yesterday, and, after some observations of Mr. CAMBRELENG, the Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of Penelope Denny, had leave to sit again.

MEMORIAL OF D. W. COXE.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on Land Claims, stated he was instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to ask that they be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Daniel W. Coxe, for a confirmation of a grant of land to the Marquis de Maison Rouge, and the accompanying documents. As a reason for making this request, he said, several members, of whom he was one, had received several letters from Mr. Coxe, intimating he had not requested any person to bring his claim before Congress at this session; that he had withdrawn his vouchers; had sought redress in the courts of Louisiana, and that he did not wish any step to be taken by Congress in relation to his claim.

Mr. C. said among the cases referred to the committee, there was a memorial of Mr. Coxe, dated in 1820; that there was on file no proof to support his claim; but much intended to invalidate it. He hoped the committee would be discharged.

JANUARY, 1824.

New York Contested Election.

H. OF R.

Mr. BRENT opposed this request, and contended that, as to this claim, it was the duty of this House to decide upon its validity. It had been reported on four years ago, and the final decision had been delayed by Mr. Coxe all that time; the result of which was, that the lands were held back from market, to the great injury both of Louisiana and the United States. He now withdraws his papers; but this should not prevent an investigation. Did he believe there was a shadow of equity in the claim, Mr. B. would act otherwise; but knowing, as he did, that the claim was illegal, and believing it to be a most iniquitous one, he wished that a decision of the committee might be had, to put an end to it. He admitted, as a general position, that every petitioner has a right to withdraw his petition; but there were exceptions to the rule.

Mr. J. T. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, urged the propriety of discharging the committee from the consideration of this claim, Mr. Coxe having resorted to the courts of law for a decision of it, and withdrawn it from this House, &c.

The question being taken, the committee was discharged, and the memorial was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. SLOANE moved to postpone all the orders of the day previous to the report of the Committee of Elections, on the claim of Parmenio Adams to the seat, in this House, of Isaac Wilson. Agreed to; and the House went into Committee of the Whole, on that report.

[The facts of this contested election, condensed from a pretty long report of the Committee on Elections, are as follows: In the county of Genesee, forming the 29th Congressional district of the State of New York, Isaac Wilson and Parmenio Adams were opposing candidates for Congress. The former was returned as having received 2,093 votes, whilst Parmenio Adams had 2,077 votes. The petitioner, Mr. Adams, claims the seat to which Mr. Wilson was returned, on the ground that, in the town of China, 67 votes were returned for the sitting member, whereas the true number given in for him was 45 votes. The sitting member as a set-off for this error (which is fully made out) offers proof of 12 votes which either the petitioner received more than he was entitled to, or the returned member was not allowed credit for on his side. The Committee of Elections report that five votes should be deducted for error from the number of votes returned for the petitioner from the town of Attica. This deduction, however, still leaves him a majority, after the error on the opposite side is deducted, of one vote over the sitting member. The committee therefore recommend to the House, to reject Isaac Wilson, and admit Parmenio Adams to a seat in the House as the Representative from the 29th district before mentioned.]

The report of the committee, together with the whole of the testimony, was read, and the question being on concurring with the first resolution of the committee, viz: "That Isaac Wilson is not entitled to a seat in this House"—

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, moved, as an amendment, that neither P. Adams nor Isaac Wilson is entitled to a seat in this House. [On this and the subsequent questions on the same general subject a debate arose, which occupied the House during the whole day. This amendment was subsequently withdrawn, and the question being taken on the first resolution, as reported by the Committee of Elections, was carried in the affirmative—yeas 139.

The question being on the second resolution, viz: "That Parmenio Adams is entitled to a seat in this House."

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, moved to amend the resolution by inserting the word "not."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, moved, that the Committee rise and report progress, which was lost. Ayes 68, noes 100.

The question being taken on the amendment, (which declares that Parmenio Adams is not entitled to a seat,) it was decided in the negative. Ayes 70, noes 101.

The question then recurring on agreeing to the second resolution, as reported by the Committee of Elections, it passed in the affirmative.

On which the Committee of the Whole rose and reported accordingly.

In the House—Mr. COCKE moved to lay the report of the Committee of the Whole on the table; and, the question being taken, it was decided in the negative.

The first resolution was concurred in by the House.

The question being on the second resolution,

Mr. WHITE moved to amend the report, by striking out all that follows the word "resolved," and substituting the following:

"That, in the case of the contested election of Isaac Wilson, by Parmenio Adams, it is doubtful, from the evidence, who ought to have been returned the member to the present Congress, from the 29th Congressional district in the State of New York; and, believing that no man ought to exercise the high and honorable station of Representative of the people, by virtue of a vote short of a clear majority of those given at the polls; and believing, also, that the people of that district are competent, and ought, of right, to judge of and correct the return—

"Therefore, resolved, That the seat of Isaac Wilson, the member returned from the 29th Congressional district, is vacant.

"Resolved, That a writ of election do forthwith issue to supply the aforesaid vacancy, occasioned by the improper return of Isaac Wilson to a seat in this House."

The question being taken on this amendment, it was decided in the negative.

Mr. LITTLE then moved to amend the second resolution, by inserting the word "not." Before the question was taken,

Mr. FOOT moved to postpone the decision till to-morrow, to allow time for further reflection; which was carried, ayes 92, noes 87. And the House adjourned.

H. OF R.

New York Contested Election.

JANUARY, 1824.

WEDNESDAY, January 7.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications:

I. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a list of the names of persons to whom patents have been issued for any new or useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any improvement thereon, during the last year; which letter and list were ordered to lie on the table.

II. A letter from the Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the accounts which have remained unsettled, or on which balances appear to have been due more than three years, prior to the 30th of September last, on the books of the Second Auditor of the Treasury; which letter and statement were ordered to lie on the table.

III. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting an abstract exhibiting the expenditures under the head of contingent expenses, for the year ending on the 30th of September last; which letter and abstract were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, made unfavorable reports on the cases of John Stealy, Elisha Wade, and John and George Salady; which reports were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Alvin Bronson; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. PHILIP P. BARBOUR, the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, for payment of the legal representatives of Abner Porter, deceased, for a quantity of corn furnished by said Porter to the continental station at the Albemarle barracks, in Virginia, during the Revolutionary war.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act to authorize the surveying and making a road from a point opposite the town of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, to Little Rock, in the Territory of Arkansas," was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, laid the following resolution on the table, for consideration on tomorrow, viz:

Resolved, That the following amendment be made to the 13th standing rule of this House: line 2, after the word "Department," insert "the Attorney General;" and, in the 13th line, after the same word, insert "or may have held the office of District Attorney of the United States."

CONTRACTS FOR CANNON, &c.

Mr. COCKE moved to take up the report of the Secretary of War, (enclosed in the President's Message of yesterday,) respecting certain contracts for cannon, cannon shot, and small arms, and refer it to a select committee.

Mr. LATHROP moved that the report be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKE said it had been the universal practice of the House, where documents were obtained from the Departments by special calls of the House, to allow the mover of the call to have the documents submitted to a select committee. The Committee on Military Affairs were already crowded with business, to which, if they suitably attended, (and he did not doubt they would do so,) their hands would be full. He hoped that committee would make a general and timeous report on all the matters before them, so that the House might have opportunity to consider it some time before the appropriation bill at the close of the session was passed. He asked it, as a courtesy, that the gentleman would withdraw his motion.

Mr. LATHROP consented to withdraw it accordingly, and the documents were referred, as moved by Mr. COCKE, to a select committee; and Messrs. COCKE, SMYTH, STERLING, MARVIN, BUCHANAN, BASSETT, and McLEAN, of Ohio, were appointed the said select committee.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

The House took up the unfinished business of yesterday, which was the motion of Mr. LITTLE to insert the word "not" in the second resolution reported by the Committee of Elections, so as to make it read, "that Parmenio Adams is 'not' entitled to a seat in this House."

The debate on this subject was continued till nearly three o'clock, when, the question being taken on the amendment, it was decided in the negative—ayes 85, noes 112.

The question then recurring on agreeing with the report of the committee, (which admits Mr. ADAMS to a seat,) was decided in the affirmative—yeas 116, nays 85, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alexander of Tennessee, Allen of Massachusetts, Allen of Tennessee, Archer, Bailey, Baylies, P. P. Barbour, J. S. Barbour, Bartlett, Beecher, Blair, Buchanan, Burleigh, Cady, Campbell of South Carolina, Campbell of Ohio, Carter, Cassedy, Condict, Cook, Culpeper, Cushman, Cuthbert, Durfee, Dwight, Eddy, Edwards of Pennsylvania, Farrelly, Forward, Frost, Fuller, Garnett, Gatlin, Hall, Hamilton, Harvey, Hayden, Hemphill, Henry, Herrick, Herkimer, Hobart, Holcombe, Hooks, Houston, Ingham, Isacks, Jenkins, Jennings, F. Johnson, Kidder, Lathrop, Lawrence, Lee, Leftwich, Lincoln, Livermore, Locke, Long, Longfellow, McArthur, McDuffie, McKee, McLean of Ohio, Mallary, Markley, Martindale, Marvin, Mercer, Mitchell of Pennsylvania, Moore of Kentucky, Moore of Alabama, Morgan, Neale, Newton, O'Brien, Owen, Patterson of Ohio, Plumer of New Hampshire, Poinsett, Rankin, Reed, Reynolds, Rich, Rogers, Rose, Sharpe, Sloane, Arthur Smith, Standefer, Sterling, J. Stephenson, Stewart, Stoddard, Storrs, Strong, Swan, Taylor, Tod, Tomlinson, Tracy, Tucker of Virginia, Tyson, Vance of North Carolina, Vance of Ohio, Van Rensselaer, Vinton, Warfield, Webster, Whipple, Whittlesey, Williams of New York, Henry Wilson, Wilson of Ohio, Wood, and Woods.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbot, Alexander of Virginia, Allison, Ball, Barber of Connecticut, Bartley, Bassett, Bradley, Breck, Brent, Brown, Buck, Buckner, Burton, Cambreleng, Clark, Cobb, Cocke, Collins, Conner, Crafts, Crowninshield, Day, Dwinell, Eaton, Edwards of North Carolina, Ellis, Floyd, Foot of Connecticut, Foote of New York, Forsyth, Garrison,

JANUARY, 1824.

New York Contested Election.

H. OF R.

Gazlay, Gist, Govan, Gurley, Harris, Hayward, Hogeboom, Johnson of Virginia, J. T. Johnson, Kent, Kremer, Letcher, Litchfield, Little, McCoy, McKean, McKim, McLane of Delaware, Mangum, Matlack, Metcalfe, Miller, Mitchell of Maryland, Patterson of Pennsylvania, Plumer of Pennsylvania, Prince, Randolph, Richards, Ross, Saunders, Sandford, Scott, Sibley, Alexander Smyth, William Smith, Spaight, A. Stevenson, Ten Eyck, Test, Thompson of Georgia, Thompson of Kentucky, Tucker of South Carolina, Udree, Van Wyck, Wayne, Whitman, White, Wickliffe, Williams of Virginia, Williams of North Carolina, James Wilson, Wilson of South Carolina, and Wright.

And thereupon, the said PARMENIO ADAMS appeared, was qualified, and took his seat as one of the Representatives in this House for the State of New York.

[The debate in the House of Representatives on the contested election from the 29th District of the State of New York, turned in effect upon a single point, viz: whether a printed ballot, having the stroke of a pen drawn through it, should or should not be admitted as a valid vote. From the returns of the inspectors of the election, it was admitted, on all hands, that the two candidates came within a single vote of having an equal number: the same returns, or rather the certificates accompanying them, stated that one of the votes for Isaac Wilson was of the description mentioned: the printed letters were distinctly legible, but a dash with a pen was drawn across the whole name: on this account the inspectors rejected the vote, and it was not counted. The omission of this ballot, after the deduction on each side for erroneous returns, gave Mr. Adams a majority of one. The advocates of Mr. Wilson contended that, as the ballot contained no other name, and it was not to be presumed that the elector would give in a blank ballot, the mark with the pen ought to be disregarded, and the vote counted as good: for it was possible the voter might have been an old man, and did not see the line across the name, or a simple man, who, intending to vote for Mr. Wilson, had been cheated out of his vote, by having this obliterated ballot put into his hand by an advocate of the opposite candidate, &c. On the other hand, it was insisted that the inspectors were, by the laws of New York, the Constitutional judges of the genuineness or fraudulent character of the ballots; that they had decided on this ballot from ocular inspection, publicly, under oath, and with entire unanimity; and that it was no uncommon thing, in that State, to erase names printed on election tickets, and even to put ballots, entirely blank, into the ballot boxes; instances of which were quoted as having taken place in ballotings in the Legislature of New York, and also in Congress. That the voter might have been induced by a fear of offending Mr. Wilson, or some friend of his, to appear to vote for him, while the voter secretly nullified the vote by first obliterating the name. (The ballots are folded up, so as that the name is concealed.) To an objection that the voter must be out of his senses to lose a day in attending the polls merely for the sake of putting in a blank ballot, which effected nothing on either side, it was replied that many other officers besides members of Congress, were voted for at the same time, and that he might have gone to the polls to vote effectually for these, or some of them, without wishing to effect by his vote the choice of Congressman at all. The advocates of Mr. Wilson, however, denied that the instances of blank votes given in the State Legislature, or in Congress, formed a case in point; because, there, the election turning on a majority of the whole number of votes given, blank votes were counted, and therefore did, ultimately and indirectly, affect the election; but in public elections at the polls, the greater number of votes alone was considered, and a blank ballot, not being counted, effected absolutely nothing. They rejected, as derogatory to the character of an American freeman, the idea that he could be intimidated into acting the farce of depositing a blank ballot; but were answered by the fact that, in that part of the State of New York, great influence is exerted over voters by the agents of great land companies, to whom voters are indebted on account of their farms; one of these companies, (the Holland Land Company,) owns a tract which covers six entire counties, and its agent exercises a well known and powerful influence in political matters, &c.

The propriety of rejecting the erased or crossed ballot, was advocated by Mr. STORRS, Mr. MARTINDALE, Mr. BAYLIES, Mr. FARRELLY, Mr. MALLARY, and Mr. SLOANE; and opposed by Mr. TEN EYCK, Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, Mr. ELLIS, Mr. WRIGHT, and Mr. LITTLE.

Those who supported the amendment of Mr. LITTLE, which went also to exclude Mr. ADAMS from a seat in the House, were, Mr. GAZLAY, Mr. LITTLE, Mr. CLARK, Mr. CAMBERLENG, Mr. MANGUM, and Mr. HOGEBROOM. Those who opposed it were, Mr. WOOD, Mr. McDUFFIE, Mr. MALLARY, Mr. STORRS, and Mr. SLOANE. The debate covered the same ground as that of yesterday.]

The following is the substance of the remarks of Mr. STORRS, of New York:

Mr. STORRS said that, as the House acted on the subject before them rather in a judicial than legislative capacity, he begged leave to offer those considerations which had led him to concur in the report of the Committee on Elections. The only anxiety of the House must be to do justice to the parties before them on a matter of private right, for so he considered its true nature to be; and the Constitution had invested the House with the office of judges on the question. He considered himself as acting under the solemn sanctions of that character, and bound by the same integrity which should operate on a judicial tribunal in the ordinary administration of justice.

The questions, said Mr. S., for the decision of the House, were reduced to one or two propositions, capable of being easily understood, but they involved considerations extremely interesting to the State which he had the honor, with others, to represent, and deeply affecting the preservation of the purity and character of her electoral system. It appears that the majority returned for the sitting member (Mr. WILSON) was 16; but that, after allowing to the petitioner (Mr. ADAMS) 22 votes, lost in the returns by a clerical error, and to the sitting member 5 votes, to which he also is entitled for the same reason, the petitioner has a majority of one vote, unless the House should further allow, to the sitting member, as single, three double votes rejected by the inspectors as fraudulent, which would give to him a majority of two. If, however, the double votes are rejected, then the sitting member still claims that he should be allowed an erased printed ballot, found in the ballot box, in the town of Middlebury; which was rejected by the inspectors as a blank ballot. The effect of allowing this vote is to produce a tie, and involves the negative of the resolution of the Committee of Elections; which declares that Mr. ADAMS is entitled to the seat. Mr. S. said that, in his judgment, none of those votes could be justly claimed by the sitting member.

H. OF R.

New York Contested Election.

JANUARY, 1824.

By the Constitution of the United States, said Mr. S., the States are authorized to prescribe the time, places, and manner, of holding elections for Representatives to Congress. Of necessity, they had the power of prescribing such regulations as should effectually prevent the fair choice of the majority, honestly exercising their privileges, from being defeated by the practices of fraudulent voters. The mode, adopted in New York, of voting by ballot, might present intrinsic difficulties to the complete attainment of this object; but, so far as it is susceptible of being done, the Legislature has provided such safeguards as to them seemed best adapted to effect it. It is by law imperatively made the duty of inspectors to destroy such double ballots as, on a comparison with the poll lists, and from actual inspection, clearly appear to be fraudulent. In the cases now before the House, it was demonstrated by the poll lists that, counting them as folded ballots, the excess of votes was precisely in each case equal to the number rejected as fraudulent. The evidence shows that the inspectors acted in good faith, and, in his opinion, correctly. In addition to the demonstration of the fraud, by the state of the poll lists, they had the actual inspection of the ballots. The folding of these votes could, therefore, not be attributed reasonably to accident. With such evidence of their character and appearance, it would be little short of a miracle. There was no evidence to impeach the judgment of the inspectors, except what was founded on speculation. It was, indeed, within the broad range of bare possibility, that the circumstance may have been accidental; but, as the question rests upon, and must be settled by, evidence, Mr. S. considered the proof of fraud as clear and conclusive. The presiding officers acted under the sanction of an oath; the clerks of the poll lists were also sworn to the faithful performance of their duty, and a high respect should be held for the judgment of men thus discharging a public duty where the correctness of their decision was unimpeached by contrary evidence, and their motives unquestioned and unsuspected. It was altogether safer to trust the decision of such a point to the inspectors, than to draw it in question here, where, from the destruction of the poll list, and the ballots themselves, the House possessed but scanty materials for decision. He knew well that the House had always exercised a liberal discretion in correcting all errors in the returns of votes, so that the negligence or irregularities of inspectors should not defeat the actual will of the majority, when fairly expressed. He would not say, that, on a question like that now before the House, they were not constitutionally competent to act and decide; but he thought that a very clear and strong case of error should be made out to induce the House to interfere with the judgment of the inspectors. It was, however, generally safer to leave the question to the tribunal to which the law of the State had confided its decision, reserving to the House, only in extreme and clear cases, a supervisory power over their conduct.

The sitting member claims, in his argument addressed to the Committee of Elections, that, on principles of equity, these double votes should be allowed as single. Mr. S. thought that these votes could not be counted, on any principles consistent with the purity and fairness of elections. The first principle of an elective system is, that the will of the majority should govern. The elector who attempts this fraud, meditates the defeat of their will and choice, and aims at the subversion of the whole system. He deserves neither grace, favor, nor privilege, at our hands. Instead of acting in the exercise of his just rights, in the elective franchise, he treacherously uses it only as the means of destroying the rights of the whole community. He is not justly said to be in the exercise of his elective right at all. No elector can claim the exercise of this valuable Constitutional privilege, but in the manner prescribed by the Constitution and laws for the general security of all. The punishment inflicted by the loss of his votes, operates on his own part as a voluntary forfeiture of his right. He is not disfranchised by the law itself. It is the effect of his own folly, and a free renunciation of his privilege, if detected. Good order, public morals, the equal rights of all, and the nature of the privilege itself, necessarily requires its regulation. He may set at defiance the salutary restraints of the law, and surrender up, at his own criminal option, his privileges as a freeman in this case, as he may in many others; but the sacrifice of his rights is spontaneous, and he is the voluntary victim of punishment. The security of the whole requires that he should vote fairly, or not at all. To allow these votes, when detected, as single, operates as an encouragement to these practices. The only risk, in the complete success of such an iniquitous scheme, would be the bare chance of detection, and detection without forfeiture. Mr. S. remarked that the case now before the House was a most remarkable instance in which the fraud had defeated its own purpose. Had these voters honestly exercised their elective right, the sitting member, who seems to have been their favorite candidate, would have had an undoubted majority of two votes. The entire loss of their votes may defeat his election, and the result may fortunately operate as an example, perhaps of more practical value hereafter, in restraint of fraud, than the imperfect sanctions of law. Viewing the subject under the influence of the considerations which he had stated, Mr. S. said that he felt bound to vote in favor of the resolution declaring the sitting member not entitled to a seat in the House.

JANUARY, 1824.

New York Contested Election.

H. OF R.

On the question, whether the erased printed ballot should be counted to the sitting member, Mr. S. said, that one fact appeared from the documents which deservedly had great weight with him. In the town of Middlebury, where this vote was given, the sitting member received a large majority. It was a fair and just inference that the inspectors of election, whose offices are also elective, were the political friends of the candidate having so large a majority in that town. The rejection of this ballot, as a blank, may, therefore, be considered as having been decided on under circumstances peculiarly calculated to prevent injustice to the sitting member's claims. I am not, said Mr. S., disposed even to suspect that the decision of inspectors, under such circumstances, has been erroneous. Had they been friendly to his competitor, I would more liberally and strictly scrutinize their judgment. This election seems, from the result of votes, to have been warmly contested at the polls, and the decision of the board of inspectors, in the case of this obliterated ballot, was unanimous. I can assure the House that, in the elections of New York, there is an abundant scrutiny and watchfulness over the conduct of presiding officers. It is not a thing of easy accomplishment there, by a board of inspectors, even hostile to a candidate, to do him injustice, in a canvass of votes. But, when his own friends have been his judges, we should very cautiously listen to suggestions which are calculated to impeach the justice of their decision. The canvass of votes was open and public. As in all elections in the State, curiosity and anxiety attracted to the canvass, on the opening of the boxes, many of the personal and political friends of all the candidates; it is singular that, of all who probably attended this scrutiny, no one, even of all the electors present, has been found to give an opinion that this decision was erroneous. The personal inspection of this ballot was free to all, and we cannot here have the opportunity of its examination for ourselves. The intention of the person who gave it was to be inferred most accurately, indeed, solely, from its appearance, and from actual inspection.

On the question of fact, the proofs before us unanimously agree. The principal circumstance urged against the conclusion of the inspectors is, that the original print on this ballot was still legible. It was a circumstance most easily to be accounted for. The mere experiment of erasing, by a dash of the pen, any impression of the type, will show that the obliteration is not total. But the question presented for decision was, whether, under all the circumstances and the aspect of that vote, it was not manifestly the intention of the voter to treat it as a blank. There is nothing uncommon or unaccountable in the fact that blank votes are or should be given. It had repeatedly occurred in the State of New York and elsewhere, on various occasions. It might be solved by various considerations. A voter may believe that he may incur the resentment of a merciless creditor of high party feelings, if he refuses to promote his views, or that he may fall under the displeasure of a powerful political man who might exert his influence to his injury. He may honestly dislike the candidate of his own party, and conscientiously refuse to unite in his election, and feel and know that he is secure at the time in refusing by a blank ballot to sacrifice his integrity and duty to his country. He may conscientiously decline to vote for his opponent, whose political principles may be obnoxious, and may be unwilling that it should be believed that he would, by refusing to vote altogether, violate that party discipline which he may honestly think necessary to the preservation of principles. By what motives the person who gave this vote may have been actuated, it is useless to inquire and unnecessary to determine. It is his privilege, if he pleases, to exercise it in that way, that he might, without exposure or injury to himself or offence to others, adopt this mode of voting—and virtually indicate his dislike of both candidates. He may intend to reprobate the nomination of his own party—perhaps to insult the feelings of the candidate. He may even adopt it from motives of delicacy to a personal friend or neighbor who may be the candidate of his own party, whose good will he might not wish to impair by openly declining to vote at all. These, and many other solutions of his motives, may be easily imagined.

In times of high party excitement, (and the State of New York has suffered many violent political convulsions,) the ballot boxes afford perfect security from persecution and political revenge. The debtor may escape the fangs of oppression—the lowest and humblest man may fearlessly exercise his elective right—the tenantry of opulent landlords, or men of great political power, may freely and securely vote and feel that they are protected. In the State of New York this system has been deemed the wisest and best calculated for preserving the unbiassed expression of public sentiment. Mr. S. said that he felt a deep interest in its perpetuation, as affording a shield and protection against all the exertions and strength of undue influence from every source of corruption or oppression. The situation of that State is in some respects peculiar. The lands in that State are, and have been, held by large proprietors. In some parts of the State, townships and counties have been patented to individuals or companies, who might, in party times, exercise a most pernicious influence over those dependent on them. To guard against the operation of such an influence on the electors, the right of voting by ballot is the best security. As an example of the situation of a part of the Western country, Mr. S. alluded to the fact that several counties were chiefly held by a single association—the Holland Land Company. In each county this company had a land office, and the subordinate agents were scattered throughout the whole tract. The debt due to this company, from settlers, amounted to several millions. It was probably in the power of the agents, should they enforce the legal rights of the proprietors, on contracts forfeited for non-payment, to turn out of doors some thousands of families. What, said Mr. S., can so effectually protect the fair exercise of the elective franchise, under such circumstances, but the consciousness of the electors that, in voting by ballot, they may, without danger, in the worst of times, freely manifest their choice of representatives? Should such engines as the power of these proprietors, or their agents, ever be brought into activity under any other system, the free exercise of this privilege must be prostrated. The proprietors of these lands reside in Europe, and we may learn, from the melancholy state of another country in this respect, the lamentable cause which has ruined one of the fairest countries, by reason of the non-residence of large landed proprietors. If the agents of foreign proprietors should exert the influence which they possess in the State of New York, we may expect the same results in a considerable degree. Human nature, in that State, is not free from the common infirmity of man.

H. OF R.

New York Contested Election.

JANUARY, 1824.

Under the present system of voting, the population of this, and all other tracts held in the same way, is protected; and, as an advocate of a free system of voting, and a protector of the privileges of the people of the State, Mr. S. said, he felt bound to preserve, to the fullest extent, the present system—a system which, though in its nature somewhat defective in other respects, yet, in this, deemed indispensable, in that State, to secure the impartial and unbiassed expression of public opinion on public men and measures. There was, in that State, a large landed estate, held by residents in England. It was well known that charges had been made, in relation to the agency of this tract, of an undue influence in the elections. Mr. S. said, that gentlemen acquainted with the history of the political conflicts of the State, must have heard of the celebrated Nunda letter. Mr. S. said, that he had no personal knowledge of this matter; but it showed the wisdom of the system which had been adopted. He trusted that the House would aid in protecting it. The advantages of this system over others, presented a question which that State had, rightfully decided for themselves; and having adopted it, as, on the whole, best adopted to their peculiar situation, he deemed it of vital importance to the State to secure it effectually.

He meant not that it should be inferred that an undue control of elections by the large landlords was common in the State. He should not ask the House to look beyond the reach of his voice, to know that there was one even here, who spurned the undue influence of a munificent fortune—whose name was warmly cherished in the love of his tenantry, and who was best known to them in the kindest dispensations of unostentatious benevolence.

New York, said Mr. S., has been politically afflicted with evils, which showed the wisdom of her system of voting. It is well known that the power of the old Council of Appointment had operated as a dreadful engine of mischief to the independence and character of the State. The effect of that mode of appointment had been, at times, since the formation of the Government, to, virtually, concentrate the whole patronage of the State in the hands of an individual. It required no stretch of imagination to perceive the pernicious evils which such a political system naturally engendered. In practice, it had naturally tended to introduce into the State the corruption which usually accompanies the concentration of enormous patronage in the hands of a few men. The tenure of every valuable office in the State, except the judges, was at the will of the favorite leaders of the majority. These, said Mr. S., are unwelcome truths. It gave him no pleasure to state them; but they were the illustrations of evils, which had produced a lamentable effect on the purity of elections in that State. Mr. S. said, that it was unnecessary to state the effect of the political dependence which such a system had produced. The ballot boxes afforded the only check to its worst consequences. But even that remedy had scarcely been powerful enough to control the enormous strength of the State patronage. When the House considered how valuable, under all circumstances, the preservation of the system was to the fair exercise of the right of suffrage in that State, he trusted that they would be disposed to exercise a liberal discretion in the support of her regulations for the prevention of frauds, and the protection of her own voters from oppression, under any form or pretext whatever; that, in the case now before them, they would reject, as lawless, the double ballots, and refuse to allow to the sitting member the obliterated vote, a vote which probably was rejected at the canvass, with at least the silent approbation of those most directly interested in claiming its allowance.

MR. GAZLAY, of Ohio, said he rose to advocate the amendment, and to oppose the resolution. He did so, because he believed that the latter would be a violation of sound principles, and most mischievous in practice. He supposed that the committee had offered all the reasons which could well be offered in favor of the resolution, and that, if these were not sound, the resolution ought not to be adopted. He would beg leave to refer to the report of the committee for these reasons—[Mr. G. here read the report as far as it respected the erased vote.]—The committee seem to take three positions: first, that the decision of the board of inspectors ought to be binding; second, that it would be impossible to come to a deliberate conclusion without the evidence the board had; that no evidence can now be obtained. He thought this House were the Constitutional judges of the election of its members when contested, and that, to say they should be bound by any determination of a board of inspectors, would be to take away at once any power to deliberate on this or any other case of the kind. It was, perhaps, with a view to reverse decisions of such boards, when improperly made, and not to enforce them, that the Constitution vested a revising power in this House. He could never agree to the proposition that this, which is an appellate tribunal of the last resort, should be precluded by the determination of an inferior one, who have no rule which is not subjected to, and frequently countervailed by, the violent heats and political dissensions which the gentleman from New York has referred to. If we affirm their decisions to-day, we are bound to affirm them at another time.

JANUARY, 1824.

New York Contested Election.

H. OF R.

There are, in the State of New York, more than five hundred boards of inspection. If we are bound to adopt the decision of one, we are bound to adopt those of all, and this has never been the practice of this House, as he, Mr. G., understood it, but quite the contrary. He presumed the present case must be determined on the evidence, and not on the decision of the board of New York. But, in the two last propositions, we are told that it is impossible to come to a deliberate conclusion, without the evidence which the board possessed, and that this evidence we cannot now obtain; and yet, without evidence, in a case where it is said to be impossible to come to any deliberate conclusion, we are called upon, not only to deliberate, but to exercise our power in turning one member from his seat, and, not content with this, we are to take upon ourselves to determine the will of forty thousand citizens as to the admission of another. Can we, dare we, exercise such high powers, in a case where there is no evidence, and when we can come to no deliberate conclusion; for this is the language of the report. Mr. G. said, he regarded the precedent about to be established, and what after times would say of it, that we were about to make a law in a case where there was none. With this report before them, what must any future House say of the decision, if the resolution were adopted? Whatever might be the final determination of the House, he trusted this report could not be sanctioned. It would be a discredit to the annals of our legislation.

Many observations had been made by gentlemen in support of the resolution. Some had likened it to a bond with an erasure; others said it was correct to test it by the ordinary occurrences of life, as an erasure in a letter or correspondence. Mr. G. said, he did not see the parallel. In a letter or bond, if there were an erasure, the sense must be made out by the context or body of the writing. Here there was nothing to help out the sense or meaning of the party; it was a single word. But gentlemen seemed also bent on the determination of this case by legal rules, and called boldly on those holding the negative to prove what they assert. Mr. G. said he had always understood that those who maintain the affirmative must bring their proof. This rule, he said, was not only applicable to courts, but to all deliberative bodies. The vote in question was duly delivered, and duly received; it was plain and legible, and the supporters of the resolution contend that it was intended for a blank vote; and must they not prove that fact? and until it be proved, what right has this House to say it was a blank?

But, said Mr. G., what will be the consequences if this House declare that a vote, with a mark on it, shall be taken as a blank vote? We have learned of the gentleman from New York, who opened this debate, that his State is rent with violent factions, and that men, with principles and intentions not the most pure, exercise great influence at the polls. These men will find, in our decision, a powerful auxiliary to their deceitful schemes. They can, with all imaginable ease, draw a pen over all the names they oppose. It may or may not be seen; the voters are not likely to know any thing of our decision; while they know nothing of their own law, as the gentleman has demonstrated; and thus they will vote a blank ticket, and be defrauded of their elective franchise. Mr. G. said, he thought the safe rule, and the only safe one, was, to admit and count all legible votes, and that no evil consequences would flow from this rule, but such would flow from the one contended for by the supporters of the resolution as reported. And for these reasons, he should vote for the amendment. He was fully persuaded that it was best and safest, in all doubtful cases, to send the contestants back to the people, the Constitutional and most fit tribunal to decide.

Mr. CLARK, of New York, said, after such a full discussion, he was sorry to trouble the House with any further, and nothing but a sense of duty would induce him to make any remarks on a subject already exhausted by argument. He said, he had the misfortune to differ with a majority of the House on what he considered the main point in the question. He was of opinion that Mr. Wilson was entitled to his seat. He concurred with his honorable colleague in the sentiment that the House ought to consider this question in the same manner as if they were sitting as a court to decide upon the rights of two individuals. And he would ask whether any member of the House was prepared to say, absolutely, from the evidence before them, that a fraud had been committed. The question was not whether it was possible or even probable that two ballots had been put into the box by one elector, but it was, whether such a fact appeared clear and beyond any doubt. It was a well established rule, that fraud should never be presumed but upon the most conclusive and positive testimony. This testimony, in his opinion, was not of that kind. Mr. C. then adverted to the evidence, that the ballots were found in the boxes, with the edges folded out, and in such a manner as they might easily have slipped together. He said, if the number of ballots in the boxes had agreed with the number of names taken down by the clerks, no suspicion of fraud would have attached. He appealed to his colleagues, whether any thing was more common in that State than for the number of votes in the boxes to exceed the number of names taken by the clerks. The reason was obvious. In the towns there were from three to eight hundred voters, much the greater number of them voted on the third day, in the afternoon—from fifteen to twenty officers had to be voted for. These votes were put into several distinct boxes, and, in the hurry and crowd, persons very frequently voted, whose names were not taken down. For himself, Mr. C. said, he thought it much more probable that such an error was committed, than that two pieces of paper, folded as these were, could have passed through the hands of the inspectors without detection. Again, said Mr. C., the law making double ballots void, has existed, in New York, for a series of years. No law was more generally known to every citizen of that State than this. That any person, then, should put in such a vote, knowing that the very object he would seem to have in view would be defeated by it, was to him extremely improbable, and nothing short of conclusive evidence would convince him of a fact so unlikely to happen.

H. OF R.

New York Contested Election.

JANUARY, 1824.

But, said Mr. C., if the ground be conceded that these votes were fraudulent, and could not be allowed, and even if the vote with the erasure be thrown out of the question, still, however, the petitioner would not be entitled to a seat. On looking over the Journals of the House, Mr. C. said, he found a case in point, the correctness of which, he trusted, would not be questioned by any one. He referred to the case of Scott and Easton. Mr. Scott was returned to this House with a majority of fifteen votes, certified in his favor, over Mr. Easton, who claimed a seat, on the ground that a part of the votes given for Scott were irregularly received, and could not be allowed. This House considered them so irregular, that they vacated the seat of Mr. Scott, and, on determining whether Mr. Easton should have a seat, they said, as it appeared evident to them that a majority of his district did not mean that he should represent them, they would send him back, also, to the people, for another election. Apply that case, said Mr. C., to the one before us. The gentlemen on the other side will concede, that if the double votes were counted single, Mr. Wilson would have a majority; and though they cannot be so allowed, yet they mark the wishes of the electors, and leave the petitioner unsupported by the wishes of a plurality of the voters of his district. He cannot, therefore, have his seat, without breaking down the principle settled in the case of Scott and Easton. But, said Mr. C., conceding this point also, the petitioner could not claim his seat, unless they could also come to what he considered the dangerous conclusion of saying that this vote, called the erased vote, meant nothing, and was put into the box without any apparent motive. For himself, he could not come to so strange a conclusion. He was always for ascribing to human beings rational motives; and he would rather say, that the partial erasure happened through accident, or fraud practised on the elector. Mr. C. said he differed very materially from his honorable colleague, (Mr. STORRS,) on the motives that actuated electors. He would not pretend to say that the electors in the particular section of the State where gentlemen lived, might not go to the polls under a slavish fear of creditors and wealthy landholders, though he had always understood it otherwise. But he could say with certainly, that in every part of the State where he had been acquainted, men exercised this proud prerogative free and uncontrolled. In general, no people on earth were more tenacious of their rights, or adhered to them more strenuously. It was due to the electors of that State to say, that if any man should attempt to make use of coercive means to bear upon the elections, he would be sure to lose whatever influence he previously possessed. Men having power in their hands were ever distrusted, and they, above all others, ought to be careful; for their weight in the elections was guarded against by a general watchfulness of the people. He admitted that a company in Europe owned a large and fertile tract of land in the western part of the State, on which settlers lived, many of whom were indebted to them; but that company neither knew nor cared any more about the political divisions of New York than the Emperor of Morocco. Their agents had but one object in view; it was to procure settlers upon the tract, and nothing would be as likely to check settlement as any attempt to control the minds of electors. It was the first time he ever heard of any unwarrantable interference from that quarter, and he must now believe his colleague, on that point, in a gross error. Mr. C. said he had not expected such illiberal sentiments against the people he had the honor, in part, to represent, from such a source. He was sorry to see them in any quarter, because he believed them unjust and unfounded.

Mr. STORRS and Mr. WOOD replied to the remarks of Mr. CLARK.

Mr. CLARK again, in answer to Mr. STORRS, denied that any opulent individuals had ever controlled elections in any part of his district. He said his colleague was mistaken, in supposing that any member of this House was either the owner or agent of any considerable quantity of land in Chenango county. He stated further, that no single individual there had the agency of, or owned, a whole township. But if such an event ever should happen, he trusted no slavish fear or spiritless obedience to the owner, would be found among the inhabitants.

Sir, said Mr. C., I feel myself bound to dissent from the opinion expressed by my honorable colleague, that the partisans of New York observe a servile, base acquiescence to the will of their leaders. It is true, sir, that our State has been divided into two political parties ever since the organization of their Government. Those parties continue down to the present time, but the great body of individuals are attached to them, because each thinks the side to which he belongs is pursuing the best interest of his country. It is from principle, then, sir, and not fear, that the parties of New York are kept up and supported. And he appealed to the experience of his colleague, whether the men who observed good faith towards their party and kept on a steady uniform course of principles, regardless of minor circumstances, were not the characters whose conduct in the other departments of life met with the most general approbation. True, said Mr. C., individuals may be found in the State who take the liberty of changing from one side to the other, and back again, as their fears or imaginary interests may point out; but this was not considered there as evidence of an independent mind, or great mental courage. On the contrary, motives of fear and a want of stability were generally attributed to them.

JANUARY, 1824.

Daniel Carroll—William P. Nimmo.

H. of R.

THURSDAY, January 8.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill authorizing the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to purchase the seven per cent. stock of the United States, in the year 1824; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE, from the same committee, reported a bill authorizing the creation of a stock, to an amount not exceeding five millions of dollars, to provide for the awards of the commissions under the treaty with Spain, of the 22d of February, 1819; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the letter from Samuel R. Overton, and Joseph M. White, reported a bill to extend the time limited for the settlement of private land claims in the Territory of Florida; which was read twice, and ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time on Monday next.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee of Claims, against the petition of Charles Minifie, (for interest on a certain balance heretofore allowed to him at the Treasury.)

Mr. J. T. JOHNSON, of Kentucky, moved to amend the report, by striking out the word "not," so as to reverse the report; and spoke in support of the amendment; which was opposed by Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, and Mr. McCoy.

The amendment was lost, and the report of the Committee of Claims was reported to the House, by the Committee of the Whole, without amendment, in which the House concurred.

DANIEL CARROLL.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of Daniel Carroll of Wad-dington and others, (appropriating $1,555 for the expense of repairs made in the building rented by Congress in 1815-'16, after the conflagration of the Capitol, whose occupation of it rendered those repairs necessary. The alterations were not contemplated in the contract for rent, and the house had to be restored to its former situation, before the house could be again used by the proprietors.

A debate arose on the bill, which was opposed by Mr. COCKE, and Mr. SHARPE, and supported by Mr. McCoy and WILLIAMS, of North Carolina.

Mr. HERRICK moved to lay the bill on the table; which motion was lost—ayes 70, noes 76. The question being on ordering the bill to a third reading, it was decided in the negative—ayes 74, noes 83. So the bill was rejected.

WILLIAM P. NIMMO.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of William P. Nimmo.

Mr. WHITTLESEY moved to amend the bill by inserting the words "the representatives of" (Mr. Nimmo being dead;) which was agreed to.

The bill, (which appropriates $500 as compensation for the destruction of a building called the Pleasure House, on his estate, occupied as an outpost of the American troops, in the defence of Norfolk,) occasioned some debate, chiefly on the point of fact, whether the house was, at the time of its destruction, occupied by American troops, placed in it by the authority of the commanding officer of the station, and destroyed in immediate consequence of such occupation, or was destroyed from mere wantonness on the part of the enemy.

MESSRS. WHITTLESEY, OWEN, BASSETT, and NEALE, advocated, and MESSRS. WILLIAMS, FLOYD, and FOOT, of Connecticut, opposed the bill. The question being taken on its passage to a third reading, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 84, noes 64.

FRIDAY, January 9.

Mr. STRONG, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred, on the 12th and 22d ultimo, the memorial of the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of Mobile, and the proprietors of lots on the east side of Water-street, in said city, reported a bill granting certain lots of ground to the city of Mobile, and to certain individuals of said city; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCoy, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of David Giffin and Samuel Hoag, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of Hannah and Joseph Mins, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the representatives of Joseph Mins, deceased; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill authorizing the executors of John B. Mebane to collect certain arrears of tax in the county of Chatham, and State of North Carolina; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHIPPLE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, made an unfavorable report on the petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Monroe, in the Territory of Michigan; which report was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SLOANE, from the Committee of Elections, made a report on the memorial of Alfred H. Powell, contesting the seat of Jared Williams, one of the Representatives of the State of Virginia; which was read, and the resolution therein recommended was agreed to by the House, viz:

Resolved, That the memorialist have leave to withdraw his memorial and documents.

Mr. ROSS, from the select committee appointed

H. OF R.

New Tariff Bill.

JANUARY, 1824.

on the memorial of the legal representatives of John H. Piatt, deceased, made a report thereon, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the assignees and legal representatives of the said Piatt; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made a report on the memorial of the Mayor and Corporation of the city of New York, in relation to Castle Clinton; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HERRICK moved for a reconsideration of the vote of yesterday rejecting the bill for the relief of Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, and others; which was carried—ayes 82, and the bill, on motion of Mr. HERRICK, was recommitted to the Committee of Claims.

On motion of Mr. RANKIN, the Committee on Private Land Claims were directed to inquire into the expediency of confirming the claim of Woodson Wren to a tract of land, situated on the north-east side of the Bay of Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi.

The engrossed bill for the relief of William P. Nimmo was read the third time.

Some debate arose on its passage, (chiefly on the same grounds taken yesterday,) in which Messrs. COCKE, SANDFORD, and WARFIELD, opposed, and Mr. RICH advocated its passage. The bill, on motion of Mr. WARFIELD, was laid on the table.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of Garrett Fountain; which was reported without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. WEBSTER gave notice, that, on Monday, the 19th January, he should call up the consideration of the resolution some time since submitted by him, on the subject of the Greeks.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

Agreeably to a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 18th of December, 1823, requesting copies of all contracts for cannon, cannon shot, muskets, and other small arms, entered into since the 1st of January, 1827, I herewith transmit a report from the Department of the Navy, with other documents relating thereto.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9, 1824.

The Message and documents were referred to the committee to which was referred, on the 7th instant, the Message of the President of the United States transmitting a similar report from the Department of War.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, covering estimates of appropriation for the year 1824; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

THE PROPOSED NEW TARIFF.

Mr. TOD, from the Committee on Manufactures, to whom have been referred sundry petitions and memorials, praying for the adoption of measures calculated to afford encouragement and protection to the manufacturing interests of the country, reported a bill to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports; which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill is as follows:

A Bill to amend the several acts for imposing duties on imports.

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law on the importation of the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, the following duties, that is to say:

First. On all manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be a component part, a duty of thirty per centum, ad valorem, until the thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five; and after that time, a duty of thirty-three and one-third per centum ad valorem: Provided, That, from and after the said thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, all woollen cloths, or cloths of which wool shall be a component material, (excepting carpets and carpeting, blankets, flannels, baizes, and other unmilled woollen, and worsted or stuff goods,) the original cost of which, at the place whence imported, with the addition of ten per centum, shall be less than eighty cents per square yard, and shall, with such addition, be deemed and taken to have cost eighty cents per square yard, and shall be charged with duty accordingly: And provided, also, That all flannels and baizes, and all other unmilled woollen cloths, or cloths of which wool shall be a component material, excepting carpets and carpeting, and blankets, the original cost of which, at the place whence imported, with the addition of ten per centum, shall be less than forty cents per square yard, shall, with such addition, be taken and deemed to have cost forty cents per square yard, and shall be charged with duty accordingly.

Second. On all manufactures, not herein specified, of cotton, silk, flax, or hemp, or of which either of these materials shall be a component part, a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem: Provided, That all cotton cloths whatsoever, or cloths of which cotton shall be a component material, excepting nankeens imported directly from China, the original cost of which, at the place whence imported, with the addition of twenty per centum if imported from the Cape of Good Hope, or any place beyond it, and of ten per centum if imported from any other place, shall be less than thirty-five cents per square yard, shall, with such addition, be taken and deemed to have cost thirty-five cents per square yard, and shall be charged with duty accordingly. And that all unbleached and uncolored cotton twist, yarn, or thread, the original cost of which shall be less than sixty cents per pound, shall be deemed and taken to have cost sixty cents per pound, and shall be charged with duty accordingly; and all bleached or colored cotton yarn, twist, or thread, the original cost of which shall be less than seventy-five cents per pound, shall be deemed and taken to have cost seventy-five cents per pound, and shall be charged with duty accordingly.

Third. On wool unmanufactured, a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem, until the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five; afterwards a duty of thirty per centum ad valorem, until the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six; afterwards, a duty of forty per centum ad valorem until the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven; and, after that time, a duty of fifty per centum ad valorem.

JANUARY, 1824.

New Tariff Bill.

H. OF R.

Fourth. On all Leghorn hats or bonnets, and all hats or bonnets of straw, chip, or grass, and on all flats, braids, or plats, for making of hats or bonnets, a duty of fifty per centum ad valorem: Provided, That all Leghorn hats and bonnets, and all hats or bonnets of straw, chip, or grass, which, at the place whence imported, with the addition of ten per centum, shall have cost less than one dollar each, shall, with such addition, be taken and deemed to have cost one dollar, each, and shall be charged with duty accordingly.

Fifth. On printing types, on japanned wares of all kinds, on plated wares of all kinds, and on all manufactures, not otherwise specified, made of brass, iron, steel, pewter, lead, or tin, or of which either of those metals is a component material, a duty of twenty-five per centum ad valorem.

On bolting cloths, fifteen per centum ad valorem;

On hair cloth and hair seating, thirty per centum ad valorem;

On marble, and all manufactures of marble, thirty per centum ad valorem;

On all paper hangings, forty per centum ad valorem;

On coach laces, of cotton, or other material, thirty-five per centum ad valorem; on all other laces, twelve and-a-half per centum ad valorem;

On lead, in pigs, bars, or sheets, two cents per pound;

On leaden shot, three and one-half cents, per pound;

On red or white lead, dry or ground in oil, four cents per pound;

On Brussels, Venetian, Turkey, and Wilton carpets and carpeting, fifty cents per square yard,

On all other kinds of carpets and carpeting, of wool, flax, hemp, or cotton, or parts of either, twenty cents per square yard;

On all other carpets and carpeting, mats, and floor cloths, made of tow, flags, or any other material, a duty of thirty per centum ad valorem;

On hemp, two cents per pound;

On flax, three cents per pound;

On tarred cables and cordage, four cents per pound;

On untarred cordage, yarns, twine, pack-thread, and seines, five cents per pound;

On Russia duck, per piece of fifty-two archeens, two dollars each piece;

On Raven's duck, per piece of fifty-two archeens, one dollar and twenty-five cents each piece;

On Holland duck, per piece of fifty-two archeens, two dollars and fifty cents each piece;

On cotton bagging, six cents per square yard;

On iron, in bars or bolts, not manufactured, in whole or in part, by rolling, one dollar and twelve cents per hundred weight;

On round iron, or brazier's rods, three-sixteenths to eight-sixteenths of an inch diameter, inclusive; and on iron, in nail or spike rods, slit; and on iron, in sheets, and hoop iron; and on iron, slit or rolled, for band-iron, scroll-iron, or casement rods, three cents per pound;

On iron spikes, four cents per pound;

On iron nails, cut or wrought, five cents per pound;

18th Con. 1st Sess.—31

On tacks, brads, and sprigs, not exceeding sixteen ounces to the thousand, five cents per thousand; exceeding sixteen ounces to the thousand, five cents per pound;

On iron or steel wire, not exceeding number eighteen, five cents per pound; over number eighteen, nine cents per pound;

On anvils and anchors, two cents per pound;

On iron cables or chains, or parts thereof, three cents per pound; and no drawback shall be allowed on the exportation of iron cables, or parts thereof;

On mill cranks and mill irons, of wrought iron, four cents per pound;

On mill saws, one dollar and fifty cents each;

On cross-cut saws, one dollar each;

On whip saws, one dollar each;

On hand saws, twenty-five cents each;

On tenon saws, twenty cents each;

On broad axes, thirty cents each;

On other axes, twenty-five cents each;

On hatchets, fifteen cents each;

On adzes, twenty-five cents each;

On augers, not exceeding half an inch, two cents each; above that size, and not exceeding one inch, two and an half cents each; above an inch, and not exceeding one-and-a-half inches, three cents each; above that size, and not exceeding two-and-a-half inches, three and one-half cents each;

On blacksmiths' hammers and sledges, two-and-a-half cents per pound;

On claw hammers, for carpenters, five cents each;

On hoes, broad, twelve cents each;

On other hoes, ten cents each;

On shovels and tongs, of iron, thirty cents per pair;

On muskets, one dollar and fifty cents per stand;

On rifles, two dollars and fifty cents each;

On fowling and hunting pieces, single barrelled, four dollars each; double barrelled five dollars each;

On carriers' knives, forty cents each;

On cutting knives, twenty-five cents each;

On drawing-knives, twenty-five cents each;

On scythes, twenty-five cents each;

On sickles and reaping hooks, twelve cents each;

On spades and shovels, of iron or steel, twenty cents each;

On screws of iron, weighing twenty-five pounds or upwards, eight cents per pound;

On screws of iron, for wood, called wood screws, not exceeding one inch in length, eight cents per groce; over one inch, and not exceeding two inches in length, fourteen cents per groce; over two inches in length, twenty cents per groce;

On vessels of cast iron, not otherwise specified, one-and-a-half cents per pound;

On all other castings of iron, not specified, one cent per pound;

On frying pans, twenty-five cents each;

On gridirons and griddles, twenty cents each;

On all vessels of copper, ten cents per pound;

On quills, prepared or manufactured, one dollar per thousand;

On slates and tiles, for building, half a cent each;

On black lead pencils, one dollar and fifty cents per groce;

On tallow, four cents per pound;

On tallow candles, five cents per pound;

On spermaceti candles, eight cents per pound;

On soap, four cents per pound;

On lard, three cents per pound ;
 On wheat, twenty-five cents per bushel ;
 On potatoes, ten cents per bushel ;
 On coal, six cents per heaped bushel ;
 On indigo, twenty-five cents per pound ;
 On corks, twelve cents per pound ;
 On linseed and hempseed oil, twenty-five cents per gallon ;

On castor oil, forty cents per gallon ;
 On ale, beer, and porter, imported in bottles, twenty cents per gallon ; imported otherwise than in bottles, fifteen cents per gallon ;

On beef and pork, two cents per pound ;
 On butter, five cents per pound ;
 On vinegar, eight cents per gallon ;
 On alum, two dollars and fifty cents per hundred weight ;

On refined saltpetre, three cents per pound ;
 On blue or Roman vitriol, four cents per pound ;
 On oil of vitriol, three cents per pound ;
 On Glauber salts, two cents per pound ;
 On Epsom salts, three cents per pound ;
 On camphor, crude, eight cents per pound ;
 On camphor, refined, twelve cents per pound ;
 On Prussian blue, ten cents per pound ;
 On copperas, two dollars per hundred weight ;
 On pepper, ten cents per pound ;
 On Cayenne pepper, fifteen cents per pound ;
 On pimento, eight cents per pound ;
 On Chinese cassia, ten cents per pound ;
 On cocoa, three cents per pound ;
 On chocolate, four cents per pound ;
 On currants and figs, three cents per pound ;

On plums, prunes, Muscatel raisins, and raisins in jars and boxes, four cents per pound ;

On all other raisins, three cents per pound ;
 On filberts, three cents per pound ;
 On pine apples, two cents each ;
 On oranges, fifty cents per hundred ;
 On lemons, twenty-five cents per hundred ;
 On limes, ten cents per hundred ;

On window glass, not above eight inches by ten inches in size, three dollars per hundred square feet ; not above ten inches by twelve inches in size, three dollars and fifty cents per hundred square feet ; and if above ten inches by twelve inches in size, four dollars per hundred square feet ;

On black glass bottles, not exceeding the capacity of one quart, two dollars per groce ; on bottles exceeding one quart, and not more than two quarts, two dollars and fifty cents per groce ; over two quarts, and not exceeding one gallon, three dollars per groce ;

On demijohns, twenty-five cents each ;
 On glass beads, fifty cents per pound ;

On apothecaries' vials, of the capacity of four ounces, and less, one dollar per groce ; on the same, above four ounces, and not exceeding eight ounces, one dollar and twenty-five cents per groce ;

On all wares of cut glass, not specified, three cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, an ad valorem duty of thirty per centum ;

On all other articles of glass, two cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, an ad valorem duty of twenty per centum ;

On folio and quarto post paper, of all kinds, twenty cents per pound ;

On foolscap and all drawing and writing paper, seventeen cents per pound ;

On printing, copper plate, and stainers' paper, ten cents per pound ;

On sheathing paper, binders' and box boards, and wrapping paper of all kinds, three cents per pound ;

On all other paper, fifteen cents per pound ;

A duty of twelve and a half per centum ad valorem on all articles not herein specified, and now paying a duty of seven per centum ad valorem ;

On all foreign distilled spirits, fifteen per centum upon the duties now imposed, by law, and in addition thereto.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, in all cases whatsoever, all articles composed or mixed of various materials, shall pay the highest duty to which articles manufactured from any such materials are subject.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, to the duties on all goods, wares, and merchandise, hereinbefore mentioned, or any other, there shall be added, and shall be collected and paid, the full amount of such bounty or premium, or allowance in nature thereof, as, on the importation of similar articles, may be given or allowed in the country or place from which the same shall be exported, or in the country or place wherein the same shall be produced or manufactured ; which shall be calculated and ascertained under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, fix and prescribe.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That an addition of ten per centum shall be made to the several rates of duties hereby imposed upon the several articles aforesaid, which, after the said respective times for the commencement of the duties hereby imposed, shall be imported in ships or vessels not of the United States : Provided, That this addition shall not be applied to articles imported in ships or vessels not of the United States, entitled by treaty or by any act of Congress to be admitted on payment of the same duties that are paid on like articles imported in ships or vessels of the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed a drawback of the duties by this act imposed upon the exportation of any articles that shall have paid the same, within the time, and in the manner, and subject to the provisions and restrictions, prescribed in the fourth section of the act, entitled "An act to regulate the duties on imports and tonnage," passed the twenty-seventh day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixteen.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed a drawback of seventy-five per centum of the duties by this act imposed on tallow, which may be manufactured into candles or soap, by, for, or on account of, the person or persons importing the same, upon the exportation thereof within nine months after the said importation, and in the manner prescribed by the act, entitled "An act to allow drawback of duties on spirits distilled, and sugar refined, within the United States, and for other purposes," so far as the same may be applicable, and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the existing laws shall extend to, and be in force for, the collection of the duties imposed by this act, for the prosecution and punishment of all offences, and for the recovery, collection, distribution, and remission, of all fines, penalties, and forfeitures, as fully and effectually as if every regulation, penalty, forfeiture, provision, clause, matter, and thing, to that effect, in the existing laws contained, had been inserted in, and re-enacted by, this act.

JANUARY, 1824.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

H. OF R.

RELIEF OF SARAH PERRY.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, Mr. TAYLOR in the Chair, on the following bill:

A Bill for the relief of Sarah Perry, mother of the late Oliver H. Perry.

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be allowed, and paid, to Sarah Perry, mother of Oliver Hazard Perry, late a Captain in the Navy of the United States, a pension, or annuity, of three hundred dollars per annum, payable half yearly, from and after the passage of this act, for and during the term of her natural life, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FULLER, of Massachusetts, stated the facts of the case for which the bill was intended to provide. The House were all in the remembrance of the victory obtained on Lake Erie, in 1813, its brilliant circumstances, and its important results. When the death of the gallant officer, who achieved that victory, became known to Congress, in the year 1819, a bill was introduced, and promptly passed, which made provision for the support of his wife and children. For some reason, to Mr. F. unknown, the name of his mother was not inserted in the bill, and she had remained entirely dependent on one of her sons, now no more, who supported her as long as he lived. A second son, who was a Lieutenant in the Navy, continued her support after the death of his brother; but, three years since, was lost at sea by an accident with which the House were all acquainted. It was then that application was made by Mrs. Perry, whose last dependence was taken from her, for public support. A bill was last year brought into the House for her relief, but, from pressure of business, or some other cause, had been neglected to be acted upon. The present bill had the same object. It proposed but a slender support, and the object of its provision was far advanced in years. He trusted the bill would pass without opposition.

Mr. HAMILTON, of South Carolina, asked for the reading of the memorial of Mrs. Perry, which being completed—

Mr. HAMILTON rose and addressed the House to the following effect:

I hold it, sir, as a position not to be controverted, that a country or government is quite as much bound, by the obligations of gratitude, as an individual. That these obligations result from great and extraordinary benefits conferred on the commonwealth, producing claims which it is the province of a just and enlightened nation to canvass and appreciate. And further, that, in a republic like ours, where we give nothing to pride and luxury, these claims, involving a pecuniary bounty, are to be considered in reference to the extent and character of the services on which they are founded; the ability of the Government to discharge them; the existence of absolute want of the party to be relieved, and that the relief itself be controlled by the practice and maxims of a wise and judicious frugality. It is under these principles, which I regard as altogether axiomatic in the polity of every civilized government, that I propose to bring the case of Mrs. Perry.

The claims of this lady are founded on the exalted services of her son, Oliver Hazard Perry, who, in the hour of "your utmost need," won for you a victory of vast and inestimable importance. On this claim a peculiar and emphatic strength is conferred, by the fact that your hero did not more entirely owe his life to his mother who gave him birth, than he did those great qualities of soul which enabled him to achieve that incomparable exploit with which he has enriched the renown of his country. If the virtues of the Gracchi are to be attributed to the lofty sentiments with which the daughter of Scipio Africanus imbued their minds, the moral power of Perry is as truly to be traced to the enlightened instruction of his mother, who, by the course she pursued in his education, seems to have had an early presentiment of the rich fruits which would reward her maternal labors. For such a task this lady was eminently qualified. To a vigorous and cultivated intellect, she unites, in as high a degree as any one I have ever known, a refined sense of every thing that is truly elevated and great in human action. A love for true glory, a contempt of death and danger, an ambition controlled by an exalted patriotism, and a magnanimity partaking of all the generous and noble sympathies of our nature, were the lessons she successfully and incessantly impressed on the mind of her son. I speak with the confidence of one having a personal knowledge of these facts. And I undertake to say that the triumphant defeat of your enemies in the engagement of the 10th of September, when you most wanted the moral effect of victory, is essentially to be attributed to her who is now the object of your charity—to her who cast your hero in a perfect mould of heroism—who girded on his sword, and bid him go forth and conquer.

But I will now, sir, state a circumstance in which the coldest calculation of profit and loss will perceive some justice in her claim.

After the achievement which has rendered the name of Perry so memorable, it was the misfortune of his mother, by the loss of her husband, to be reduced to a situation of difficulty and distress. Her son, with a filial devotion which invariably distinguished him, immediately appropriated a portion of his pay to the support of his parent and her then unprovided younger children. This sacred annuity was paid with the most exact punctuality, until the death of her son. On the circumstances of his death it is unnecessary to dwell. They belong to a mournful portion of our history. It is enough for my purpose, to say, that he died in your service, in the performance of duties which you confided to him; and if he had not been commissioned to bear your flag to a distant and insalubrious clime, it is not probable that you would now be discussing this subject.

H. of R.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

JANUARY, 1824.

This pecuniary loss you are bound to make up to his mother, on every principle of justice, laying aside, altogether, the considerations of gratitude. Nor is the force of this claim in any degree impaired by the fact of his not having died in battle. Your Government sent him, in the month of August, to the pestilential banks of the Oronoco, in the performance of important naval and diplomatic functions, where he encountered perils greater and far more loathsome than the hostility of the enemies of his country. These claims of his thrice widowed mother ought not to be destroyed, because her gallant son yielded up his spirit to the ravages of an odious disease, unsolaced by those consolations which would have soothed his last pang, if he had died in the battles of his country.

I come now, sir, to the events posterior to the death of Commodore Perry, which have a direct relation to the impulse which was given to public opinion, as to the solemn obligation which rested on his country to make provision for the surviving objects of his solicitude and affection. It is one of the few events of my life, of which I have just occasion to be proud, that, in the Legislature of my native State, in December, 1819, I moved a series of resolutions, requesting our delegation warmly to co-operate in any measures that might be introduced in Congress, calculated to testify the gratitude of the country to the memory of Commodore Perry. These resolutions, having a direct reference to the subject before you, were unanimously adopted by the Legislature of a State second to none in its ardent devotion to a stern, orthodox republican creed. The most propitious circumstance attending this impulse from South Carolina was, that the measure was in contemporary accord with the views of a gentleman (Mr. RANDOLPH) now on this floor, who, to an object so patriotic, pure, and grateful, lent the persuasive energy of his eloquence. This gentleman induced the House to adopt a resolution for the appointment of a select committee, to whom was confided the duty of inquiring what provision, comporting with the gratitude of the country, it behooved Congress to make for the family of Commodore Perry. To one, now no more, (my lamented predecessor,) who was a member of this committee, the virtues of whose noble heart were enthusiastically devoted to the subjects of its labors, I am indebted, for a knowledge of the principle by which the committee were governed, in reporting the bill on this subject, on the 28th of February, 1820. This committee, justly regarding the great and eminent services of Commodore Perry, and the indigent situation in which he had left his mother, and immediate family, thought it would not be going beyond the gratitude of the country, and the wants of the individuals to be relieved, that one-half of his full pay and emoluments as a post captain in the Navy of the United States, should be divided between them during certain periods, and on certain contingencies. The very first clause in this bill made a separate and distinct provision for his mother, precisely to the amount of the pecuniary allowance of the bill on your table. When, however, this measure was to be acted upon, some of its friends, from a fear lest the whole bill might be lost, in contending for too much, consented to the erasure of this most pious and beautiful feature in the bill; one, the most strongly indicative of the feeling and considerate gratitude of the country. The gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. RANDOLPH,) who was chairman of this committee, yielded to this alteration, more, I have understood, from considerations of policy, than from a conviction of its propriety. [Mr. RANDOLPH here said that he assured the gentleman from South Carolina that he had never yielded this point.] I feel myself strengthened by the declaration of the gentleman, and that I am authorized to say that he has never surrendered his opinion that the mother of your hero has yet an uncanceled claim on your gratitude and justice. I feel that I have a right to appeal to the opinions of this gentleman; for among those who have been distinguished in the parliamentary history of your country, he is the last man who can be accused of ever having advocated a wasteful and unnecessary expenditure of your treasure.

I have preferred, sir, in the narrative I have given you, even the risk of being tediously minute, rather than that a single circumstance should be omitted, calculated to give you a full view of Mrs. Perry's situation. Her claim now recurs with all its original force, and may be said to carry a species of moral interest from its postponement.

Let us now inquire whether this claim does not come fully within the scope of the principle with which I set out. Does not this lady stand in the light of a benefactress to her country? Did she not nourish, at her bosom, a man who did you a vast and countless service? Did she not instil into his soul those moral elements which fitted him for conquest—that longing after immortality—that shining and transcendent valor—that refined and exalted chivalry, which give an indescribable charm to his whole character?

I fear, sir, if these questions are answered coldly, even in the affirmative, amidst the agitation of many topics, odious in their character, and pernicious in their discussion, we have forgotten a part of what we owe to the hero of Lake Erie. Is it an unreasonable trespass upon your time to ask you to go back with me for one moment to that period when the victory of the 10th of September flashed from one end of this Union to the other, with a bright and cheering lustre, chasing back to the regions of eternal night the clouds and darkness which once seemed to have rested on your destiny, and, in the light of its glory, giving new ardor to valor, fresh hopes and confidence to patriotism? There was not a heart, among seven millions of freemen, amidst all the distractions of party, to which it did not bring gladness and exultation: for the victory was perfect in its kind. It was complete, to entire, sweeping and overwhelming subjugation. It gave security to fifteen hundred miles of your frontier, and the blow which went home to the pride of your foe, palsied the uplifted arm of his savage ally, and the tomahawk fell harmless to the earth. Amidst these events, your hero stands forth in high and resplendent relief. But let me not spoil the moral grandeur of a scene which belongs, by the joint destiny of glory and genius, to the pencil of some future artist who shall be worthy of his theme, in feeling, in full force, all its matchless sublimity. Let his canvass, then, breathe with all the animations of life, and glories of art. To him be confided the task of representing your hero in the midst of a carnage unexampled in the annals of modern warfare, carrying victoriously the tactics of Rodney to a dazzling excess, never contemplated by that hardy veteran in the intensity of his valor.

JANUARY, 1824.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

H. OF R.

There are, Mr. Chairman, some posthumous claims of gratitude which survive the individual, and remain on this side of the grave. It is when the object of our gratitude is removed beyond the reach of our kindness, that the just and enlightened instinct of this noblest sentiment of our nature induces us to go forth and seek for those our benefactor loved best, and on them to lavish the tributes of this consecrated obligation. No stone, erected by his country, marks even the spot where the remains of our gallant countryman are mouldering into "a cold clod of the valley;" but this pittance, poor as it is, which is asked for his parent, will be more consoling to his manes than monumental glories, in which the genius of Chantry and Canova might contend for mastery. Death has not paid the obligations of gratitude you owe your hero. They survive in the person of the venerable being who gave him birth. The force of this truth it is in vain for you to escape. It is but a cold and heartless sophistry, which attempts to discriminate between the gratitude of a country or government, and that which becomes an individual. They are obligations of equivalent authority, and rest upon the soundness of the same principle.

Let us now, sir, inquire, whether the proposed annuity of three hundred dollars to Mrs. Perry is not fully within that frugality which ought to govern our bounty. Does this sum allow for any thing more than the absolute sustenance of life? Do you give, in such an amount, one farthing to pride or luxury? Let me next ask, whether the payment of this sum is within your ability? On this point I am admonished into silence by the ridicule which would await such a discussion. Nor will I permit you to plead economy, when I see so little of it employed in matters which have a personal reference to yourselves, and in objects over which we have a direct control. The testimonies of your extravagance are about me. The cost of one of those columns which uphold the dome of this cheerless waste of magnificence, would provide a fund, the interest of which would support the parent of our hero during the remnant of her life; and all the expense of the proposed annuity would twice over be paid, during its utmost duration, from the amount which we annually pay out of the public Treasury for newspapers. Precedents of self-gratification, it seems, are never dangerous. But, in bestowing a pittance on the mother of your gallant benefactor, there may be something superlatively perilous in the example. Let me not be told that you have already done enough in providing for the widow and children of Commodore Perry. I say, in this you have done nobly; but something yet remains to complete your benefaction, to which you are urged by the strongest claims: for the situation of his mother is equally as exigent, to say the least of it, as that of his wife and children; and the relations of the one, to the object of your gratitude, are quite as proximate as those of the other.

I believe, sir, that I have but one more topic on which it is indispensably necessary to say a word; and that is, as to the wants of Mrs. Perry. On this point, I can assure those who would never dispense your bounty except in cases of absolute necessity, that she is quite poor enough to satisfy all their scruples. But I do not think it becomes either the occasion, or the memory of the individual to whom this donation to his mother would be a precious tribute, to institute a sort of commission of pauperism to ascertain the precise condition of her poverty. I will not invade the sanctuary of her domestic fireside, or insult her misfortunes at the price of your favor. Nor will I pronounce so great a libel on her surviving children, however slender may be their means, as to insinuate that she must starve, but for the interposition of your bounty.

Sir, an enlightened gratitude, governed by a frugal bestowment of public rewards, in a manner consonant both to the purposes of justice and humanity, is one of the eminent duties which a Republic has to perform towards those who have been a blessing and honor to their country. I am happy to avail myself of the authority of a great man, who looked far into the philosophy of human things, and had the most impressive mode of illustrating them: "No man," says he, "knows, when 'he cuts off the incitements to a virtuous ambition, and the just rewards of public service, what infinite mischief he may do his country, through all generations. Such saving to the public may 'prove the worst mode of robbing it.'" I shall be told, probably, that the fame of great achievements is a part of their just reward. This is true, and true to an extent which I am happy to allow. Over this the niggardly grasp of contemporary injustice has no power; for it may be said of these achievements, as it has been beautifully said, in reference to another subject, that their "price is immortality, and posterity will pay it." Something may be urged as to the danger of the precedent, should you grant this annuity to Mrs. Perry. If, therefore, you are fearful that an individual act of benevolence, gratitude, and justice, should have the authority of a dangerous general rule, let it now be distinctly understood, that this lady receives this donation because she is the mother of that hero who captured for you an entire fleet. Thus modified, I confess I see no great danger in the precedent. I should presume the oftener it could be successfully quoted for your consideration, the better it would be for your fortunes, more especially in time of war. But, if you desire to exclude altogether the use of the precedent, by a species of physical as well as moral necessity, then say at once that you give this pittance because her son defeated the enemy of his country in the first regular fleet engagement which we ever fought, and the case stands alone, and must do so, to the end of time. But I feel that this anticipated cavilling is unworthy of my subject. I make my appeal at once to higher considerations than those connected with this mere special pleading.

H. OF R.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

JANUARY, 1824.

There is, sir, a mournful vicissitude in the concerns of this world. I recollect that, soon after this Hall began to be raised from the ruin in which the vandalism of our enemy had involved it, in walking around its then naked walls, with the lamented Perry, in the partial fondness of his friendship, he was pleased to express a belief, that I would one day have the privilege of being heard on this floor. How little did I think that the first word I was destined to utter, in this place, would be in preferring a petition for bread, in behalf of his unfortunate parent, struck down and impoverished by that calamity which has filled his country with sadness and dismay. But, if she is fated to be repulsed in this application to your charity, or justice, call it what you will, I shall feel that something yet is to be added to this melancholy incident, to complete its moral. That the cup of sorrow has not yet been emptied of its last drop. If, by your vote, you are about to tell her to knock at that door, but to go elsewhere for bread, I trust in God that the spirits of the blessed, by his merciful providence, are kept in blissful ignorance of the strife and vanities of this wretched sphere: that, between us and those bright mansions of eternal rest, there is the thick vale and shadow of death, which no human voice can pierce; and that it is not permitted to my gallant friend to witness this humble effort which I have made for his bereaved parent—this poor tribute which I have flung upon his grave.

Mr. HENRY, of Kentucky, said he did not rise with the hope of emulating the thrilling and persuasive eloquence of the honorable gentleman from South Carolina. He was far, very far, from proposing to himself, an effort so vain, so unavailing. It would be his endeavor to present to the Committee a few plain considerations, proving, as he conceived, that the provision contemplated by this bill was strictly compatible with the established practice and the sound policy of the Government. I shall assume, said he, as the foundation of the remarks I intend to submit, that the principle on which the present application rests, has been already settled in the act passed by a former Congress, making provision for the wife and children of the lamented Perry. What was the inducement to the passage of that act? Was it not because the deceased hero was endeared to the nation by his eminent services; and because, by his untimely death, his wife and his little ones, the principal sufferers by an affliction which covered our land with mourning, were deprived of the means of decent subsistence? Why should the aged and venerable mother of the deceased be excluded from the benefit of a similar provision? Was she less deeply affected by the tidings of his death?

Who can adequately conceive the anguish of a mother who mourns for her first born? Must she be excluded because she was not the object of his tender regard, as well as his wife and his children; or because the obligation on his part to maintain her in decency and comfort was less sacred, less imperishable? The tie which binds the parent to the child, and the child to the parent, as it is the eldest, so it is, also, the latest of human obligations. The sentiment which draws a son to a virtuous and exemplary mother, to whom he owes an immense debt of gratitude and duty, constitutes one of the noblest and most refined affections of the human heart. It begins with his being—he is nourished by her strength—"from lips that he loves" he learns the lessons of truth, of wisdom, and sincerity; and by her plastic hand, whilst his heart is yet soft and ductile, he is moulded to virtue, to manliness, and patriotism. Tell me not of the influence of learning and philosophy; or of the acknowledged authority of paternal example. These are indeed essential: they are capable of doing much. But, all these will be insufficient to make any man great, if the proper, the indispensable foundation be not laid in the nursery. I appeal to every honorable gentleman to recollect the infinite benefits he derives from the loveliest, the best, and most virtuous half of our species, and then to say, if he can, that the picture I have attempted to delineate is exaggerated. We have heard repeated allusions to the brilliant achievements and wonder-working example of the hero of Lake Erie. Has it never occurred to the Committee, that to the early training and correct discipline of the venerable lady whose name has been so often mentioned, he was indebted for the infusion of those principles, which bore him upwards in the path of life; and finally rendered his own name illustrious, and covered the annals of his country with a flood of glory!

As to the propriety of granting relief in this particular case, (the principle having been settled by the former act,) it appears to me there can be no doubt. The evidence on our table exhibits a case of extreme distress. The mother of Perry was in reality one of his family. That manly son regularly appropriated a portion of his own income to the support of his aged and infirm mother. That son is now no more; that appropriation is now withdrawn. The nation has adopted his beloved wife and children as the objects of their peculiar care, because they were dependent upon him for the means of subsistence. His mother was equally dependent on him. The example of the son strongly indicates to the nation the propriety of extending to her that assistance which she has lost by his death. The principle which is asserted by this bill is not assailable on the score of profusion; it addresses itself to the justice of the nation. I am greatly mistaken if it is not founded in magnanimous and long-sighted economy. Convince the brave man who goes forth to battle that his country will step in to the relief of those who are left destitute by his death, and his soul rises superior to all the dangers that surround him. Convince him that the dear objects of his affections will be cherished and provided for by that Government for whose principles he is about to offer up his life, and you render him invincible. As a general principle, it seems to me, no position can be more defensible; and I can as yet perceive no good reason why it should not be applied to the case now under consideration.

JANUARY, 1824.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

H. OF R.

Mr. WICKLIFFE, of Kentucky, being so unfortunate as to differ in opinion from the gentlemen who had addressed the House in favor of this bill, by way of trying the strength of the House on the subject, moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, (in effect to reject it.) Mr. W. said, he felt, and sensibly felt, the force of the remarks which had been so eloquently made by the gentleman from South Carolina, on the subject, founded on the merits of the hero whose mother was to be benefited by this bill. No one, he said, felt more sensibly than himself the obligations of the principle of gratitude, and on all occasions, as an individual, and in public life, he would acknowledge them; and it was with extreme regret that this individual case should be the first presented to him here, in which he found himself bound to yield to imperious duty the dictates of mere feeling. It was not a belief that the present applicant for the bounty of Congress was undeserving—not a disagreement in the sentiments as to her situation, which had been expressed by the two gentlemen who had spoken, that induced him to make this motion, but the principle that it is dangerous in a republican Government to extend the system of pensioning beyond the extent already recognised by this Government, and acted upon for the last forty years. I ask you, said he, if we begin thus to extend it, where shall we stop? This is a case possessing strong claims upon our sympathy, but it is not the only one of the same character. Is the victory of Commodore Perry the only one which has been achieved for our country? And if we are to go on to pension the mothers of our distinguished heroes, the pensions are not less due to the mothers of the honest men who carry knapsacks, than to those of the distinguished individuals who lead them into action. Shall we extend the bounty of the Government to the mothers of men who hold a distinguished rank in society, and when application is made in behalf of others who need it more, and are perhaps not less deserving, tell them we can extend our benevolence only to those who died in leading armies or squadrons to battle? Shall I be confined to any section of this country to point out instances of men who have died in service, leaving parents in an humble and suffering condition? If we are to adopt the principle of this bill in any case, said Mr. W., I should be for going the whole; let us pass a pension law providing for the support of the widowed mothers of all our deceased heroes. I am not for making these distinctions. Mr. W. said he did not, by his motion, design to express sentiments contrary to those which had been so feelingly expressed on this occasion, respecting the late Commodore Perry, because they were the sentiments of the nation, and we are all bound to acknowledge them, but to protest against a system, the extension of which must in time load the nation with a pension list beyond its means to support.

Mr. CADY, of New York, said that when this bill was brought up before the Committee, he did hope that it would pass by a unanimous vote. He had been one of the committee who reported it, and he regretted much to hear the objections which had fallen from the gentleman who had just sat down. For himself, he would go as far as any man in guarding the treasury of the country from unreasonable and improper claims; but, to the committee who reported this bill, the present appeared to be a claim of peculiar character. What we all owe to the lamented dead no man could be ignorant; the committee had turned their eyes to his aged mother; they found her naked and they proposed to clothe her; they found her hungry and they proposed to feed her. It had been their wish to smooth, in some small degree, her downward path to that bourne from whence no traveller returns. The sum they thought to give her was indeed small, but they had hoped it might be sufficient. She is now subsisting on the cold charity of the world; it was the purpose of the bill to rescue her from that dreary lot, and let her owe her subsistence for the few short years that remained, to the gratitude and liberality of her country.

Mr. COBB, of Georgia, then rose and said, he feared, after the eloquent appeals that had fallen from gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, that he should be heard with apathy, if not worse; but he could not but think that, in the discussion which the subject had received from the advocates of the bill, too great a range had been allowed to feeling, and not quite enough to cool, dispassionate judgment. In the internal policy of this country, no maxim was more fixed or more important than one which had been well expressed by one of our own statesmen, that an extensive pension list, under a free Republic was very inexpedient. We have laid down on this subject a principle to which it would be wise to adhere. When a soldier falls in battle, or is disabled by wounds while fighting for the country, his widow, if he dies, or himself, if he lives, shall receive support from the funds of the nation. But, when you once leave this simple and just rule of proceeding, where are you to stop? It may, perhaps, in some cases, be admissible to provide a temporary aid for the children of those who die in the field, but the idea that the nation is bound to support the widows, children and mothers of all who die in its service, is chimerical indeed. And yet it comes to this. For, if the mothers of those who die in the Navy are to be maintained, why not of those who die in the Army? If the mothers of officers of high rank, why not of subaltern officers? Nay, why not of the common soldier? He risks his life for the country as much, if not more, than his commander; so that even on the ground of feeling, the reasons for the bill entirely fail. Shall we not feel as much for the poor man as the rich? for the humble but patriotic soldier, as for his more elevated companion in arms? Mr. C. said he was in Congress when the bill for the support of the wife and children of Commodore Perry passed the House. It was known to all who were in the House at that time, that that bill had been advocated by two of the most distinguished men that ever sat in Congress—one of whom, (Mr. LOWNDES,) now slumbered in the grave—the other was yet a member of the House. It was to the bursts of resistless eloquence which broke from the lips now still in death, that the passage of that bill was chiefly to be attributed; it was passed in a moment of enthusiasm; the news of the death of Commodore Perry had just reached the House, and feelings were excited which nothing could control. But this body ought not to be under the government of mere feeling when about to legislate; it must bridle its passions, and give reason opportunity to be heard. Some uniform rule ought to be established. Already the pension list of this young country is swelled to more than two millions. In fifty years, asked Mr. C., if we proceed as we have done, what will it be? He was seriously affected by the precedent it was now proposed to set. Mrs. Perry might be much distressed, and it was not disputed that her son had covered his country with glory. His merit was undisputed; and, he would say, it was unsurpassed, too, by any officer of his own grade. But what then? He could go over a long list of worthies, for whose families no provision had been made. There were, at this hour, hundreds of parents, to whom the country owed much, who were in the same circumstances with Mrs. Perry. One instance had recently been quoted on that floor, the case of Mrs. Denny. The thing was unavoidable. It was one of the fruits, the lamentable but necessary, fruits of war, in all ages and countries.

H. OF R.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

JANUARY, 1824.

Mr. McDUFFIE, of South Carolina, next took the floor. He commenced his observations by saying that he should feel deep regret if, in the discharge of his public duty, as a member of this House, he should ever find the dictates of policy incompatible with the sentiments of gratitude and maxims of moral justice. But he was gratified to believe that that which the heart of every upright and honorable man would prompt him to do, was that which might be sustained, as the true policy of a Government, on the cool principles of reason, and by an appeal to the soundest dictates of practical wisdom. The present measure was an appeal to gratitude, founded on the principles of expediency. Did he not believe that this bill was founded on considerations of the most enlarged expediency, he would at once abandon the bill as indefensible. What, he asked, is the great object of a Government, in relation to the military and naval service, on which the honor and even the safety of the country so much depend? Without bravery, military renown, heroism, what is a nation? A multitude of individuals, little better than a rabble. Without national character, what are we? Can too high inducements be presented for the achievements of valor which serve to elevate, and even constitute that character? Can such achievements be estimated by money? They cannot. It was, therefore, he argued, the dictate of sound policy to pursue such a course as would foster the feelings and deeds upon which the honor and safety of the country depend.

Against these sound and self-evident views of national policy, views that were founded in the nature of man, what were the arguments urged? The danger of the precedent: if we pass this bill, it was said, we must, in justice, allow all similar claims, and where will it stop? To this argument, Mr. McD. said, he had a short answer. Let all claims of equal force with this claim be allowed in their fullest extent. That country, said Mr. McD., cannot be poor, which has many such claims to satisfy; rich, indeed, is that nation whose treasury is in danger of impoverishment by claims like this. The gentleman from Georgia has said that if we extend aid to the aged parents of our officers, we are also bound to do the same for our common soldiers. I do not, said Mr. McD., admit that position. This claim rests not simply on the fact of Mrs. Perry being the mother of Commodore Perry, but on the additional idea that she stood to him, when living, in the relation of a dependant on him for support: his bounty fed her. When he died, another son assumed the pious task: of his fate none of us are ignorant; he magnanimously sacrificed his life in an effort to save his comrade, and with his life her support was cut off. Replying to another part of Mr. COBB's argument, Mr. McD. went on to say, there is a broad distinction between the case of a high-spirited and distinguished officer and that of a common soldier. The latter has duties of a far inferior kind, and is induced, in most cases, to enter on their performance from mercenary motives—he enters the service for his daily bread. Not so the officer. He chooses the profession for its own sake, and is tempted to the choice by the love of fame. The duties of a common soldier are performed if he fights bravely, stands at his post, and obeys orders; whilst the duties of the officer are of the most arduous character and of the highest national importance. And when a nation has in its service high-minded and chivalrous officers, it is her soundest policy to set them free from pecuniary anxiety. Mr. McD. said he could see no danger in the precedent, in this case. The services of the son, and the strict and entire dependence of the mother, formed a peculiarity in the case which prevented that danger. The mother was, in this respect, in the place of one of the children of the officer. To them the country becomes a father—why should it not become to her as a son? The extension of the pension list, by cases of parents in such circumstances, was not to be apprehended. The lady contemplated by this bill is far advanced in years—the pension, if granted, cannot long continue—the subject of its bounty must soon sleep in the grave. It was more safe to provide for the parents than for the children of our defenders; their number could never be formidable, nor the duration of their pensions long. He had said that there would be no danger in granting this aid—he would add, there would be danger in refusing it. It had been the hackneyed reproach against republics that they are ungrateful; for himself, he believed the charge was a false one, and he called on the House to prove that it was false. Republics ungrateful? A country dependent for its safety, for its very existence, on the services of its citizens, ungrateful for them? A republic was the last government that ought to cherish ingratitude; nor did he believe that a fair examination of antiquity would show such to be the fact: but, granting it was so, we were only the more imperiously called upon to repel such an imputation in our own case—to teach the world that a republic can as justly appreciate, and as liberally reward, the devotion of gallant men to the public service as the most despotic governments of the Old World. I should, said Mr. McD., have my affections for a republican government much impaired, if, in its maintenance, we must disregard the feelings of honor and the dictates of gratitude; but it is not so; every dictate of enlightened policy is in direct opposition to the sentiment. It cannot be unwise to do what the feelings of an honest and honorable man tell him he ought to do. Sitting in this House, said he, we represent the people of the United States; and I trust we shall not dishonor them. Need I ask, if this claim was presented to our constituents, what they would do? Suppose they were told that the services on which it rests were rendered to the nation when it was contending at a fearful odds with a hardy, powerful, and veteran enemy—when its spirits were sunk to the lowest point of depression, and every heart that loved it was oppressed with despondent foreboding—that it was at that moment that this hero reclaimed her from degradation, and poured a tide of exhilarating joy from one extremity of the country to the other; that he afterwards went, in the discharge of public duty, into all the dangers of a sickly clime, where he perished. They would turn their eyes to his mother, aged and tremulous, and tottering over the verge of the grave, and they would consider that this bill asks but for three hundred dollars a year to feed her, and to soothe her helpless age. Would they refuse to give it? To say so is to insult the American people—it is to offer outrage to the feelings of man. For himself, he was persuaded that, in all cases, feeling and honor were the best defence against false doctrine. We delude ourselves by sophisticating, said Mr. McD. We are drawn into error by adverting to the experience of other nations. Gentlemen had urged the overgrown pension list of Britain: but it was a false course of analogy to reason from the state of old European nations to our own circumstances, which were so widely different. Poverty was not there the ground of pensionary grants—so far from it, that they were every day bestowed on persons rolling in wealth and luxury because they happened to be related to those in power. With us it is far otherwise. Do gentlemen suppose that because we give in a peculiar and strongly marked case, we must, therefore, be so destitute of discretion as to have no power to stop? Have we not reason to guide us? Surely we are rational beings, and we are able to stop when we judge it proper to do so. Will gentlemen say to this House, "Don't do right to day, lest you should do wrong to-morrow?" In the present case, feeling and reason concur to establish the justice of the claim, and he called upon the House not to violate both by refusing this pittance to a poor, aged, dependent woman.

JANUARY, 1824.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

H. OF R.

Mr. A. STEVENSON, of Virginia, next addressed the Committee; he had no intention, he said, when he came to the House, of participating in the discussion of this question; the debate had, however, assumed such an interesting character, that he felt himself urged by considerations of duty and feeling to ask the indulgence of the Committee for a few moments. Mr. S. said he had not anticipated any serious opposition to the bill; he had hoped it would have passed unanimously, and that the House (besides performing a sacred duty) would have been enabled, by the manner in which the application was met, to have soothed, in some measure, the afflictions and sorrow of this venerable lady, for the loss of her gallant son. He regretted that the gentlemen from Georgia and Kentucky should have felt it necessary, in the discharge of their duty, to oppose this bill, and that regret was occasioned by the character of their opposition. The Committee had been told that the precedent which they were about to set, in passing this bill, was one of alarming and dangerous character! That the policy of the Government demanded its rejection, and that there would be no limit to applications upon our bounty. Mr. S. denied that this would be the case—this was not an application to the bounty of the Government; nor was it an application to the cold-handed charity or generosity of the House. It was an appeal to the justice and gratitude of the nation! for there could not, he said, under Heaven, be a more just claim than that which was presented by a parent under the circumstances of this case. But was the House to be fettered by rules and precedents? For his part, he cared not for precedents. He thought it was only necessary to leave the decision to the justice of the House, and that precedents might be dispensed with. Surely, gentlemen were not afraid that precedents for conferring honor and gratitude on distinguished merit, would become too numerous! Nor did he regard the number of applications which might be made. He was prepared to give relief to all who were entitled to the justice and gratitude of the nation—gratitude for services could not be too much applauded. The generosity of our national character was dear to the people, and ought to be cherished by their representatives. He would place the aged parent, and especially the mother, by the side of the widow and the orphan—and he would do this, not only in relation to our gallant officers, but to the humblest man who should die in the service of the country. Mr. S. asked what principle of justice, or motive of policy was it that did not operate as strongly in the one case as in the other. If the object of Government in providing protection for the widow and orphan, be, to excite in your gallant defenders a spirit of emulation and patriotism, and to stimulate them to deeds of noble and daring character, why might we not expect the same result, in providing for the helpless and aged parent? Did gentlemen require that the feelings of the son were to be lost in those of the husband or father? Did they believe that all the moral considerations of filial attachment and affection, which influence the heart, and which dignify and adorn the human character, belonged not to the hero! There was a sacredness, Mr. S. said, in the feelings of a son towards an aged and venerable mother, which could not be expressed. It is the primeval bond of society, and the sacrament of our nature. What do you imagine would have been the feelings of the gallant Perry, whilst he was bearing your thunder in triumph on the mountain wave, if he had supposed that that country for whom he was prepared to offer up his life, would have suffered his aged mother to be thrown upon the cold charity of the world to beg for a precarious subsistence? What would the nation have said, after the battle of Erie, if the manner in which this application has been met to-day, had been then foretold? Almighty God! is it possible, that in this country, where triumph such pure and liberal principles, and where the character of man has been so exalted, the charge of national injustice and ingratitude is to be sustained? But, Mr. S. said, if he was wrong in placing the parent upon the same footing with the wife; yet, was this not a case which stood upon peculiar grounds, and claimed especially the justice and gratitude of the nation? Who was the applicant? The mother of five sons, who had devoted their all to their country, and two of whom had died in its service!—the mother of one of your noblest and most distinguished heroes—a man who exalted your national character, by the splendor of his victories and valor, and added to your arms imperishable honor! Let gentlemen cast back their eye to the history of the past war. Do they forget the difficulties under which it commenced, and the disasters which befel us? Roused from a long peace of thirty years, most of our Revolutionary heroes gone, without officers of experience, without military science or military establishments, a dark gloom pervaded the Union; it was the American navy (filled with our gallant and hardy sons of ocean) who first broke the gloom, and raised to its highest pitch the enthusiasm of the nation. Do gentlemen forget how soon they proved to the enemy that her soldiers were not invincible, nor her wooden walls invulnerable? Even England was forced to acknowledge their superiority, and Europe stood confounded. The battle of Lake Erie was then hailed as a victory, glorious and unparalleled in the history of nations. In its consequences it was almost unexampled. It swept from the enemy the labors of half a century, and destroyed the whole of her naval power upon the Lakes, (which rendered her in that quarter invulnerable,) and enabled her to wield, with powerful effect, the arm of the ruthless savage. It was Perry who achieved this victory; it was his valor which has rendered Lake Erie a monument of American glory, and made the name of your country respectable in every quarter of the world. And now, when the mother of this gallant chieftain (by whom she was supported) comes and demands, from the representatives of that country whom he has thus honored, bread, we are told to give her a stone. Economy and policy, too, we are told, require it, and the people expect it. Sir, said Mr. S., this is a slander upon the nation. Let those who oppose this bill, go back to their constituents and tell them what they have done; that they turned from their door, in the evening of a long life, the aged and venerable mother of the gallant Perry, and doomed her to the charity of the world; and if their conduct is not reproached, I can only say, that the people whom they represent are wholly unlike the generous and high-minded and honorable freemen whom I have the honor and pleasure to represent on this floor. Sir, said Mr. S., I call upon the House to pause, in the vote they are about to give; I conjure gentlemen, by every motive which can bind them to a correct discharge of duty—for the honor of the nation and its justice, not to reject this application; to let their mistaken notions of cold calculating policy perish in the blaze of more generous and better feeling, and, by unanimity, afford some comfort and consolation to the wretched parent of this gallant chief, and pour into her agonized bosom the balm of a nation's gratitude.

H. OF R.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

JANUARY, 1824.

Mr. CLAY (the Speaker) said he regretted extremely that the views which he entertained of this subject were such as would not allow him to accord with the gentlemen who supported the bill. If it were a question merely of feeling, he should probably accompany his assent to it with those eulogiums so eloquently bestowed upon the Victor of Lake Erie, and so justly merited. If the amount of money which the bill proposed to disburse was the only objection to it, he should not have offered any opposition; but it was the principle of the bill against which he protested, and he conjured gentlemen, before they gave their assent to this bill, to pause, lest, under the influence of the bursts of eloquence which had been heard to-day, they should be instrumental in establishing a principle which he believed to be pregnant with infinite mischief. The principle of the present system of pensions is, that, for the support of him who is disabled by wounds, or the family of him who falls in battle, provision shall be made from the Treasury. Commodore Perry neither fell, nor was he wounded, in battle. In the case of his wife and children, then, there had been already a departure from the principle of our pension list, and now a still further departure from it was proposed, in order to provide for another relative of the same officer. Mr. CLAY called upon gentlemen not to suffer themselves to be led away from the true view of this question, by the seductive illusions of military or naval glory. Was there no service but the military or naval? Was there no instance, in civil service, of meritorious individuals dying whilst in the public employ, and leaving families, pining in want and overwhelmed in distress? Mr. C. here alluded to the case of a distinguished individual, (Mr. Gerry, it is supposed,) who, not many years ago, holding a high civil office, died literally in the discharge of his public duty, far advanced in years, and leaving a destitute family. That case, said he, is well remembered; and do we not all know that every species of relief or compensation was refused to his afflicted family? Mr. C. asked gentlemen to regard all services with an equal eye, and not make unjust discriminations. And, on the score of gratitude, he asked, is there to be no limit to the operation of that feeling on the public counsels? What, he asked further, is the basis of our present pension list? Gratitude. What is the basis upon which, in other countries, aristocracies are erected, and titles and honors showered on individuals, to be transmitted down to their remotest posterity, but the same principle? Mr. C. said he should not, however, have risen, but for some general observations on this subject, which had fallen from the gentleman from South Carolina, on national glory. If you wish to make your country illustrious, said Mr. C., you must diffuse your glory. It is not your heroes—God knows we have had enough of them within the last twenty years—every man now is a hero—it is not your heroes, but the body of the people, the men who fight your battles, to whom you are indebted for your safety and your eminence as a nation. But the gentleman from South Carolina, talking of the soldiers, says they fight for pay only, whilst their commanders fight for glory. Is this the case? Look, sir, at the battle of New Orleans, rendered more familiar to our memory by the very recent celebration of its anniversary; the militia who poured down the Mississippi upon the enemy, and met him step by step as he advanced, were they actuated by a mercenary principle? No, sir; far otherwise. Mr. C. went on to say, that he had ever been disposed, as far as possible, consistently with the public interest, to reward our successful commanders and illustrate their services; but the body of the people it is on whose virtue and valor we must depend for the preservation of our liberties. If, in awarding pensions Congress went one step beyond the principles already recognised, where would they stop? They must go on without limit, examining in detail the circumstances which constitute each particular claim preferred upon the public bounty, and measure it out accordingly. Under the present system, which allows pensions for death or disability incurred in the public service, we have a general rule which does not depend on circumstances, and may be safely applied. It is one which depends upon facts, and not upon eloquent appeals to the feelings, by yielding to which, principle might be disregarded. This was the danger to be apprehended from the precedent, should the present bill pass. What has become of him, said Mr. CLAY, who was second to Commodore Perry in his memorable conflict? He too has fallen, and his family, it is within the knowledge of some of us, is suffering from the want of the necessary means of aid. Turning to the State from which he came, where, Mr. C. asked, is the widow of Colonel White, born to splendid fortune, the whole of which was expended in the Revolutionary war? She is old, and in need of aid. I have, said he, a petition to present to this House from this venerable lady, making the most feeling appeal to Congress in her behalf; yet, in answering her letter, assuring her of the pleasure I should have in presenting her memorial to the House, I did not venture to hold out to her the most distant hope of success in her application. Look abroad, said Mr. C., in all the walks of life, and see how many indigent families there are of individuals who have rendered most distinguished services to their country. Shall we select the families of those who wore epaulettes on their shoulders and swords by their sides, for peculiar favor, whilst we leave to pine in penury the families of those who have spent their lives in civil service? Not, Mr. C. said, that he would extend the principle of pensions to civil life; but he would restrict it to its present limit, within which it is safe. There was nothing more insinuating than applications of this description. But, he said, look to what they had led in other countries. Look to the pension list of England, swelled to an amount enormously great. Nay, look to our own pension list, already amounting to nearly two millions of dollars annually. Let us not, said Mr. CLAY, surrender ourselves to the captivating eloquence which we have heard on this occasion, on all sides of the House; let us rather be influenced by reason, principle, and precedent. Let us put some limit to this principle of gratitude, however justly it has been extolled. When the honorable gentleman from South Carolina, now no more, first introduced a bill containing this provision, as well as the one which passed for the relief of the widow and children of Commodore Perry, I told the gentleman, said Mr. C., that we were going too far. When I appealed to his better judgment, and pointed out the fatal consequences of this precedent, he consented to strike out the provision for the mother. I hope we too shall, on this occasion, availing ourselves of his enlightened wisdom, pursue the course which it dictated to him, and refuse to pass this bill.

JANUARY, 1824.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

H. OF R.

Mr. RANDOLPH, of Virginia, rose for the single purpose of asking the honorable gentleman who had just sat down how, upon his own principles, he reconciled his support of the bill making provision for the widow and children of Commodore Perry with his opposition to this bill? Whether the bill first mentioned was not the very departure from principle against which the gentleman has warned the House this morning?

Mr. CLAY said it was a departure from the general rule. But, having already departed from it, shall we make another and much wider departure? With regard to that bill, however, Mr. C. said, he had rendered it no special support, and he did not know whether or not he had voted upon it. It was a departure, but it was a safe departure when compared with that which was now proposed.

Mr. HAMILTON said that, in rising to reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, he could not but

H. OF R.

Relief of Sarah Perry.

JANUARY, 1824.

feel a foreboding how hopeless the attempt must be to break the spell of that eloquence for which, if he might so speak, this House had a sort of habitual deference and admiration. But he could not permit the objections which had been offered to the bill to pass entirely unnoticed. I wish, said Mr. H., the gentleman, before he had spoken hypothetically as to the danger of the precedent which would be afforded if you granted the proposed annuity to Mrs. Perry, had looked into your statute book, where he would find on record an act granting pensions to the four daughters of the Count de Grasse, a foreigner, who fought, it is true, in our battles, but who was nevertheless commissioned by a foreign Prince, to whom he may be said to have been a stipendiary. To grant pensions in these cases, and to refuse one in the instance before you, appears to involve a species of inconsistency and ingratitude which cannot but be regarded as altogether monstrous. The gentleman asks, triumphantly, where these cases are to end, as if there was always something painfully irksome in the discharge of these obligations. I hope, for the honor of my country, they may never end; for, so long as we are blessed with such achievements as the victory on Lake Erie, more especially in time of war, the country can never be poor, in any just sense of the term. I am also asked by him if there is no other instance of services of a similar character rendered to the country? I say, yes; and that, moreover, if the mother of McDonough were ever placed in a like situation of exigency and bereavement with the parent of your deceased hero, under the preliminary principles which I laid down in this discussion, I would, without hesitation, vote a similar annuity for her relief. The gentleman from Kentucky had been also pleased, Mr. H. said, (not with the intention, he presumed, but with the direct effect of flinging unnecessary prejudice on this appeal,) to recur to the pension list of England, to sustain him in his money-saving doctrine. But, until he could prove a verisimilitude between the form of that Government and our own, he would in no way be benefited by his reference. In Great Britain it was true that the stream of public bounty, instead of refreshing the legitimate departments of the public service, is diverted into channels into which it ought never to flow. There is a species of instinctive corruption in that Government; for, in order to preserve its artificial checks and balances, the ministry, by a perversion of the public rewards, are compelled in this way to secure an effective majority in Parliament. But, in a Government of responsibility like ours, where was the danger of these evils? They could never exist until our institutions were swept into ruin and oblivion.

The gentleman has also, said Mr. H., brought out, in its full, and, I presume, as he regards it, its fearful amount, the sum which we now pay on account of Revolutionary pensions. This, he says, has been swelled to two millions of dollars. And, sir, to whom is this sum paid? To the very men who won the whole fee simple of the estate out of which you pay this modicum in the way of a life interest—to those who gave you the splendid aggregate, and many of them at the price of their blood. But, the patriotic apprehension of the gentleman may be soothed by the consciousness that time is rapidly diminishing this sum which he contemplates with such appalling emotions. Yes, sir, said Mr. H., the moment is not far distant when not one of that venerable band will be left to tell us by their presence how much we owe them. It is then, when stung by a sense of ingratitude, we shall revive each long-forgotten testimony of high service and generous devotion. I wish, as the gentleman has spoken as to amounts somewhat with the precision of figures, that he had condescended to have opened an account current between the United States and our deceased hero, and have ascertained, in a pecuniary point of view, on which side the balance resides. He would have found that the munitions of war captured by Perry would three times over pay all the charges of his family, or those yet desired to be made on the Treasury of this country. The very bounty and spurs he took from your enemy would pay this pittance to his mother.

Mr. KREMER, of Pennsylvania, now rose and said, he did not calculate that he was able to throw much new light on the subject; but he was impressed with the history of this venerable lady, whose son had perished in the service of his country. She had no other prop or stay. That son had, by his services, enabled us to wrest the savage tomahawk from the hands of the Indian, and had quieted the fears of women and children through hundreds of miles of the frontier. She could point to her son, and say to the people, "This my son dried your tears, and drove your fears away." If we want soldiers, we must give them a love for heroic actions. You must be able to say to your sons, "Behold that venerable lady; she gave birth to a gallant son, who fought in defence of his country. He died and left her poor, and now that country gratefully maintains her." Would not the House enable American parents to say this? He need not wait for their answer. He wanted, he said, to reply to the honorable Speaker, by a single word. To compare the services of a common soldier with those of such a commander as Perry, was like comparing the strength and size of a child to those of a giant. He had laid his bosom bare to every danger on the seas, and even in the tented field, while others staid at home, basking in the sunshine of Executive favor. Mr. K. said he should not longer trouble the House, and resumed his seat.

After a few observations between Mr. COBB and Mr. HAMILTON, in relation to the present situation of Mrs. Perry,

The question was taken on striking out the enacting clause, (in effect to reject the bill) and carried, ayes 121; but, after being reported to the House,

Mr. ARCHER, of Virginia, moved to recommit the bill, with a view to ascertain whether some modification of it could not be made, by a limitation of the term of the pension or otherwise, so as to meet the views of the House.

JANUARY, 1824.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

This motion prevailed, but not by any considerable majority.

And, on motion, the House adjourned.

MONDAY, January 12.

Mr. MERCER presented a petition of George Taylor, of the State of Virginia, praying that measures may be taken to compensate him for spoliations committed on his lawful commerce, on the high seas, by French cruisers, between the years 1793 and 1800; the United States having, in the convention of 1800, absolved the Government of France from all liability on account of said spoliations.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Philadelphia, praying for the erection of a "breakwater," at the mouth of the Delaware, for the security of the vessels navigating the same.

Mr. FARRELLY presented a memorial of the inhabitants of the county of Erie, and parts adjacent, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying that measures may be adopted to remove the bar at the entrance of the harbor of Presque Isle.

Mr. EDDY presented a memorial of the committee appointed by, and acting for, the manufacturers of cotton, and others interested in the manufacture of that article, in the State of Rhode Island, praying that additional duties may be imposed on certain cotton fabrics imported from foreign countries.

Mr. LITTLE presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Baltimore, praying for the passage of an act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy in the United States; which memorial was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MERCER presented a memorial of the Common Council of Alexandria, praying for an increase and extension of their corporate powers, in the manner, and to effect the purposes, set forth in their memorial.

Mr. M. also presented a petition of the Board of Aldermen and Board of Common Council in the City of Washington, praying for certain alterations in, and amendments to, their act of incorporation.

The said memorial and petition were referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, who were, on the 9th ultimo, instructed, by resolutions, adopted on the motion of Mr. BRENT, to make sundry inquiries in relation to land claims in the State of Louisiana, made a detailed report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. R. also made an unfavorable report on so much of the petition of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, referred on the 12th ultimo, as relates to an extension of a right of pre-emption to certain settlers on public lands in that State; which report was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom the subject has been referred, reported a bill to provide for the sale of lands conveyed to the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, made a report on the petition of George B. R. Grove, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of Joseph Wheaton, for payment of the expenses incurred in removing, with the Government, from Philadelphia to Washington, in 1800, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles, viz: "An act for the relief of Josiah Hook, jr.," and "An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Joseph C. Boyd;" in which bills the Senate ask the concurrence of this House.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives, of December 24, requesting the President of the United States to lay before the House such information as he may possess, and which may be disclosed without injury to the public good, relative to the determination of any Sovereign, or combination of Sovereigns, to assist Spain in the subjugation of her late colonies on the American continent; and whether any Government of Europe is disposed or determined to oppose any aid or assistance which such Sovereign or combination of Sovereigns may afford to Spain, for the subjugation of her late colonies, above mentioned; I have to state, that I possess no information on that subject, not known to Congress, which can be disclosed without injury to the public good.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1824.

The Message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion of Mr. Cook, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of better defining the boundaries of the Edwardsville and Sangamo land districts, in the State of Illinois. And that the same committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing to the administrators of Michael Jones, deceased, late register of the land office at Kaskaskia, additional compensation for his services.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, submitted the following resolution, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, viz:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to prepare and report a bill appropriating twenty thousand dollars, to be expended in laying out and opening a road from Detroit, in the Territory of Michigan, to the Ohio State line, where the road from Detroit to Fort Meigs crosses the same.

Mr. VANCE said that he could not doubt, from the liberality shown to other Territories, that the House would direct the proposed inquiry. Every gentleman in the least acquainted with the situation of the Territory of Michigan, must know that it presented the most vulnerable point on our frontier, and most needed all means for public protection.

H. OF R.

Marquis of Lafayette—Relief to Land Purchasers.

JANUARY, 1824.

On motion of Mr. FULLER,

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the instruction of midshipmen, and other warrant officers of the Navy, in the intervals of public service, in nautical science, practical navigation, and marine tactics.

Resolved, That the same committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the scientific and practical instruction of junior surgeons, and surgeons' mates, at one or more of the naval stations of the United States.

Mr. SCOTT laid the following resolutions on the table for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to this House all the books and reports of the several Boards of Commissioners, and recorders of land titles, made out and transmitted to the Treasury Department, under the several acts of Congress, and the instructions predicated thereon, relating to the adjustment of land titles and claims in the (then district of Louisiana, and Territory of Missouri) now State of Missouri, and Territory of Arkansas, whether the said books and reports relate to the confirmation or rejection of said claims.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House a copy of the instructions given by the Treasury Department, under the eighth section of the act of Congress, of the 21st April, 1806, entitled "An act supplementary to an act, entitled 'An act for ascertaining and adjusting the titles and claims to lands within the (then) territory of Orleans, and district of Louisiana,' to the several Boards of Commissioners appointed under the act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1805, for the ascertaining and adjusting the titles and claims to lands within the (then) aforesaid Territories, now States of Louisiana and Missouri, and Territory of Arkansas.

On motion of Mr. CALL,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of allowing a salary to the collector of the port of Pensacola.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry at Fernandina, on the coast of Florida.

Mr. COOK submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That every petition presented and proposed to be referred to any of the standing committees of the House, shall be laid on the Clerk's table by the member having the same in charge, with his name endorsed thereon, with a designation of the committee to which it is proposed to refer it, and the Clerk shall, according to such designation, send it to the proper committee.

Mr. SANDFORD laid the following resolution on the table for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That Peter Hagner, Esq., Third Auditor, be requested to lay before this House any information within his knowledge of the claim of John Holiday, for a wagon and five horses, said to be destroyed while in the service of the United States, by the hostile Creek Indians; and whether said John Holiday received any pay for the use of the said wagon and horses while in the service of the United States, previous to the destruction of the same.

Mr. ISACKS submitted the following resolution for consideration, which was read and ordered to lie upon the table:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reviving the laws allowing a pension to the widows and orphans of such officers and privates of the Army who may have fallen in action, died in service, or of wounds received in service during the late war, so as to continue the said pensions for the term of five years longer after the expiration of the first terms, respectively.

The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Joseph Boyd, deceased," was read twice, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Engrossed bills of the following titles, viz: An act for the relief of Garrett Fountain; An act to extend the time limited for the settlement of private land claims in the Territory of Florida; were, respectively, read the third time, and passed.

THE MARQUIS LAFAYETTE.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Maryland, submitted the following preamble and joint resolution; which was read, and ordered to lie upon the table, viz:

Whereas, that distinguished champion of freedom, and hero of our Revolution, the friend and associate of Washington, the Marquis De Lafayette, a volunteer General Officer in our Revolutionary war, has expressed an anxious desire to visit this country, the independence of which his valor, blood, and treasure, were so instrumental in achieving: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Marquis De Lafayette the expression of those sentiments of profound respect, gratitude, and affectionate attachment, which are cherished towards him by the Government and people of this country; and to assure him that the execution of his wish and intention to visit this country, will be hailed by the people and Government with patriotic pride and joy.

And be it further resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to ascertain from the Marquis De Lafayette the time when it may be most agreeable for him to perform his visit, and that he offer to the Marquis a conveyance to this country in one of our national ships.

The resolution was read the first time, and ordered to lie on the table.

RELIEF OF LAND PURCHASERS.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, who were instructed, on the 18th ult., to inquire into the expediency of reviving, and continuing in force, the provisions of the act, entitled "An act for the relief of the purchasers of public lands, prior to the 1st of July, 1820, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table. The report is as follows:

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

By the act of the 2d of March, 1821, purchasers were allowed until the 30th of September following to avail themselves of the law referred to in the resolution. From some delay in transmitting the necessary instructions to the several land offices, the limited time which was given to file the applications for the benefit of that law, and the remote situation of some of the claimants from the land offices where such applications were required to be filed, Congress, believing a revival of the act of 1821 expedient, passed the supplementary act of the 20th of April, 1822. That law gave all those who had not availed themselves of the provisions of the original act an opportunity to do so, at any time prior to the 30th of September, 1822. Notwithstanding this extension of time, it was discovered, from numerous petitions presented to Congress, at their last session, that a large class of cases existed, and which were necessary to be provided for, where individuals intended to have availed themselves of the benefit of those acts, but, from accident or misfortune, had been prevented from filing their applications in due time. For these cases, provision was made by the act of Congress of the 3d of April, 1823. Your committee believe that these laws have afforded a sufficient opportunity to all who were attentive to their own interest to have obtained the relief provided by them; and they have no information which would, in their opinion, justify recommending to Congress the expediency or propriety of reviving and continuing in force the provisions of the act referred to in the resolution. We therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient, at this time, to revive and continue in force the provisions of the act of Congress, entitled "An act for the relief of the purchasers of the public lands prior to the 1st of July, 1820."

REVOLUTIONARY PENSIONS.

Mr. EDWARDS, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, who were instructed, on the 26th ultimo, "to inquire into the expediency of fixing by law the net amount of annual income which shall disqualify any applicant from being placed on the pension list, under the acts of the 18th of March, 1818, and 1st of May, 1820," made a report against the expediency of fixing the said amount; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table. The report is as follows:

That, by the act of 18th March, 1818, the Secretary of War is authorized to place on the pension list every person who served during the war of the Revolution, in the manner and for the term therein specified; provided he is in such "reduced circumstances as to need the assistance of his country for support." That, by the supplemental act, of May 1, 1820, the applicant is required to exhibit a schedule and valuation of his property, in order to entitle himself to the benefits of the act of March, 1818, above mentioned; and it is made "the duty of the Secretary of War to cause to be struck from the list of pensioners every person who shall not, in his opinion, be in such indigent circumstances as to be unable to support himself without the assistance of his country." The design of Congress, evidently, was to extend the benefits of these acts only to those whose condition in life, both as to property and bodily infirmity, rendered them dependent on charity for the means of subsistence. Your committee believe that this rule has been uniformly observed in their execution; and think it could not, in good policy, be departed from. The rule then being to grant relief to the necessitous only, the committee are of opinion that its equal and just operation can only be secured by trusting its application to the sound discretion of the Secretary of War. The necessities of the applicant do not depend simply upon the amount of property he has; but, also, on the number of his family; his bodily strength or weakness; and the dearth or cheapness of articles of subsistence in the portion of country in which he lives. Considerations like these must obviously be referred to the discretion of some one. To fix any amount of property or income as the rule by which applicants shall be excluded, would introduce a principle very unjust in its operation. The incomes of individuals vary according to their industry, economy, and good management; and the improvident would be benefited, while the prudent and industrious might be excluded by such a rule. No amount of property could be adopted as the rule; because, what would be a competent support for one, might be too little or too much for another. The committee, therefore, believe it impracticable to adopt any rule of valuation which would be just in its operation, or which would not involve great difficulty in its execution; and submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of this subject.

SURVEYS FOR ROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to postpone the orders of the day, to take up the bill for obtaining the necessary surveys on the subject of roads and canals. The motion was carried, ayes 77, noes 55, and the House went into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL, of Pennsylvania, observed, that the subject of internal improvements, by the General Government, had for a long time been before the nation in a variety of shapes; and that its execution, in part, had only been retarded in consequence of opinions entertained by the present Chief Magistrate and his predecessor, as to the Constitutional powers of Congress to carry into effect a system of internal improvements. In support of the power of Congress, many resolutions have been adopted in this House; and two bills, predicated on such a power, passed both branches of the National Legislature. These bills, we all know, were rejected by the veto of the Executive; but nothing could be more highly recommended than the expediency of the measure, both by Mr. Madison and President Monroe. They deemed it of sufficient importance to produce a change in the Constitution. The language of the President, on this subject, is as strong as it could be; he said, if the right exists, it ought to be forthwith exercised.

As to the expediency of the measure, said Mr. H., I need not speak at large; the experience of the world tests the utility of good roads, canals, and bridges. By means of these, the inland trade of China has grown nearly equal to the whole market of Europe. It has become familiar to us, on this subject, that, in England, the Duke of Bridgewater first obtained a charter in the beginning of the reign of George III., to make a canal for the purpose of carrying coal from his estate to Manchester; the benefit of this canal was so great, that it gave encouragement for others, and George III. lived to see more than a hundred canals in his kingdom; some of them passing through hills, by tunnels, and others over valleys and rivers, by aqueducts. By means of these, there is an internal communication between most of the great towns; and there are few places in England more than fifteen miles from a water communication. The late Union Canal, in Scotland, which opens a communication between the two populous cities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, is of a size sufficient for large vessels. In Holland and the Netherlands, canals are said to be as common as roads in other countries. It would be an easy task to go into some detail, but I consider it unnecessary, the subject is so well understood.

There is no country, said Mr. H., capable of higher improvements than this, nor any society of people to whom such a measure would be of greater advantage, owing to the extent of our country, and the variety of its soil and climate. The expense of transportation in this country is far beyond what is generally supposed; and the difference of expense between water transportation and land conveyance is exceedingly great. The commissioners from Maryland, who were appointed to explore the river Susquehanna, took much pains to acquire accurate knowledge on this subject; and they say, that the expense of transportation on a canal amounts to no more than one cent a ton per mile, or one dollar for a ton for every hundred miles; the cost of transportation by land conveyance is thirty-two dollars for the same distance; this is more than thirty to one in favor of the canal transportation. To give some idea of the inland trade of the country, and the expense of transportation, I beg leave, said Mr. H., to read a few lines from the report of the gentlemen from Maryland, who examined the Susquehanna. [Mr. H. read the following extract:]

"Before we proceed to describe the routes by which the waters of the Susquehanna may be connected with those of the Ohio river, it may be well to furnish some general outlines of the value of that trade to Pittsburg and the West, which would be the inducement for effecting a canal communication between those waters.

"The town of Pittsburg, owing to the great advantages of its situation, near the highest navigable point of one of the principal rivers of the West, has long been considered as the principal depot of all the western commerce. In the year 1820, no less than fifteen hundred tons of merchandise were sent from the seaboard to the country beyond the Mississippi, through the towns of Pittsburg and Louisville, on the Ohio river. During the years of 1817, 1818, and 1819, the expenses of transportation from Philadelphia, over land to Pittsburg, amounted to one million five hundred and sixty thousand dollars each year, making four millions six hundred and eighty thousand dollars for the transportation of merchandise distributed from a single depot in the Western country, in three years. It has been estimated that, in the year, there were, on an average, two thousand five hundred and fifty-five wagons employed in the transportation of merchandise from Philadelphia to Pittsburg: that they carried eighty-nine thousand four hundred and twenty-five hundred weight, which were valued at seventeen millions eight hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars. And we have it from the most intelligent and respectable authority, that even within the last year, there has been sent from the city of Baltimore, by land, to Pittsburg and the Ohio river, merchandise to the value of twelve millions of dollars."

All this trade (continued Mr. H.) is in one section of the country. I shall not attempt to make any estimate of the annual expense of transportation in the different parts of the United States where canals might be made.

I wish one principle, said he, in relation to canals, to be perfectly understood, and I will illustrate it by ascertained facts. It is this, that canals may be highly advantageous to the nation, although not profitable to the proprietors of them. The expense of the transportation of between seventeen and eighteen millions worth of merchandise, from Philadelphia to Pittsburg, is $1,560,000; merchandise to the value of twelve millions has been sent from Baltimore to Pittsburg and the Ohio in one year. The expense of this transportation would be about one million; making the amount of the expense of the transportation from the two cities, about two millions and a half; there are about three thousand three hundred wagons employed, and as many men, and upwards of thirteen thousand horses.

To remove all possible mistakes, as to calculations, instead of thirty to one, say there is five to one in favor of a water transportation; this would save the annual sum of two millions in the expense of transportation. Suppose the General Government should complete water communications from Philadelphia and Baltimore to Pittsburg, and they should cost two millions, and that the annual amount of toll should not exceed one hundred thousand dollars, the General Government, as proprietors, would sustain a loss of twenty thousand dollars, but the whole operation would be greatly for the advantage of the nation. The consumers of the Western country, or wherever they might be, would gain annually two millions, and no body would be losers; for, in that case, the services for these two millions would not be performed; the nation would gain by the diversion of labor and capital, worth two millions a year, to other useful objects, say to the extension of cultivation and to manufacture. As the profits of different pursuits in this country are pretty much on a level, the same level and capital, which yielded two millions a year in transportation, would produce the same result in other pursuits. The addition of produce, and the value added to raw materials by manufacturing them, amounting to the two millions, or very near that sum, would be a clear gain to the nation, as so much would be added to the general mass of national wealth. Let this principle, said Mr. H., be applied to the different sections of the Union, where it is practicable to construct canals; and who can too highly appreciate,

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

or calculate too largely upon the inevitable consequences!

Such objects are national, and do not fall within the sphere of State jurisdiction. A State, in making improvements, looks only to the prosperity of that particular State. But the object is national, when it transcends the boundaries of States, and embraces the interest of the whole Union, or large sections of it. Ten or twelve States are immediately interested in the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers; but what individual State can be expected to improve the navigation of these streams? It is the same with the contemplated canal along the seacoast; but will each State ever feel an interest sufficient to execute the part within its own limits?

I have before me, said Mr. H., an author of great celebrity, which briefly treats on the subject of highways and canals. He says, that no object is of higher national concern, and mentions their great advantages in France, and that the people complained of the expenses and labor when they were commenced; but, as soon as they became acquainted with their benefits, they blessed the authors of the design. There is no power in the Government to counteract the disadvantages arising from distances, except by improving navigable rivers, and by good roads, canals, and bridges. By means of these, the people in the extreme borders of a country are brought nearer together, and become acquainted with each other in the course of profitable dealing. They encourage the cultivation of the remote parts of a country, by diminishing the time, danger, and expense of carriage; and they are advantageous to towns and adjacent countries, by opening new markets. A singular prejudice against improvements is recorded in England. It is not much beyond half a century since some of the counties, in the neighborhood of London, petitioned the Parliament against the extension of turnpike roads into the remoter part of the country, which they supposed, from the cheapness of labor, would be able to undersell them in the London market, and would, thereby, reduce their rents, and ruin their cultivation; but, on experience, they soon found their notions to be erroneous, and the contrary was the result in both cases.

Whatever produces a saving of labor, must, in a greater or less degree, be beneficial to every part of a country. It may be said, that the people of this country are benefited by the good roads and canals, and labor-saving machines in Europe, because, in consequence of these, they can buy foreign articles cheaper than they could otherwise do. The people, far in the interior, are benefited as well as those in the towns, by lighthouses, and all the regulations in favor of commerce, because, in consequence of these, the expense of transportation is lessened, and they can get a higher price for whatever they have to sell for exportation, and can purchase, at a cheaper rate, whatever foreign articles they may want for consumption.

I have already, said Mr. H., endeavored to explain that canals may be of great advantage to the nation, although not profitable to their proprietors; but, even as respects them, some canals would yield a profit immediately, and all of them would become lucrative in a reasonable time, if proper routes are selected. On this point I will call the attention of the Committee to a few of the British canals. The extract which I will read, contains the original cost of shares of canal stock, the present prices, and annual dividends:

	Cost.	Present price.	Divi- dends.
Birmingham - - -	£25	£535	£20
Chesterfield - - -	100	120	8
Coventry - - -	100	999	44
Erewart - - -	100	1000	58
Grand Junction - -	100	218	9
Leeds and Liverpool -	100	278	10
Leicester - - -	100	260	10
Oxford - - -	100	640	32
Staffordshire and Worcester	100	642	40
Trent and Mersey - -	200	900	75
Warwick and Birmingham -	100	210	11
Warwick and Napton -	100	235	10 10
Loughborough - - -	—	2400	119
Melton and Mowbray -	—	170	9 10
Mercer and Irwell - -	—	650	30

The first price of the three last is not given, but I am informed that it was but £100 each. Such exorbitant gain cannot be expected here, but large profits, in some instances, might reasonably be calculated upon. I have no hesitation in believing that a canal along the Atlantic coast would produce more than six per cent. immediately after its completion. The grand New York canal, so far, presents the most flattering prospects. The expediency of adopting some system of internal improvements cannot be questioned; and, as to the mode and manner of its execution, it is not required, for the support of the present bill, to go into any discussion; for, whatever mode may be finally resorted to, there is one preparatory step to be taken, and that is, to procure the necessary information. This will be useful to the General Government, to the States, and to individuals. The present bill is merely of this character; it presents a measure that must precede the actual undertaking upon any enlarged scale.

The committee who reported the bill, said Mr. H., were under the impression that it would be more efficacious than otherwise, to leave the routes to be surveyed entirely to the discretion of the President, and that it would be of no advantage to designate them in the bill. The President will unquestionably act, in the first instance, on the most prominent objects as a basis for the construction of roads and canals and the improving of water courses, in order to benefit internal commerce among the States, and to facilitate and give security to the common defence of the nation. For this purpose he can call to his assistance any of the corps of engineers or practical civil engineers, who possess many advantages, from the explorations they have already made. In this respect the present bill differs from the one reported at the last session, which provided for plans and estimates for a national road from the city of Washington to New Orleans, and for canals from the harbor of Boston to the South, along the Atlantic seacoast, and to connect the waters of the Ohio above with those below the falls at Louisville; Lake Erie with the Ohio river; the tide waters of the Potomac with the same stream at Cumberland; and for communications between the Susquehanna and the rivers Seneca and Genesee, which empty into Lake Ontario, and between the Tennessee and Savannah, and also between the Tennessee, Alabama, and Tombigbee rivers.

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

In favor of this bill, I think I am safe in saying that there was a majority in this House, at the last session, but owing to the advanced period of the session, when it was reached, it was thought imprudent to press for a decision at that time. There were obstacles against the passage of the bill, at the last session, which do not now exist. It was supposed by some, that, because it looked forward to a system of internal improvements, the President would not give his sanction to it, and that it would be an unnecessary consumption of time to deliberate long upon it. That impression is now entirely removed, not only by the acts of the President, during the last Summer, but by his Message. Under his general powers he authorized a part of the corps of engineers to assist in making plans and estimates for the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, and for a canal from some point in Jersey to the Hudson river; and also to assist the Maryland commissioners in their project of making a canal from the Susquehanna to Baltimore, and along the margin of the river. And in addition to these acts he has, in his Message, explicitly adopted, as well the principle contained in the bill before us, as the manner of carrying it into effect. I allude to that part of the Message which relates to the connexion of the waters of the Chesapeake and Ohio, by one continued canal, and also the connecting of the waters of the Ohio with those of Lake Erie by canals. If these could be accomplished, he says, it would be impossible to calculate the beneficial consequences that would result from them. He submits it to the consideration of Congress, if it may not be advisable to authorize, by an adequate appropriation, the employment of a suitable number of the officers of the corps of engineers, to examine the unexplored ground, during the next season, and to report their opinion thereon. The present bill, said Mr. H., is nothing more than an enlargement of the views and objects contained in the Message of the President. I shall not raise the Constitutional question on this bill. The honorable gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MERCER) the other day suggested a different method of accomplishing the objects of this bill. He said, if I understood him rightly, that the President had full authority over the subject, and that it was only necessary to add a little to the appropriation of the Quartermaster General's department. In answer to this, the first remark that occurs is, that the President views the subject differently, or he would not have asked for the authority to be granted to him; and even if he had a sufficiency of money at command, he would not feel himself justified in embarking in a great project of this kind; without the countenance of Congress, no one could expect it. If the gentleman meant that the appropriation for the Quartermaster General might be increased, designating at the same time the object for which the increase is made, he will perceive that his method, as far as it goes, would embrace the principle of the present bill; the only essential difference would be, that, in that case, there would be no authority to employ two or more skilful civil engineers, which is of importance. Mr. Wright, and many others, are practical men, and might, it is presumed, be occasionally employed. If it was meant simply to increase the appropriation alluded to, without saying for what purpose, I should think it liable to objections; on that account, the object should be expressed—the people should understand what is intended by the bill we are about to pass.

The resources of the nation, in times of peace, said Mr. H., cannot be engaged to greater advantage, than in public improvements. These will increase the quantity of productions, by saving labor, and opening new markets. They will be permanent, and go down to posterity to be lastingly enjoyed, while the objects of most other expenditures may be forgotten. The Federal Government has now been in existence for upwards of thirty years, and yet, under all the natural advantages of the country, and notwithstanding the high political inducements, if we pass the limits of this District, and go into the interior of the nation, possessing a population of ten millions, there are scarcely any traces of the Government to be seen. No attention has been paid to the heavy expense of transportation; the rivers and other waters have been permitted to remain in their natural state—when, at the same time, every one acknowledges the incalculable advantages that would result from improvements in times of peace; and that, in the event of a single war, more would be lost for the want of them, than would be sufficient to make all those of the most prominent character. This would excite surprise if we were not acquainted with the reason of the delay; that it is owing to Constitutional scruples on the part of the Executive, and not to any unwillingness of the people, or their representatives, to undertake the execution of public works.

I sincerely believe, said Mr. H., that the people are fully prepared for, and that the spirit of the nation would now justify, the expenditure of large sums on great national objects. The expense of twenty or twenty-five millions ought to form no objection: for, if the debt should go down to posterity, it will carry with it a legacy of a thousand times its value. We are under no pressing obligation to discharge it immediately; but admit that we are, of what consequence, compared with the object, would such a sum be, when its expenditure would be spread over a period of ten or fifteen years? We can never expect to see more prosperous times for the commencement of public undertakings. If this subject is slumbered over for centuries, the same reasons will be urged against public works that are now.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

It is owing, sir, said Mr. H., to an unfortunate indifference, and not to the want of ability, that public undertakings are so often neglected, in different countries. England had capacity sufficient to have performed all her great works long before she did. France, also, has long since had sufficient capacity for this purpose, but England is more than half a century in advance of her. The late Emperor of France, although he may have committed political errors, saw this subject in its true light, and, notwithstanding his numerous wars, he paid unremitting attention to public improvements wherever his dominion extended. In reading the accounts which are given of him in his misfortunes at St. Helena, I could not but admire the remarks of that most extraordinary man on this subject. In speaking of the Allied Powers, he said: "At least, they cannot take from me, hereafter, the great public works which I have executed, the roads which I have made over the Alps, and the seas which I have united. They cannot place their feet to improve where mine have not been before. Thank God, of these they cannot deprive me."

In order to show the concern which the people in different parts of this country have manifested on this subject, I beg leave to mention the objects which have been referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals within the last two years. A reference was made to inquire into the expediency of exploring a certain section of the State of Maine, for the purpose of ascertaining, by survey, the proper route for a road, and whether it would be useful in a military point of view, from the Penobscot river, at or near Bangor, to some point in the eastern boundary of the State.

A similar reference was made in favor of a survey being made to ascertain whether it would be proper for the General Government to aid in the construction of a canal in the town of Gloucester, in Massachusetts, to connect the waters of Boston and Ipswich Bay, in order to avoid the dangerous and tedious passage round Cape Ann.

The Legislature of New York passed the following resolution, which was referred:

"In Assembly, April 10th, 1822.

"Resolved, (if the honorable the Senate concur therein,) That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to call the attention of the National Government to the great importance and public utility of improving the navigation of the Hudson, so as to open a free communication and direct intercourse for vessels of all descriptions, with the internal canal navigation of the State of New York."

Resolutions were referred instructing the committee to inquire whether it is expedient for the United States to give aid to the Delaware and Raritan Canal Company, and to the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal Company. Petitions and resolutions were referred, earnestly soliciting the attention of Congress to the navigation of the Potomac river, and its connexion with the western waters, with a view of extending the inland navigation to the Lakes.

A memorial from the Legislature of the State of Alabama was referred, praying aid of the General Government to connect several of their valuable streams. It also called the attention of Congress to the communication of the Pensacola bay with that of Mobile.

A resolution has been offered at this session to inquire into the expediency of opening a canal between the navigable waters of the Tennessee and Coosa rivers.

There were also, said Mr. HEMPHILL, other references of minor importance. The measure proposed by the present bill, continued Mr. H. was recommended by the able and valuable report of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the 4th of April, 1803, in the following words: "As an important basis of the general system, an immediate authority might also be given to take the surveys and levels of the routes of the most important roads and canals which are contemplated; a work always useful, and by which the practicability and expense of the undertakings would be ascertained with much more correctness than in the report; a moderate appropriation will be sufficient for these several objects."

The execution of this measure will present to Congress a full view of the subject. It will lay the foundation of a well digested and regular system, and it will require but little money, compared with the importance of the information. Nothing can be more useful than an accurate knowledge of the natural capacities of the country for improvements; to be made acquainted as well with the interior as exterior; to possess a knowledge of all the valuable streams, the distances of their tide waters, the impediments to navigation which may be in them, and their capacity of being connected to each other by good roads and canals; to ascertain the routes by which the Atlantic could be connected with the western waters and with the Lakes, whether by the Potomac, or by the Susquehanna and Alleghany, or by both; to know what improvement would cause the greatest advantage to be derived from the St. Lawrence; what would be necessary to perfect the navigation of the Hudson river for vessels of all descriptions; what would be the distances of roads and canals, to make a connected communication along the seaboard, from Maine to New Orleans; by what means the navigation of the Mississippi could be rendered less dangerous than at present; what would be the distances and character of the country over which national roads ought to be constructed. Such information, accompanied with plans and estimates of expense, would be of the highest importance; for, whether the improvements of the country are to be made by the individual States, or by the General Government, under its present Constitution or by means of a change of the Constitution, this information would be essentially necessary. All, therefore, said Mr. H. that are in favor of improving the country by any of the means that have been suggested, can, with consistency, vote for the present bill.

Mr. H. made other remarks, to show the propriety of obtaining the information required, through the Corps of Engineers, with the assistance of two or more civil engineers.

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

JANUARY, 1824.

In concluding, Mr. HEMPHILL moved that the blank in the third section of the bill be filled with $30,000.

Mr. P. P. BARBOUR offered a motion (which, by the rules of the House, superseded that to fill the blank,) to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. He did this, he said, in all fairness, that the sense of the House might first be obtained on the general principles involved in the bill, before any thing should be determined as to its details. Wishing, also, to deliver his views on the subject, and the hour being now rather late, he moved that the Committee should rise, and ask leave to sit again.

These motions, in the course of the conversation which followed, Mr. BARBOUR withdrew.

Mr. CLAY (the Speaker) took occasion to observe, that the discussion ought to be left free upon the broad principle of the bill, before going into a discussion of its details. Two questions of principle, he conceived, were involved in this bill: first, whether Congress possessed the Constitutional power to legislate on the subject of internal improvement; and, secondly, whether it was expedient for Congress to exercise that power. Until it should be settled what was the opinion of the House on both these points, it was useless to go into a discussion of dollars and cents, in regard to the amount of appropriation to be included in the bill.

Mr. MERCER, on the other hand, did not think that this bill was calculated in any manner to test the opinion of the House on the great questions of the power of Congress in regard to internal improvement, and the expediency of exercising it. He conceived it might be extremely proper to employ the topographical engineers in these surveys, without involving the Constitutional question at all, and indeed that they could not be better employed. Mr. M. adverted to the opinions of the Executive on this subject, which he said had not that he knew of undergone any change. It was well known that the President had always asserted the power of the General Government to appropriate money to complete roads and canals, but had also expressed the opinion that Congress had no jurisdiction over the territory of the several States for the purpose of making them. But this bill, Mr. M. added, did not involve that principle, and he did not see that the discussion of it would now be in place. He hoped, before the session was at an end, that a bill, which did involve the question, would be fairly before the House, on which the question might be tested.

Mr. CLAY said he knew it was possible, according to one interpretation of the Constitution, to pass this bill without involving, in the discussion, the general principle of the power of the Government in regard to internal improvement. But he thought, for his part, that the House could not fairly give its approbation to this bill, unless it also gave its assent to the general power. For what, he asked, does the bill propose? The making of certain surveys, with a view to opening channels for the distribution of the means of the Government, and, through the Post Office, the communication of intelligence from one part of the country to the other. If the Government has no right to open these communications, it has no right to make the surveys which are preparatory to them. He adverted to the fact that when, some sixteen years ago, a proposition had been made in the Senate for authorizing a survey for a canal around the falls of the Ohio, a member, now high in office, was of opinion that, so absolutely was the Government divested of the power over internal improvement, it could not authorize a survey looking to such an object. Mr. C. said, that he was one of those who do believe the power of making roads and canals to belong to the Government. There were some who differed from him, and deduced the power to give money for such objects from the power to appropriate public money; whilst he considered the power to make the improvements as drawing after it the power to make the appropriations for them. According to the view which he took of the subject, the power of the Government in regard to internal improvements was a necessary and indispensable topic of discussion which this bill involved. It would be better, then, he thought to bring on the general discussion first, and after the House should be satisfied of its power, to take into consideration the sum of money which it might be necessary to appropriate to these national purposes.

Mr. BARBOUR said that, on this, as on every occasion on which he was called upon to take part in public affairs, he was inclined to act with perfect fairness. He assured the gentleman, therefore, that in making a motion to strike out the enacting clause, he had no other motive than to come at once to the principle of the bill, because, if that did not meet the approbation of the House, it was unnecessary to consume time in the discussion of the details. Still entertaining this impression, he renewed his motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The Committee then rose, on motion of Mr. BARBOUR, and obtained leave to sit again.

TUESDAY, January 13.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to authorize the issuing of letters patent to Samuel Brown; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, made an unfavorable report on the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, praying Congress to authorize the sale of the public lands in tracts of forty acres, or sixteenth parts of a section; which report was ordered to lie on the table.

The Committee on the Public Lands were discharged from the consideration of the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, proposing an allowance of a discount of $37\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the price at which certain public lands have been sold; and the memorial was laid on the table.

Mr. McLANE, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making a partial appropriation for the support of Government for the year

JANUARY, 1824.

Michigan Contested Election.

H. OF R.

1824, (for the compensation of Senators and Representatives,) which was twice read, and made the order of the day for this day.

The House, by consent, went into a Committee of the Whole, Mr. KENT in the Chair, on the above bill. [Which appropriates $265,140 for the pay of the members.]

The bill was reported with the amendment for filling the blank, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-day.

Mr. KENT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill for regulating the fees of the registers of the orphans' court, in the several counties within the District of Columbia; which was twice read, and committed.

Mr. HARVEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of William Blagrove; which was twice read, and committed.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual report from the Navy Department, of the names and salaries of clerks employed therein; which was laid on the table.

Mr. SCOTT's resolutions of yesterday, calling for the records of land titles in Missouri and Arkansas, and for the President's instructions to the Board of Commissioners in that State and Territory, was taken up and adopted.

Mr. SANFORD's resolution, calling on the Third Auditor for information touching the loss of a certain wagon and horses destroyed by the Creek Indians, was laid on the table.

An engrossed bill entitled "An act making a partial appropriation for the support of Government for the year 1824," was read the third time, and passed.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. SLOANE, from the Committee on Elections, to which was referred the memorial of John Bidle, contesting the right of GABRIEL RICHARD to a seat in this House as the delegate from the Territory of Michigan, made an unfavorable report thereon; which was ordered to lie on the table. The report is as follows:

The petitioner objects to the right of the sitting delegate to retain his seat, for the following reasons: 1st. That he is not a citizen of the United States, but, on the contrary, is an alien, owing allegiance to a foreign Power; and that although he has been naturalized before a court of the Territory, yet that this court not being of that description which, by the laws of the United States, is authorized to admit aliens to become citizens, his admission is of no validity.

2d. That, even admitting the authority of the court, the naturalization not having taken place one year previous to the election, he is still disqualified from retaining his seat. In entering upon the consideration of this subject, the first point that presents itself is the authority on which the right of a Territory to be represented by a delegate in the House of Representatives is founded; and next, the qualifications which it is requisite such delegates should possess. The office is one which is not provided for in the Constitution. It grew out of the ordinance of Congress for the government of the Northwestern Territory, passed anterior to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, and has formed the basis of all the Territorial governments which have since existed. By that ordinance no qualifications were required of the person elected a delegate; nor do the laws of the United States, which have been subsequently passed in relation to the election of delegates from other Territories, prescribe any. The committee will not attempt to discuss, much less to decide, the propriety of allowing persons, who are not citizens of the United States, or who may owe allegiance to a foreign Government, to hold seats in this House as delegates from Territories. It will be sufficient to state the fact, that there are no statutory provisions on the subject; and that, unless it can be deduced from the general principles of the Constitution, there is no authority to exclude an alien from holding a seat in Congress as a delegate from a Territory. The case under consideration does not, however, present itself in such manner as to render a decision of this point absolutely necessary. By the documents which have been referred, it appears that the sitting delegate is a native of France; that he emigrated to the United States in 1792, with an intention of residing therein; that he has so resided until the present time; that in June, 1823, he made application to the court of Wayne county, in the Territory of Michigan, then holden in the city of Detroit, and was admitted to become a citizen of the United States. The question now comes up for consideration, whether this court is of the description which have authority competent to perform acts of this kind. The act of Congress, passed the 14th of April, 1802, entitled "An act to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and to repeal all the acts heretofore passed on that subject," provides that aliens may be admitted to become citizens of the United States by the "supreme, superior, district, or circuit court of some one of the States, or of the territorial jurisdictions of the United States, or a circuit or district court of the United States." In a law of Congress which was designed to confer jurisdiction on other courts than those of the United States, and which courts were possessed of different powers, and variously constituted, it would be extremely difficult to describe each court by that name or appellation which it received in the law of the State or Territory by which it was established. Besides, was such precision to be observed, Congress would be under the necessity of altering the law to meet every change which the different States might find it convenient to make in their judicial system, or otherwise the object of the law might, in some States, be entirely defeated. In making provision for the naturalization of foreigners, the intention of Congress obviously was to confide it to all courts which possessed those attributes that would render them safe depositories of the trust reposed. And the terms employed to describe them must be construed to relate to their powers and jurisdiction, and not to the name or appellation by which they were respectively designated in the laws of the States or Territories in which they exist. That this is a fair construction, will appear manifest from the provisions of the third section of the same act, which declares "that every court of record, in any individual State, having common law jurisdiction, and a seal, and clerk or prothonotary, shall be considered as a district court within the meaning of this act."

The exceptions taken to the authority of a county court of a Territory to admit aliens to become citizens of the United States, are founded on the reference in this section to State courts, and the omission to include the courts of a similar character in the Territories.

H. OF R.

Marquis Lafayette.

JANUARY, 1824.

But this section, it must be observed, is merely declaratory, and cannot justly be construed to contain any thing more than an explanation of what was intended to be understood by the terms "district and circuit court." Let us see what is the interpretation. It is, "that every court of record which possesses certain other attributes, which are enumerated, is to be considered as a district court." Here is no new grant of power, but only a declaration of the character in which those courts are considered; and the omission of the territorial courts in this section cannot be construed to annul the grant of power contained in the first section. The reason for enacting the first section was obviously to explain away certain doubts which appear by the preamble to have existed in regard to some of the courts in certain States; and the presumption is, that, in respect to the territorial courts, no such doubts were suggested, and hence the omission. Should this view of the subject be correct, there can be no doubt but that by the laws of the United States the county courts in the Territory of Michigan are to be considered as district courts, and competent to admit aliens to become citizens of the United States; and that, as the sitting delegate was naturalized before one of those courts, he thereby became, and in fact, now is, a citizen of the United States.

The committee will now proceed to the consideration of the second objection, viz: That, even admitting the validity of the naturalization, yet, as it did not take place one year before the election, the sitting delegate was not at that time legally qualified, inasmuch as he had not resided in the Territory one year previous to the election in the quality of a citizen of the United States. The authority relied on to support this position is the act of Congress "authorizing the election of a delegate from the Michigan Territory to the Congress of the United States, and extending the right of suffrage to the citizens of the said Territory," passed the 16th of February, 1819; and the "act to amend the ordinance and acts of Congress for the government of the Territory of Michigan, and for other purposes," passed the 3d of March, 1823. The former of these acts provides "that every free white male citizen of said Territory, above the age of twenty-one years, who shall have resided therein one year next preceding the election," &c., shall be entitled to vote at such election for a delegate to the Congress of the United States. The latter act provides that all citizens of the United States, having the qualifications prescribed by the act of the 16th February, 1819, shall be eligible to any office in said Territory. The committee will not undertake to decide whether the station of delegate is such an office as comes within the meaning of this act; but, even admitting that it is, the conclusion will not prejudice the right of the sitting delegate to his seat. Neither of the acts referred to require that the person shall possess the qualifications enumerated at any other time than that at which the election takes place. It is not the citizen who is required to have resided in that quality for one year next preceding the election. It is the person, the individual, the man, who is spoken of, and who is to possess the qualifications of residence, age, freedom, &c., at the time he offers to vote, or is to be voted for, or claims the privileges and franchises which those acts bestow. From a careful examination of the case in all its bearings and relations, the committee are impelled to the conclusion that the sitting delegate was at the time of his election a citizen of the United States, possessed of all the Constitutional and legal qualifications to render him eligible to a seat in the present Congress, and do, therefore, submit the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Gabriel Richard is entitled to a seat in this House as a delegate from the Territory of Michigan."

MARQUIS LAFAYETTE.

The joint resolutions yesterday moved by Mr. MITCHELL, of Maryland, looking to the probability of a visit from the Marquis Lafayette to this country, and proposing to send a national ship for him, were read a second time; and the question being on ordering them to a third reading—

A motion was made by Mr. CONDUCT to lay the resolutions on the table to give time for further consideration thereon.

This motion was negatived—80 to 74.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, expressed his wish to have more authentic information of the expressions of General Lafayette on the subject of a visit to the United States. He thought the House was not in possession of such information on the subject as would justify acting upon it—intimating, that if he was properly apprized of the facts alleged in the preamble, he did not know that he should object to the resolutions.

Mr. BRENT, of Louisiana, said he did not consider it material, to a decision on these resolutions, whether or not it was the wish of the Marquis Lafayette to visit the United States. But, Mr. B. said, he had seen letters from the Marquis himself, expressing that wish. He had seen a letter addressed to Mr. Davezac, of New Orleans, wherein Marquis Lafayette stated that it was his intention to visit the United States once more before he died. One of his colleagues, also, (Mr. LIVINGSTON,) had received a letter to the same effect. Mr. B. said, he hoped, on this occasion, not only an affirmative but an unanimous vote. It was unnecessary for him to refer to the value of the services which General Lafayette had rendered to this country in the war of the Revolution. They were too deeply engraven in the bosom of every man to need to be revived to his recollection. The resolutions would cause no expense, and establish no precedent. The House had, from various unofficial sources, all the information they could desire on this subject, and he hoped the resolve would pass.

Mr. RICH, of Vermont, moved to amend the resolution by striking out the words "expressed an anxious wish," and insert in lieu thereof "announced his intention," to visit the United States, &c.

Mr. CONDUCT, of New Jersey, said, that it would be much more competent for a committee than for the whole House to amend the phraseology of a resolve, and, as there seemed to be some doubt as to the phraseology of the preamble at least, he moved to refer the resolutions to a select committee.

This motion was agreed to, without opposition; and Mr. CONDUCT, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. HOLCOMBE, Mr. BRENT, Mr. CUTHBERT, Mr. CANBRELENG,

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

and Mr. LIVINGSTON, were appointed the said committee.

SURVEYS FOR ROADS AND CANALS.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, the House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the unfinished business of yesterday. Mr. FOOT was called to the Chair, and the consideration of the bill for obtaining the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, on the subject of roads and canals, was resumed.

Mr. P. P. BARBOUR said, that it had been in order to test the principle of the bill before the House, that he had yesterday moved to strike out the enacting clause; he would now ask the indulgence of the House while he endeavored to state some of the reasons which compelled him to oppose the principle on which the bill must necessarily rest. He was aware that the subject had been discussed, elaborately, at a former Congress, and that it would be difficult to avoid, on the present occasion, touching on some, at least, of the points then so fully argued—he should endeavor to guard against this as far as it was practicable; and, being very unwilling to trespass, unnecessarily, on the time of the House, should endeavor to compress the few remarks he had to offer into as dense a form as he was capable.

The bill, observed Mr. B., proposes an appropriation of money to obtain the necessary surveys and plans on the subject of roads and canals; and its advocates had urged that it was merely a measure to procure useful information; but it sought that information avowedly with reference to an ulterior object; and if this ulterior measure be not Constitutionally within the powers of Congress, then he contended that Congress were not warranted in taking the preparatory step now proposed. He should trouble the House with no remarks on the general subject of internal improvements; the advantages to be derived from good roads and canals none deny; he fully accorded in the opinions expressed by the chairman of the committee on the saving of expense and promotion of intercourse which must necessarily result from them. But the question now to be argued was of a different complexion—it was the question of power. He had long been of opinion, that Congress was not possessed of this power under the Constitution, as that instrument now stands; and it would be the object of his present discussion to prove this.

Before, however, he went into an examination of the Constitution itself, he would make some preliminary remarks on the principles and spirit of that instrument. When the Constitution was about to be formed, the great problem which occupied the minds of its framers was the determination what powers should be conceded by the States to the Federal Government, and what powers should be retained by the States. If too much should be granted, the General Government, like Aaron's serpent, would soon swallow up the State governments; if, on the other hand, too little were conceded, the Federal Government would be inefficient for the purposes of its institution. The one error threatened liberty, the other threatened internal peace and order. In these delicate and difficult circumstances, the authors of the Constitution determined on a compromise between these opposite interests, and the compromise rested on one general principle, subject, however, to a few modifications. That general principle was this: that, whenever the object to be obtained was one which required the concentrated strength of the whole Confederacy, the power to effect it was reposed in the Federal Government; thus the raising of armies and constructing of fleets for the national defence were objects which no individual State could effect, and they, with other powers of the like character, were therefore confided to the General Government; and, because they could not be effected without the requisite pecuniary means, the Constitution, on the same principle, gave Congress power to raise a revenue. There were other objects, also, which, from their nature, could not be managed with the requisite concert, by thirteen distinct independent sovereignties; such as the regulation of foreign commerce and the making of treaties, which, therefore, were intrusted to the General Government. He cited these instances as illustrations and exemplifications to show what kind and order of powers the reason and spirit of the Constitution deposited in the hands of the Federal Government. But while, from necessity, powers of this character were ceded, all powers which had relation to matters of internal regulation, all that might be denominated municipal powers, were reserved to the States. These States had each a government of its own, and the authors of the Constitution wisely judged that these governments were fully competent to take the superintendence of their own internal concerns, and were, from their situation, likely to be more intimately acquainted with these concerns, and therefore best adapted to their proper management. This distinction of power, Mr. B. insisted, was the general, fundamental principle on which the whole Constitution was based; and it would prove the best guide in investigating any part of that instrument; the object of which had been, by a wise distribution of power, to assign to the General and to the several State Governments, each its own proper orbit, in which to move for the general good.

Yet this general principle was susceptible of, and had received some modifications. Some few of the municipal powers, of a special and particular character, had, for wise reasons, been transferred to the General Government. An instance of which was found in the exclusive jurisdiction given to that government over the spot where its seat should be fixed; the reason of this was, obviously, that the free exercise of its functions might be preserved, unawed by any influence that might otherwise be exerted over them in consequence of the territorial jurisdiction of any particular State. So the General Government had the power to regulate commerce between the States, and to fix a standard of weights and measures; for which, as in the former instance, there was a special reason, viz: the necessity for uniformity, an object which could not have been attained, had these powers been left where, on the general principle, they belonged, that is, with the several States. There were but few powers of this description placed in the General Government; and on investigation, it would be found that, in every individual case, there was a special individual reason for the grant, which rendered it a proper exception. [Mr. BARBOUR here read extracts, in confirmation of his position, from "The Federalist," No. 45.]

Now, said Mr. B., if the principle I have stated furnishes a sound rule for the interpretation of the Constitution, might I not stop here and ask whether the subject of internal improvements is not characterized by every thing which can bring it within the class of municipal powers? Whether, in the language of the book I have just quoted, the able commentary of the authors of the Constitution themselves, it is not a system of "measures to promote internal order, improvement, and prosperity?" Now, the municipal powers granted to the General Government, being so many exceptions to the general principle, are all distinctly enumerated. The enumeration, therefore, limits the extent of such powers in that Government; it has the powers enumerated, and it has no more. Whence will the gentlemen opposed to me get other municipal powers? Will they attempt to find them under that part of the Constitution which has been said to be nothing more than a rule which would have resulted of course, and which might have been omitted, since what it contains is a necessary inference from what went before it, viz: "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof?" Surely, as the States intended to give the General Government only a few specific municipal powers, it is not competent for that Government to assume other municipal powers as incidents to federal powers. This would be to extend the grant of specific municipal powers, by claiming them as incidents to another class, and may be so far extended as totally to overthrow the partition which that instrument has so assiduously erected between the General and the State Governments.

He would now proceed to an examination of the Constitution itself, in reference to the power in question. It was worthy of inquiry, however, first, to look at the great diversity of opinion among those who professed to derive the power of making internal improvements from the Constitution. Some thought it might be done with the consent of the States concerned; others, without that consent. Some drew it from one part of the Constitution, some from another. Some maintain that Congress has the power without the section which authorizes them to collect taxes, &c.; others, that it has not. All these various classes of advocates, however diverse or incompatible their various opinions might be, were, he did not doubt, as sincere in holding and in expressing them, as he himself was in the views he took on the subject. He should think it needless to occupy much time to prove that, if Congress possessed the power at all, they needed not the assent of the States, through which the improvements were to pass, though such assent had been asked, as to the Cumberland road. For, whatever powers the Constitution has given them, they may not only exercise without the assent of the States, but against their will, within Constitutional limits. Take, for example, the power of taxation; and so of their other powers. If assent is to be procured, it implies that it cannot be done without such assent; but if the assent give the authority, it follows that, by the assent of a few States, a new power may be imparted; whereas, to get a new power, requires an amendment of the Constitution, which can only be done in the manner prescribed by that instrument. There are, indeed, a few cases in which the Constitution requires the assent of the States, such as the purchase of sites for forts, arsenals, &c., but the very requisition of assent in these cases, utterly excludes the idea of its necessity in any others.

If no consent is required from the States, it must be because the power is granted by the Constitution. Is it granted? asked Mr. B. I cannot find such a word in any part of that instrument, as power to make canals. He here read extracts from the report of the first Secretary of the Treasury, (General Hamilton,) in which, he contended, that that statesman did not pretend to claim such a power as belonging to the General Government. He was, in that report, opposing the force of the arguments of the then Secretary of State, (Mr. Jefferson,) in respect to the incorporation of the Bank of the United States, but, though strenuous in his opposition, he admitted "that a special power to incorporate, for the purpose of opening canals, would have been necessary, except with regard to the Western territory; there being nothing, in any part of the Constitution, respecting the regulation of canals." It is not pretended that the power to make roads and canals is a positive power, granted by the Constitution; it is supposed, however, to be implied in some of those expressly enumerated. From which of these is it sought to be derived? Some say from that clause which gives to Congress "power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States." For himself, it had always been his opinion that this grant extended no farther than to prescribing the terms on which this commerce shall be conducted. He had derived this opinion equally from the history and the geographical position of the United States. The slightest glance at a map of the Union is sufficient to show that, in respect to commercial advantages, some of the States are far better situated than others; and this power was given to prevent undue advantage being taken of those States which were less favorably situated, by the laying of exactions on the passage of their products to a market, &c., [on which part of the subject he read a quotation from one of the numbers of "The Federalist."] Here, he said, was a precise and special reason for the grant of this power, which ought to be taken as the best explanation of the power itself.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

But, it had been urged, that the same word "regulate," is equally applied in this clause of the Constitution to foreign and domestic commerce, and yet, under this clause, the Government was held to have the power of erecting lighthouses, beacons, &c. If they might do this, under a power to "regulate" foreign commerce, why not, it has been asked, make canals and roads, under a power to "regulate" domestic commerce? To this argument, Mr. B. replied, that the analogy from the general power to the particular act, was by no means as strong in the one case as the other. But, he thought that a full answer was to be found in the Constitution itself, viz., in that clause which gives to Congress exclusive legislation over "all places purchased with the consent of the States, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings," taken in connexion with the course of legislation upon the subject; for, upon reference to the laws of the United States, we find a long list of cessions, by the States, of sites for lighthouses, beacons, &c., which clearly proves that Congress legislated under the idea that they derived the power from that source. Whether, therefore, the power to make roads and canals is sought to be established, under this clause of the Constitution, by consulting its express terms, or relying on the above analogy, or resorting to the declarations and illustrations of its authors, speaking in the Federalist, the attempt must prove equally unavailing.

The next clause resorted to, is that which gives to Congress "power to raise and support armies;" whence it is argued that they have an incidental power to make military roads. Here he should take occasion to make some remarks on incidental powers in general. It was utterly unsafe and inadmissible to infer an incidental power from a power expressly granted, merely on the ground of its remote convenience, or conduciveness, in carrying the granted power into effect: to be incidental, it must have an immediate, direct, and appropriate relation to the granted power. If, when a power is expressly granted, every other power which, in however distant and remote a degree, may be convenient or conducive to its exercise, is held also to be granted, as incidental to the first, where is power to stop? There is no end to the long chain of cause and effect. The Constitution gives you, said Mr. B., "power to provide and maintain a navy;" to do this, ship-timber is requisite. Will it be held, that the granted power to provide a navy, contains, as an incidental power, authority to forbid the people from cutting and using the timber on their own farms? In other words, from clearing their lands? He could multiply examples of the same kind. If powers, however remotely conducting to the granted power, be held incidental to it, the grant was of illimitable extent. Nothing like an immediate and appropriate relation was to be found between raising armies and making roads.

The next clause relied on was that which confers power "to establish post offices and post roads." The view he had always entertained of the meaning of this clause was, that it only authorizes Congress to designate the route in which the mail shall travel, the places where post offices shall be located, and to secure to the mail the right of passing unmolested. The "Federalist," speaking of this power, calls it a "harmless" one. As he construed it, it was so; but, if the opposite construction prevailed, it ceased to be so "harmless" or inconsiderable. The authors of the Constitution thought that the consent of a State was necessary, before the General Government could get jurisdiction over even so much ground as was required to build a fort; but the construction now contended for gives them an extended jurisdiction indeed. According to a late report from the Post Office Department, there are, in the United States, 80,000 miles of post roads; but if Congress may incorporate a company, and set toll-gates upon one of these roads, it may on all of them. Here then is a jurisdiction over 80,000 miles of road, with the patronage of all the officers connected with them—a mass of power which can hardly be called "harmless" in the sense of the "Federalist." Mr. B. said he was not much in the habit of referring, on such subjects, to legislative authority, but, as far as was inferrible from the acts on the subject of post roads, the sense of Congress had been against the power now contended for. In all the laws on the subject, the act merely designates the route to be pursued, though the title is, "to establish post roads." It was very true that the Legislatures of the States cannot stop the mail; but the question now in discussion is the question of power to make a road. If Congress has jurisdiction over post roads, what becomes of that jurisdiction when a post route (as happens every day) is discontinued? Does it revert to the particular State? And when the General Government obtains jurisdiction over a road, does the State jurisdiction thereon cease? or have the two Governments concurrent jurisdiction? If they have, suppose each of them should incorporate a company to make the same road, must one yield? and which one? Must the State government yield to the General Government its soil and jurisdiction? Where, asked Mr. B., is there a solitary instance to be found of the General Government's obtaining, under the Constitution, any soil except that which it is authorized, by the Constitution, to purchase, that which it holds as national territory, or that which is ceded for a seat of government? On the one construction there is no collision, no incompatible or conflicting jurisdiction; all is harmony. But, on the other, all is conflict. The one construction leaves to Congress exclusive jurisdiction within its limits, and to the State governments exclusive jurisdiction within theirs. The opposite, exposes both to all the inconveniences and dangers of colliding jurisdictions.

Mr. B. next proceeded to examine the clause which gives the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States." However gentlemen might differ as to the construction of different parts of the Constitution, there was one point on which all agree, viz: that the Federal Government of this country is a limited government, a government subject to restrictions. But, though this be so, and the Constitution prescribes the limits, if you interpret the above clause of that instrument so as to say that Congress may do any thing it pleases to do, that will "promote the general welfare" or the "common defence," then all limits elsewhere laid are utterly vain and nugatory. The powers given are as illimitable as space; expediency, and that alone, is left to regulate the Government. Or if, as is contended by others, this clause refers merely to a power of appropriation, still, if you say that Congress may appropriate any money it pleases, and for any object that will "promote the general welfare," the case is scarcely any better than before. If this is a limited Government, neither construction can be a sound one: either of them lets all that loose and perfectly unregulated which the Constitution, throughout, so assiduously labors to regulate and confine. [In support of this position Mr. B. again read extracts from the Federalist.] The correct construction of the above clause was this, it gives to Congress the power to raise money because that power is indispensable; it is the very life-blood of all government; but the money raised is limited in the mode of raising it, and limited as to the ends to which it may be applied. If the right of appropriation be restricted in its application, to the objects enumerated in the Constitution, then the question in any given case will, as it has been justly said by high authority, be sufficiently precise and determinate to be submitted to judicial decision; but, if it be established as a principle, that Congress may appropriate money to any and every object which they may think will promote the general welfare, then it is obvious that it will become in every instance a question of expediency, to be decided by legislative discretion, and not subject to judicial control. A very just and precise view of this subject, Mr. B. said, is given by the late President of the United States in his communication to Congress, assigning the reason of his dissent from an act passed by both Houses. [He here read extracts from the President's communication.]

Having thus examined in succession the several parts of the Constitution, in which the advocates for internal improvements sought to find the grant of power to make them, he would add one other view of that instrument considered as a whole. Although its framers went into the construction of it in a liberal spirit of mutual concessions, yet there is manifest, in various parts of it, a portion of mutual jealousy also. That spirit plainly appears in such regulations as that which provides that all direct taxes shall be in proportion to the population of the several States—that there shall be no tax on exports, &c. These provisions evidently arose out of a fear that some inequality might exist in the burdens or advantages of the new Government as apportioned among the States. But if the framers of the Constitution thus intended to guard by anticipation, against all such inequalities, do I not, said Mr. B., derive from that fact a very strong argument, to show that they never meant to give to the General Government municipal powers, such as internal improvement? These powers bear directly on the internal affairs of a people almost infinitely diversified in situation, circumstances, and local interests. Of what use is it to forbid a disproportionate drawing of money from the different States, if, when drawn, according to due proportion from each, it may then be given for the benefit of a few, or of a single State? Take an illustration from the great New York canal. Had the expense of that canal been borne by the General Government? Although it would, in a degree, have "promoted the general welfare," would it not, out of all proportion, have benefited the State of New York in particular? And do what you will, from the very nature of things it must happen, however pure the intentions of Government, that the practical operation of such an interpretation of the Constitution, and of the system which rests on that interpretation, will be to produce an unequal and disproportionate application of moneys drawn from all the States. If this may be done, it is vain to forbid unequal taxes, and what must be the natural consequence? To produce discontent and heart-burnings in those parts of the Union which are least benefited, or not at all, by the improvements effected. Some States may be so situated by geographical position that either a small share only, or no part of the proposed improvements may be made within them, and when they see large sums continually going, under the idea of "promoting the general welfare," to accomplish objects which are to benefit other States, a jealousy will be excited dangerous to the peace of our country. It may be said that such a feeling is unjustifiable; however that may be, it is the part of a wise Government, and it was the design of the authors of our Constitution to guard, as far as practicable, against giving occasion to feelings of so pernicious a character.

Before he concluded, Mr. B. said, he would refer, in anticipation, to an argument which he doubted not to hear urged from certain precedents which have already been set by Congress on the general subject, and which are thought by some to cover the principle against which he was now contending.

The case of the Cumberland road was one of these precedents. It had been constructed not by any one of the State governments through whose territory it passed, but by the General Government, and at the public expense. Very true. But did not Congress, in the very act providing for this road, virtually cede the Constitutional question, by requiring the consent of those States? If the Constitution gives the Congress power to make roads where it will, "to promote the general welfare," the consent of no State, as he hoped he had already proven, can be required to the exercise of that power; and so far was President Jefferson from believing such a power to be in the possession of Government, that he expressly recommended an amendment of the Constitution in order to give it. On the same ground President Madison rested his veto to the act for giving the bonus of the United States Bank, as a fund for internal improvement; and our present worthy Chief Magistrate, although he has approved acts for the continuation and completion of the Cumberland road, made a distinction between power to appropriate for such a road, and the power of jurisdiction over it. I deny both. In conclusion, Mr. B. said, that he had endeavored to present to the House a fair, and at the same time, brief statement of his views on this subject; he had long been settled in the opinion, that, however desirable or advantageous internal improvements might be, Congress, by the Constitution, had no power to make them. He knew that other gentlemen differed widely from himself in this opinion, and he could not, and did not, entertain the slightest doubt that they were as sincere and upright in their views as he was in his; both sides of the question would doubtless be presented in argument, and it would be for the Committee to decide between them.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Mr. HOLCOMBE, of New Jersey, rose, and observed, that the course which he should take in the discussion, would be widely different from the one pursued by the honorable gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. BARBOUR,) who had just taken his seat, and who had addressed the Committee with so much ingenuity and eloquence. I shall defend the Constitutional right—Mr. H. observed—and the expediency of passing this bill. The Constitutional right, indeed, in the General Government, and the expediency of appropriating the public treasure, for purposes of internal improvement, have always appeared to me propositions too obvious and irresistible to require either illustration or defence; and there is, surely, no fact in our parliamentary history more remarkable, than the successful opposition which has combatted this bill, or the principle which it involves, in every stage of its progress. Posterity will scarcely credit it; especially when the enlightened period in which we live, and the spirit of universal improvement which distinguishes it, be taken into consideration. And the fact, Mr. Chairman, can only be explained by referring it to that obliquity of the human mind, which arrays itself in opposition to all new improvements, either in physics or in morals; and to all novel and extraordinary efforts of genius or patriotism. Ridicule and contempt pursued the great Columbus from Court to Court; and persecution followed him to the grave. The grandeur and success of his enterprise were insufficient to protect him from the embittered vengeance of those, whose vain predictions he had so signally exposed. But, sir, said Mr. H., it is unnecessary to refer to history for illustration. When Fulton announced the discovery of steam-navigation, incredulity pointed to numerous failures; and ignorance asserted its folly and extravagance. But, the steamboat floats upon the waters of every civilized nation, and, if the contemplated improvement of another distinguished American be not illusory, is destined to traverse the ocean itself, for the purposes of commerce, with a celerity heretofore unprecedented, and unimagined—conquering time and space, and drawing together, within the circle of social and national intercourse, the remote and scattered families of the human race. Again, sir, when the question of the great New York Canal was first in agitation, public opinion pronounced it a project visionary and impossible. The traveller, indeed, struck with the magnificence of the enterprise, assented to its practicability, but spoke of the ages necessary for its completion. In less than six years, however, the waters of the great Lakes mingled with the Hudson! and this most brilliant and successful effort of modern genius and enterprise is rapidly hastening to its consummation. And such will be the splendid result, I will venture to predict, of the present question. It has been denounced, as unconstitutional, and opposed, as inexpedient. But, if innumerable indications and expressions of public opinion be not entirely deceptive, the period is not distant—nay, before the very decorations of this Hall shall be soiled by the hand of time—when a new policy, and new principles of legislation, shall be announced; by liberal and munificent appropriations by the General Government, for the purposes of internal improvement.

The bill, Mr. Chairman, is combatted as unconstitutional and inexpedient. I will examine both points, as briefly, but perspicuously, as I am able.

That the Constitution of the United States, in broad and express terms, has not granted to the Congress of the United States the power of appropriating the public treasure for the purposes of internal improvement, is unquestionable. But that such a power is really secured by a liberal construction of this instrument, sufficiently ample for all the purposes of legislation in relation to this question, has never been doubted by many politicians. I profess to belong to that number. And indeed I cannot conceive an idea more extravagant than that a Government should be constituted so utterly imperfect as to be incapable of appropriating its funds for any object which its constituted authorities might consider necessary for the public welfare. History furnishes no such example. And that ours is actually such a Government, must pre-suppose the most extraordinary want of foresight in a body of politicians, (the framers of the Constitution,) otherwise remarkable for the acuteness and prophetic sagacity of their views. We have been accustomed to regard, and justly too, the Constitution of the United States as the ablest effort of wisdom and virtue. But, if the doctrines of the honorable gentleman who has just taken his seat be correct, a bitterer satire upon its imperfections could scarcely be pronounced or imagined.

"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Such, said Mr. H. is a condensed but very luminous view (its preamble) of the pervading spirit

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

and grand design of the Constitution. But yet, sir, we are told by the honorable gentleman, that the bill under consideration, obviously and acknowledgedly indispensable to secure the public defence, and promote the general welfare, is unconstitutional! But, whatever may have been the hesitation of earlier legislators in relation to the Constitutional right of appropriating public money for objects of internal improvement, a practice or practices have grown out of the implied powers by the Constitution, which, as legitimate precedents, appear to me, as far as the present question is concerned, to be fully sufficient to remove all obscurity (if, indeed, obscurity there be) from the proper latitude of construction to be given to it. We erect lighthouses, seawalls, piers, and buoys, to facilitate commerce; we endow military schools as appendages to our military system; we construct costly edifices and establish expensive libraries, to subserve the luxury, or, if you please, the convenience of legislation, without startling the scruples or prejudices of the most sensitive. But such acts, gentlemen observe, are essential for carrying into effect powers expressly granted. And surely, upon this principle, (if no other principle permitted,) a system of internal improvement by the General Government may be sustained and defended. For are not roads and canals obviously indispensable for carrying into effect a system of public defence, as provided for by the Constitution? Indispensable, indeed, for carrying into effect the whole grand design of that immortal instrument—the security, prosperity, and happiness of the good people of these States.

The right of appropriation, together with all necessary jurisdiction and sovereignty, extends in my opinion to every act of legislation, which, though unembraced by the express letter of the Constitution, will obviously and certainly promote the public welfare. And this is the construction, I am convinced, which public opinion has given to this question. The Committee will perceive, therefore, that I do not derive the Constitutional power of appropriation in this case, as a consequent to the power of regulating internal or external commerce, or of establishing post offices and post roads, or from an extended and extravagant construction to any individual power, but rather from that general power, which appears to me incidental to, and inseparably connected with, all Governments: the power of securing the public defence and promoting the general welfare. But such a power, it is observed, has no limits; it will reach to any thing and every thing, and consequently is dangerous and inadmissible. The danger, sir, is more imaginary than real. The discretion of Congress must determine its limits, as it does in relation to every other power of the Constitution, express or implied. I would not, Mr. Chairman, on this, nor on any other subject, be considered as regarding lightly the authority of the Constitution. On the contrary, as far as its powers be express and unequivocal, let them be fulfilled, even to the uttermost of their requisitions. It is, indeed, a charter so inexpressibly solemn and imposing in its obligations, that it should be approached with caution, and touched (if it be touched at all) with becoming reverence. Or rather, it is that grand temple in which is deposited the ark, not only of our own liberties, but of the hopes and liberties of the human race.

"Long as the Coliseum stands, Rome shall stand;
When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall,
And when Rome falls, the world."

Yes, sir, equally with those opposed to the bill, I regard as sacred and obligatory, the authority of the Constitution, as far as it be express and unequivocal. And I must be permitted to avail myself of this opportunity of protesting against the extraordinary disposition manifested at this moment, to assail its integrity. And I regret exceedingly to observe the force of the powerful talents of my distinguished friend from South Carolina, (Mr. McDUFFIE,) arrayed against it. Amendments may be necessary; and, to a certain extent—a very limited extent, however—I believe are desirable. But with all its imperfections, it is, notwithstanding, Mr. Chairman, that august structure into which I would rather see committed the everlasting destinies of this country, than any other which the genius of man will ever be able to devise or erect. Storms may assail, and the shadows of portending dissolution will assuredly encompass it. But, as long as virtue and intelligence continue to crowd its portals and officiate at its altars, the tempest will burst harmless around it; and when the deep gloom of the moment shall break away, the symbol of the Union will still be seen, floating over it, as resplendently as ever—as uninfluenced, and unendangered, indeed, as the standard erected above us, by the storms which sometimes shake this hall to its foundations.

But, sir, the friends of this bill differ exceedingly from those opposed to us, in our manner of approaching the Constitution, for the purposes of legislation, in relation to this, as well as every other subject, involving a Constitutional question.

They appear to me to regard it (and they will pardon the freedom of the comparison) as the Eastern nations do the thrones of their princes, or the shrines of their divinities. They approach it with reverential awe, and fall down prostrated and paralyzed in its presence. We, on the contrary, putting on the panoply of a more liberal, if not a purer faith, advance fearlessly into its precincts, and legislate, if it be necessary, around its very altars; and if, in the ardor of our devotion to the public good, we should inadvertently touch the very sanctuary itself, the spirit within, we feel assured, will launch no thunderbolt to punish the indiscretion of those faithful and zealous servants who otherwise administer with pure hands and upright intentions.

This, Mr. Chairman, is neither heresy, I believe, in relation to our religious creed, nor, I presume, if properly constructed, to our political faith.

But there is a neutral ground which this subject presents, whereupon the most tender consciences might legislate without being started with the upbraiding voice of the violated Constitution. I have never heard objections made—at least, not until lately—and never upon Constitutional grounds—to the practice of employing the military for the purposes of internal improvement; and, how easy would it be, by extending this principle, to avoid altogether the imaginary barriers of the Constitution! But why attempt to exercise, by indirection, (and I almost feel degraded for having made the suggestion,) a right which is amply secured to us by long continued usage; by the precedence of a hundred formal laws, and the universal and unequivocal spirit of the Constitution itself? But, I assert again, if the doctrines of the honorable gentleman from Virginia be correct, that the whole history of our legislation is a history of disregard and violence to the obligations of the Constitution. Does the Constitution authorize the expenditure of extravagant sums of public money for the erection of public buildings? And yet, sir, in virtue of that clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to erect needful buildings for its accommodation, we have appropriated, or rather, lavished, millions upon millions. For what? To decorate a spot forever disgraced and degraded in our history. To embellish edifices associated with recollections too bitter and too humbling to be capable of exciting any other emotion than that of shame or confusion in the bosom of an American citizen. I am, perhaps, touching invidious ground, and I would not be misunderstood. I presume not to censure the munificence of former laws, which have resulted in the splendor and decoration around us. But I must be permitted to observe that, if we can Constitutionally appropriate such vast sums for the erection of monuments of taste, (for mere accommodation we all know and feel is utterly out of the question,) upon what ground of right or consistency can this bill, or the system which it leads to, be opposed?—a system, I repeat again and again, indispensable for carrying into effect the great end of the Constitution—the interests, strength, and safety of the Union.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

But I have lingered, Mr. Chairman, too long around the Constitution, and must hasten forward in the course before me.

I will now call the attention of the Committee to the expediency of the bill. Many gentlemen, who profess to have no Constitutional scruples on this subject, are, nevertheless, opposed to it on the grounds of expediency. The time has not arrived, they observe, when we can profitably engage in a system of this description; that the state of the Treasury and public opinion are opposed to it. I differ from such gentlemen, and will proceed to state my reasons for urging it upon the immediate attention of the Government.

The bill, it will be seen, contemplates no appropriation for roads and canals. It merely embraces that kind of statistical information, which it is the duty of every Government to collect. The surveys, it will not be concealed, are intended to be preparatory to a general system of internal improvement, by the Government. In the course of two years, it is supposed, the surveys may be completed; after which we shall be enabled to commence the system with every desirable advantage.

The bill bears but slightly on the Treasury. But were the Treasury even bankrupted at this moment, I know of no method better calculated to redeem its credit, and fix it upon a basis, permanent and irreversible, than the improvement of our vast domain by the means suggested. I am indebted for this remark to the honorable chairman of the committee who reported the bill.

The direct advantages which accrue to the public Treasury by the creation of outlets and markets for a rich and fertile country, to use common language, is incalculable. I do not believe that I trespass much on probability, when I assert that the great canal in the State of New York, by means of its influence upon importations, has already added to the Treasury of the United States little less than millions! Yes, sir, millions. And if the credulity of gentlemen be startled by the assertion, the slightest attention to the fact, I flatter myself, will convince them of its accuracy.

New York is destined to reap a golden harvest from their great work—and great and golden may it be, beyond even the dreams of the most sanguine of her economists—but, great as it certainly will be, it must, nevertheless, be limited, indeed, compared with the immense profits to be realized from it by the General Government; but, in this view of the subject, I differ, it seems, very widely from the gentleman who has just taken his seat; time must test the truth of our respective opinions. And I shall be much disappointed, and will frankly confess myself entirely ignorant of the nature and influences of its internal improvement, if this great work, when completed, do not prove more profitable to the revenue of the United States than the whole of our trade at this moment is, with the continent of Europe. Works of this description triumph over the improvidence of nature, and create communities which, independently of them, could have no possible existence. The Territory of Michigan, for example, has long been a useless and expensive appendage to the Government. But the magic of internal improvement is about to reach it; and this fine Territory is destined soon to be admitted into the Union, a rich and populous State.

The effect, Mr. Chairman, of such works upon existing communities, is great beyond all belief. In England, before the introduction of canal navigation, not a point in the kingdom was more than thirty miles distant from water carriage, and her roads were excellent. With such facilities for internal communication, it was to be presumed that canals would prove of little, if any, benefit to the kingdom. But, in despite of all such facts and considerations, there is no country in the world, with the exception, perhaps, of Holland, which has been so extensively enriched by canal navigation; the profits of canal stock, as we are assured by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, have far exceeded, in many instances, all hope and all calculation—realizing to proprietors the wealth of the most stimulated South-sea dreams—for I can think of nothing else wherewith to make the comparison.

I would not here, Mr. Chairman, nor elsewhere, be the advocate of any measure, either visionary or extravagant. But such is my confidence in the influence of roads and canals, in creating revenue, and establishing the power and wealth of nations, that, were the Treasury at this moment empty, I would conscientiously advocate the passage of a bill, loaning the amount of money necessary to carry into effect a general system of internal improvement; calculating, confidently, that the sacrifice, if sacrifice indeed it can be termed, would be recompensed to the Treasury a hundred fold. A sum which will little exceed the sum which will be necessary to complete the New York canal, would open an inland sloop navigation along the seaboard of this country, upwards of eight hundred miles in extent; connect the valley of the Ohio with the Chesapeake, remove obstructions from all principal rivers in the Union, and extend the great national road to the banks of the Mississippi—in fact, would effect every object of internal improvement at present in contemplation! And is any gentleman prepared to rise in his place and maintain that the increase of revenue to the public Treasury, consequent upon these works, independently of ordinary profits, would not greatly transcend the interest which would accrue upon the sum just suggested, or upon any other sum necessary to complete a general system of internal improvement? I presume not.

But, sir, there is no necessity for resorting to loans for internal improvement, nor of making it a charge upon the ordinary revenue. I intend, if I am not anticipated, (but I hope and trust I shall be,) to urge upon the consideration of this Congress, the expediency of establishing an internal revenue, to be pledged exclusively for the purposes of internal improvement. The revenue to be derived principally from an excise upon domestic spirits; thus forcing a great national evil to contribute towards a great national benefit. This, Mr. Chairman, is no visionary project, but rather a great interest within the reach of the most ordinary efforts. But, sir, it is observed, if these objects be as important and profitable as represented, that the States will execute them; that such works belong exclusively to the States. The remark, to a certain extent, is correct. The States will execute, at least, a part of them. But mark the difference of execution! The States will construct small commercial canals, accommodated to their immediate wants, without the slightest regard to national considerations. I would not, Mr. Chairman, trespass unnecessarily upon the rights, the province, or the sensibilities of the States. But, it must be notorious to every one who reflects for a moment upon this subject, that there are numerous objects of internal improvement which the States have not, nor ever can have, either the disposition or the ability to execute. Will the States ever open a sloop navigation through the Isthmus of Barnstable? Will the States ever construct canals of dimensions capable of transmitting ships of war through the State of New Jersey? Or from the Delaware to the Chesapeake bay? Will the States ever connect the great flood of the Mississippi with the seaboard of the Atlantic States; or extend the great national road beyond the Ohio? And yet these, sir, are objects of deep and universal interest, whether regarded in relation to public defence, or as efficient means of promoting the general welfare, strength, and permanence, of the Union.

But the time, Mr. Chairman, is particularly propitious for commencing a system of internal improvement. Talent and experience we possess in abundance. Peace, too, waves her olive over us. And it is during the tranquillity of peace alone that monuments of useful industry can be profitably erected. But, tranquil as the moment is, it is, unhappily, passing away. Clouds and shadows already hang upon it. Future wars, I need not remark, are certain. All experience, indeed, points to their recurrence as unavoidable. Let us prepare for them. And the necessity of roads and canals, as constituting an important part of this preparation, need not be urged upon the conviction of the Committee. The want of them during the late war, it will never be forgotten, lost to the Republic thousands of lives and millions of treasure.

But, the expediency of the bill may be further inferred from our facilities and capabilities for internal improvement, upon a scale the most extended and magnificent. The impress of the highest destinies is visible in every section of the Republic. Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to call your attention to some remarkable features in our geography, which appear to me so legitimately connected with this subject, that I cannot consent, in this discussion, to pass them by unnoticed—familiar as they must be, and, indeed, necessarily are, to every member of the Committee. But, who has ever refused to gaze again on the beauties of a splendid picture? particularly the picture which represents the land of his highest hopes, and the home of his best affections.

I pass by the rivers of the Atlantic States—the great bays, the vast estuaries of the seaboard. Look Westward. Upwards of two thousand miles from this Hall, commences a chain of lakes and inland seas, which constitute our northern boundary, and which, after traversing the centre of an immense valley, still unsurveyed, and partially unknown, contracts into the great river of the North, the mighty St. Lawrence; which would roll with all its treasures to the ocean amidst the accumulated Winter of the frozen circle. But, arrested by the enterprise of the State of New York, its current, as far as the purposes of commerce are concerned, is directed Eastward, and is destined, before the revolution of another year, to mingle with the waters of the Atlantic, in the centre of the temperate zone! The most brilliant triumph which the art of man has ever achieved over the dispositions of nature.

Again, sir, from the bosom of a wilderness, in the State of New York, near the borders of Lake Erie, gushes the fountain of the Ohio. Between five and six thousand miles from thence, (pursuing the windings of their respective courses,) within the recesses of the Rocky Mountains, issue the springs of the great Missouri; these noble streams, flowing towards each other, Eastward and Westward, and collecting, in their progression, the tribute of a thousand valleys, are at length lost in the vast flood of the Mississippi, which, pursuing its majestic course towards the ocean, and swelled in its progress by the accession of numerous rivers, more extensive than any of the kingdoms of Europe, rolls its mighty waters into the Gulf of Mexico. The noblest tribute paid by the earth to the ocean, in the four quarters of the globe! Is not this, Mr. Chairman, a domain worth improving—a country worth legislating for? But, sir, I must close my remarks more abruptly than I had intended. I am exhausted.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

From the Eighteenth Congress, much is expected in relation to internal improvement. It represents a new era in our politics. It represents millions of freemen, who, for the first time, have exercised their rights and realized their political existence upon this floor; and who, from the peculiarity of their situation, (being principally the inhabitants of frontier States,) must necessarily feel the deepest interest in the consummation of a system, one of the first objects of which is to obviate the inconveniences of location, and draw the extremities of the Union within the immediate neighborhood of our great outlets and markets.

Legislation, in many countries, oftentimes betrays the poverty of their resources. Here, on the contrary, it can effect every thing but miracles. Before its exercise, the mountains disappear, and the valleys swell into the plains, the beds of navigable streams. Such, however, are ordinary attributes. Legislation, moreover, from this Hall, can speak, almost instantaneously, into existence, rich and powerful States; and, by its magical influences upon wealth and population, can throw around the institutions and enterprise of the present moment, the splendor of those high destinies which are evidently reserved for these States in the progress of ages.

Let therefore the present bill pass, as preparatory to a general system of internal improvement; and let this system be pursued until all its great objects be fully accomplished—and it hath never entered, Mr. Chairman, into the imagination of the statesman or economist to conceive a spectacle more glorious and magnificent, than our vast domain, at no distant period, shall exhibit; crowded and embellished, as it assuredly will be, with innumerable monuments of useful industry, enterprise, and happiness.

When Mr. HOLCOMBE had concluded—

On suggestion of Mr. CLAY, who is, therefore, entitled to the floor, the Committee rose; and the House adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, February 14.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Secretary of War, on the memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Arkansas, respecting the lands occupied by the Quapau Indians, in said Territory; which report was read, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom the subject had been referred, reported a bill to provide for the speedy extinguishment of the debt due by the purchasers of the public lands, prior to the 1st day of July, 1820; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCOTT, from the same committee, made an unfavorable report on the petition of the members of the Baptist Church, in Lawrence county, in the State of Alabama; which was read, and laid on the table.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred, on the 12th of December ultimo, the petition of certain inhabitants of the county of Mobile, in the State of Alabama, reported a bill granting a right of pre-emption to certain actual settlers in that part of the former province of West Florida, included in the district of Jackson Courthouse; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. ROSS, the petition and documents of James Smith, late Paymaster, &c., of Ohio militia, presented at the last session of Congress, and referred to the Committee of Claims, together with a report made by said committee, were again referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion of Mr. OWEN, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the justice and expediency of granting additional compensation to the register and receiver of the land office for the district of Jackson Courthouse, in the State of Mississippi, for extra services performed by them as commissioners for the adjustment of private land claims.

SURVEYS FOR ROADS AND CANALS.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. FOOT, of Connecticut, in the Chair, on the unfinished business of yesterday; which was, the motion of Mr. BARBOUR to strike out the enacting clause of the bill reported by Mr. HEMPHILL, Chairman of the Committee on Roads and Canals, to obtain the requisite surveys and plans on that subject.

Mr. CLAY, (Speaker,) in rising, said, that he could not enter on the discussion of the subject before him, without first asking leave to express his thanks for the kindness of the Committee in so far accommodating him as to agree unanimously to adjourn its sitting to the present time, in order to afford him the opportunity of exhibiting his views; (which, however, he feared he should do very unacceptably.) As a requital for this kindness, he would endeavor, as far as was practicable, to abbreviate what he had to present to their consideration. Yet, on a question of this extent and moment, there were so many topics which demanded a deliberate examination, that, from the nature of the case, it would be impossible, he was afraid, to reduce the argument to any thing that the Committee would consider a reasonable compass.

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

It was known to all who heard him, that there had now existed for several years a difference of opinion between the Executive and Legislative branches of this Government, as to the nature and extent of certain powers conferred upon it by the Constitution. Two successive Presidents had returned to Congress bills which had previously passed both Houses of that body, with a communication of the opinion that Congress, under the Constitution, possessed no power to enact such laws. High respect, personal and official, must be felt by all, as it was due, to those distinguished officers, and to their opinions thus solemnly announced; and the most profound consideration belonged to our present Chief Magistrate, who had favored that House with a written argument, of great length and labor, consisting of not less than sixty or seventy pages, in support of his exposition of the Constitution. From the magnitude of the interests involved in the question, all would readily concur, that, if the power is granted and does really exist, it ought to be vindicated, upheld, maintained, that the country might derive the great benefits which may flow from its prudent exercise. If it has not been communicated to Congress, then all claim to it should be, at once, surrendered. It was a circumstance of peculiar regret to him, that one more competent than himself had not risen to support the course which the legislative department had heretofore felt itself bound to pursue on this great question. Of all the trusts which are created by human agency, that is the highest, most solemn, and most responsible, which involves the exercise of political power. Exerted when it has not been intrusted, the public functionary is guilty of usurpation. And his infidelity to the public good is not, perhaps, less culpable when he neglects or refuses to exercise a power which has been fairly conveyed, to promote the public prosperity. If the power which he thus forbears to exercise, can only be exerted by him—if no other public functionary can employ it, and the public good requires its exercise, his treachery is greatly aggravated. It is only in those cases where the object of the investment of power is the personal ease or aggrandizement of the public agent, that his forbearance to use it is praiseworthy, gracious, or magnanimous.

He was extremely happy to find, that, on many of the points of the argument of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. BARBOUR,) there was entire concurrence between them, widely as they differed in their ultimate conclusions. On this occasion (as on all others on which that gentleman obliged the House with an expression of his opinions) he displayed great ability and ingenuity; and, as well from the matter as from the respectful manner of his argument, it was deserving of the most thorough consideration. He was compelled to differ from that gentleman at the very threshold. He had commenced by laying down as a general principle, that, in the distribution of powers among our Federal and State governments, those which were of a municipal character were to be considered as appertaining to the State governments, and those which related to external affairs, to the General Government. If he might be allowed to throw the argument of the gentleman into the form of a syllogism, (a shape which he presumed would be quite agreeable to him,) it amounted to this: Municipal powers belong exclusively to the State governments; but the power to make internal improvements is municipal; therefore it belongs to the State governments alone. He (Mr. C.) denied both the premises and the conclusion. If the gentleman had affirmed that certain municipal powers, and the great mass of them, belong to the State governments, his proposition would have been incontrovertible. But if he had so qualified it, it would not have assisted the gentleman at all in his conclusion. But surely the power of taxation—the power to regulate the value of coin—the power to establish an uniform standard of weights and measures—to establish post offices and post roads—to regulate commerce among the several States—that in relation to the judiciary, besides many other powers indisputably belonging to the Federal Government, are strictly municipal. If, as he understood the gentleman in the course of the subsequent part of his argument to admit, some municipal powers belong to the one system, and some to the other, we shall derive very little aid from the gentleman's principle, in making the discrimination between the two. The question must ever remain open, whether any given power, and of course that in question, is or is not delegated to this Government or retained by the States?

The conclusion of the gentleman is, that all internal improvements belong to the State governments; that they are of a limited and local character, and are not comprehended within the scope of the federal powers, which relate to external or general objects. That many, perhaps most internal improvements, partake of the character described by the gentleman, he, Mr. C., should not deny. But it was no less true that there were others, emphatically national, which neither the policy, nor the power, nor the interest, of any State would induce it to accomplish, and which could only be effected by the application of the resources of the nation. The improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi would furnish a striking example. This was undeniably a great and important object. The report of a highly scientific and intelligent officer of the Engineer Corps, (which Mr. C. hoped would be soon taken up and acted upon) had shown that the cost of any practicable improvement in the navigation of that river, in the present state of the inhabitants of its banks, was a mere trifle in comparison to the great benefits which would accrue from it. He, Mr. CLAY, believed that about double the amount of the loss of a single steamboat and cargo, (the Tennessee) would effect the whole improvement in the navigation of that river, which ought to be at this time attempted. In this great object twelve States and two Territories were, in different degrees, interested. The power to effect the improvement of that river was surely not municipal, in the sense in which the gentleman used the term. If it were, to which of the twelve States and two Territories concerned did it belong? It was a great object, which could only be effected by a Confederacy. And here is existing that Confederacy, and no other can lawfully exist; for the Constitution prohibits the States, immediately interested, from entering into any treaty or compact with each other. Other examples might be given to show, that, if even the power existed, the inclination to exert it would not be felt, to effectuate certain improvements eminently calculated to promote the prosperity of the Union. Neither of the three States, nor all of them united, through which the Cumberland road passes, would ever have erected that road. Two of them would have thrown in every impediment to its completion in their power. Federative in its character, it could only have been executed so far by the application of federative means. Again: the contemplated canal through New Jersey; that to connect the waters of the Chesapeake and Delaware; that to unite the Ohio and the Potomac, were all objects of a general and federative nature, in which the States, through which they might severally pass, could not be expected to feel any such special interest as would lead to their execution. Tending, as undoubtedly they would do, to promote the good of the whole, the power and the treasure of the whole must be applied to their execution, if they are ever consummated.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Mr. CLAY did not think, then, that we should be at all assisted in expounding the Constitution of the United States, by the principle which the gentleman from Virginia had suggested in respect to municipal powers. The powers of both governments were undoubtedly municipal, often operating upon the same subject. He thought a better rule than that which the gentleman furnished for interpreting the Constitution might be deduced from an attentive consideration of the peculiar character of the Articles of Confederation, as contrasted with that of the present Constitution. By those articles, the powers of the thirteen United States were exerted collaterally. They operated through an intermediary. They were addressed to the several States, and their execution depended upon the pleasure and the co-operation of the States individually. The States seldom fulfilled the expectations of the General Government in regard to its requisitions, and often wholly disappointed them. Languor and debility, in the movement of the old Confederation, were the inevitable consequence of that arrangement of power. By the existing Constitution, the powers of the General Government act directly on the persons and things within its scope, without the intervention or impediments incident to any intermediacy. In executing the great trust which the Constitution of the United States creates, we must, therefore, reject that interpretation of its provisions which would make the General Government dependent upon those of the States for the execution of any of its powers; and may safely conclude that the only genuine construction would be that which should enable this Government to execute the great purposes of its institution, without the co-operation, and, if indispensably necessary, even against the will of any particular State. This is the characteristic difference between the two systems of government, of which we should never lose sight. Interpreted in the one way, we shall relapse into the feebleness and debility of the old Confederacy. In the other, we shall escape from its evils, and fulfil the great purposes which the enlightened framers of the existing Constitution intended to effectuate. The importance of this essential difference in the two forms of government, would be shown in the future progress of the argument.

Before he proceeded to comment upon those parts of the Constitution which appeared to him to convey the power in question, he hoped he should be allowed to disclaim, for his part, several sources whence others had deduced the authority. The gentleman from Virginia seemed to think it remarkable that the friends of the power should disagree so much among themselves; and to draw a conclusion against its existence from the fact of this discrepancy. But he (Mr. C.) could see nothing extraordinary in this diversity of views. What was more common than for different men to contemplate the same subject under various aspects? Such was the nature of the human mind, that enlightened men, perfectly upright in their intentions, differed in their opinions on almost every topic that could be mentioned. It was rather a presumption in favor of the cause which he was humbly maintaining, that the same result should be attained by so many various modes of reasoning. But, if contrariety of views might be pleaded with any effect against the advocates of the disputed power, it equally availed itself against their opponents. There was, for example, not a very exact coincidence in opinion between the President of the United States and the gentleman from Virginia. The President says, (page 25 of his book,) "the use of the existing road by the stage, mail-carrier, or post boy, in passing over it, as others do, is all that would be thought of; the jurisdiction and soil remaining to the State, with a right in the State, or those authorized by its Legislature, to change the road at pleasure." Again, page 27, the President asks, "If the United States possessed the power contended for under this grant, might they not, in adopting the roads of the individual States, for the carriage of the mail, as has been done, assume jurisdiction over them, and preclude a right to interfere with or alter them?" They both agree that the General Government does not possess the power. The gentleman from Virginia admits, if he (Mr. C.) understood him correctly, that the designation of a State road as a post road, so far withdrew it from the jurisdiction of the State that it could not be afterwards put down or closed by the State; and in this he claims for the General Government more power than the President concedes to it. The President, on the contrary, pronounces that "the absurdity of such a pretension" (that is, preventing, by the designation of a post road, the power of the State from altering or changing it) "must be apparent to all who examine it." The gentleman thinks that the designation of a post road withdraws it entirely, so far as it is used for that purpose, from the power of the whole State; whilst the President thinks it absurd to assert that a mere county court may not defeat the execution of a law of the United States. The President thinks that under the power of appropriating the money of the United States, Congress may apply it to any object of internal improvement, provided it does not assume any territorial jurisdiction; and, in this respect, he claims for the General Government more power than the gentleman from Virginia assigns to it. And he (Mr. C.) must own that he so far coincided with the gentleman from Virginia. If the power can be traced to no more legitimate source than to that of appropriating the public treasure, he yielded the question.

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

The truth is, that there is no specific grant in the Constitution of the power of appropriation; nor was any such requisite. It is a resulting power. The Constitution vests in Congress the power of taxation, with but few limitations, to raise a public revenue. It then enumerates the powers of Congress. And it follows, of necessity, that Congress has the right to apply the money so raised to the execution of the powers so granted. The clause which concludes the enumeration of the granted powers, by authorizing the passage of all laws "necessary and proper" to effectuate them, comprehends the power of appropriation. And the framers of the Constitution recognise it by the restriction that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in virtue of a previous appropriation by law. It was to him wonderful how the President should have brought his mind to the conclusion that, under the power of appropriation, thus incidentally existing, a right could be set up, in its nature almost without limitation, to employ the public money. He combats with great success and much ability any deduction of power from the clause relating to the general welfare. He shows that the effect of it would be to overturn, or render useless and nugatory, the careful enumeration of our powers; and that it would convert a cautiously limited Government into one without limitation. The same process of reasoning by which his mind was brought to this just conclusion, one would have thought, should have warned him against his claiming, under the power of appropriation, such a vast latitude of authority. He reasons strongly against the power, as claimed by us, harmless and beneficent and limited, as it must be admitted to be, and yet he sets up a power boundless in its extent, unrestrained to the object of internal improvements, and comprehending the whole scope of human affairs. For, if the power exists, as he asserts it, what human restraint is there upon it? He does, indeed, say, that it cannot be exerted so as to interfere with the territorial jurisdiction of the States. But this is a restriction altogether gratuitous, flowing from the bounty of the President, and not found in the prescriptions of the Constitution. If we have a right, indefinitely, to apply the money of the Government to internal improvements, or to any other object, what is to prevent the application of it to the purchase of the sovereignty itself, of a State, if a State were mean enough to sell its sovereignty, to the purchase of kingdoms, empires, the globe itself? With an almost unlimited power of taxation; and, after the revenue is raised, with a right to apply it under no other limitations than those which the President's caution has suggested, he could not see what other human power was needed. It had been said by Cæsar or Bonaparte, no doubt thought by both, that with soldiers enough they could get money enough, and with money enough they could command soldiers enough. According to the President's interpretation of the Constitution, one of these great levers of public force and power is possessed by this Government. The President seems to contemplate, as fraught with much danger, the power, humbly as it is claimed, to effect the internal improvement of the country. And, in his attempt to overthrow it, sets up one of infinitely greater magnitude. The quantum of power which we claim over the subject of internal improvement is, it is true, of greater amount and force than that which results from the President's view of the Constitution; but then it is limited to the object of internal improvements, whilst the power set up by the President has no such limitation, and in effect, as Mr. C. conceived, has no limitation whatever, but that of the ability of the people to bear taxation.

With the most profound respect for the President, and after the most deliberate consideration of his argument, Mr. C. could not agree with him. He could not think that any political power accrued to this Government, from the mere authority which it possessed to appropriate the public revenue. The power to make internal improvements drew after it, most certainly, the right to appropriate money to consummate the object. But he could not conceive that this right of appropriation drew after it the power of internal improvements. The appropriation of money was consequence, not cause. It follows: it does not precede. According to the order of nature, we first determine upon the object to be accomplished, and then appropriate the money necessary to its consummation. According to the order of the Constitution, the power is defined, and the application, that is, the appropriation of the money requisite to its effectuation, follows, as a necessary and proper means. The practice of Congressional legislation was conformable to both. We first inquire what we may do, and provide by law for its being done; and we then appropriate, by another act of legislation, the money necessary to accomplish the specified object. The error of the argument lies in its beginning too soon. It supposes the money to be in the Treasury, and then seeks to disburse it. But how came it there? Congress cannot impose taxes without an object. Their imposition must be in reference to the whole mass of our powers; to the general purposes of Government, or with the view to the fulfilment of some one of those powers, or to the attainment of some one of those purposes. In either case, we consult the Constitution, and ascertain the extent of the authority which is confided to us. We cannot, Constitutionally, lay the taxes without regard to the extent of our powers; and then, having acquired the money of the public, appropriate it, because we have got it, to any object indefinitely.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Nor did he claim the power in question from the consent or grant of any particular State or States, through which an object of internal improvement might pass. It might, indeed, be prudent to consult a State through which such an improvement might happen to be carried, from considerations of deference and respect to its sovereign power; and from a disposition to maintain those relations of perfect amity which are ever desirable, between the General and State Governments. But the power to establish the improvement must be found in the Constitution, or it does not exist. And what is granted by all it cannot be necessary to obtain the consent of some to perform.

The gentleman from Virginia, in speaking of incidental powers, had used a species of argument which he intreated him candidly to reconsider. He had said that the chain of cause and effect was without end; that if we argued from a power expressly granted to all others, which might be convenient or necessary to its exertion, there were no bounds to the power of this Government; that, for example, under the power "to provide and maintain a navy," the right might be assumed to the timber necessary to its construction, and the soil on which it grew. The gentleman might have added, the acorns from which it sprung. What, upon the gentleman's own hypothesis, ought to have been his conclusion? That Congress possessed no power to provide and maintain a navy. Such a conclusion would have been quite as logical as that Congress has no power over internal improvements, from the possible lengths to which this power may be pushed. No one ever had or could controvert the existence of incidental powers. We may apply different rules for their extraction, but all must concur in the necessity of their actual existence. They result from the imperfections of our nature, and from the utter impossibility of foreseeing all the turns and vicissitudes in human affairs. They cannot be defined. Much is attained when the power, the end, is specified and guarded. Keeping that constantly in view, the means necessary to its attainment must be left to the sound and responsible discretion of the public functionary. Intrench him as you please, employ what language you may, in the Constitutional instrument, "necessary and proper," "indispensably necessary," or any other, and the question is still left open, does the proposed measure fall within the scope of the incidental power, circumscribed as it may be? Your safety against abuse must rest in his interest, his integrity, his responsibility, to the exercise of the elective franchise; finally, in the ultimate right, when all other redress fails, of an appeal to the remedy, to be used only in extreme cases, of forcible resistance against intolerable oppression.

Doubtless, by an extravagant and abusive enlargement of incidental powers, the State governments may be reduced within too narrow limits. Take any power, however incontestably granted to the General Government, and employ that kind of process of reasoning in which the gentleman from Virginia is so skilful, by tracing it to its remotest effects, you may make it absorb the powers of the State governments. Pursue the opposite course; take any incontestable power belonging to the governments, and follow it out into all its possible ramifications, and you may make it thwart and defeat the great operations of the government of the whole. This is the consequence of our systems. Their harmony is to be preserved only by forbearance, liberality, practical good sense, and mutual concession. Bring these dispositions into the administrations of our various institutions, and all the dreaded conflicts of authorities will be found to be perfectly imaginary.

He said that he disclaimed, for himself, several sources to which others had ascended to arrive at the power in question. In making this disclaimer, he meant to cast no imputation on them. He was glad to meet them, by whatever road they travelled, at the point of a Constitutional conclusion. Nor did their positions weaken his; on the contrary, if correctly taken, and his, also, were justified by fair interpretation, they added strength to his. But he felt it his duty, frankly and sincerely, to state his own views of the Constitution. In coming to the ground on which, said Mr. C., I make my stand to maintain the power, and where I am ready to meet its antagonists, I am happy, in the outset, to state my hearty concurrence with the gentleman from Virginia in the old, 1798, republican principles, (now become federal, also,) by which the Constitution is to be interpreted. I agree with him that this is a limited Government; that it has no powers but the granted powers; and that the granted powers are those which are expressly enumerated, or such as, being implied, are necessary and proper to effectuate the enumerated powers. And, if I do not show the power over federative, national, internal improvements to be fairly deducible, after the strictest application of these principles, I entreat the Committee unanimously to reject the bill. The gentleman from Virginia has rightly anticipated that, in regard to roads, I claim the power, under the grant, to establish post offices and post roads. The whole question on this part of the subject turns upon the true meaning of this clause, and that again upon the genuine signification of the word "establish." According to my understanding of it, the meaning of it is, to fix, to make firm, to build. According to that of the gentleman from Virginia, it is to designate, to adopt. Grammatical criticism was, to me, always unpleasant, and I do not profess to be any proficient in it. But I will confidently appeal, in support of my definition, to any vocabulary whatever of respectable authority, and to the common use of the word. That it could not mean only adoption was to me evident; for adoption pre-supposes establishment, which is precedent in its very nature.

That which does not exist, which is not established, cannot be adopted. There was, then, an essential difference between the gentleman from Virginia and me. I consider the power as original and creative; he as derivative, adoptive. But I will show, out of the mouth of the President himself, who agrees with the gentleman from Virginia, as to the sense of this word, that what I contend for is its genuine meaning. The President, in almost the first lines of his Message to this House, of the 4th of May, 1822, returning the Cumberland bill with his veto, says, "a power to 'establish turnpikes, with gates and tolls, &c.,' implies a power to adopt and execute a complete system of internal improvement." What is the sense in which the word "establish" is here used? Is it not creative? Did the President mean to adopt or designate some pre-existing turnpikes, with gates, &c., or, for the first time, to set them up under the authority of Congress? Again, the President says, "if it exist as to one 'road, [that is, the power to lay duties of transit, and to take the land on a valuation,] it exists as 'to any other, and to as many roads as Congress 'may think proper to 'establish.'" In what sense does he here employ the word? The truth is, that the President could employ no better than the Constitutional word, and he is obliged to use it in the precise sense for which I contend. But I go to a higher authority than that of the Chief Magistrate—to that of the Constitution itself. In expounding that instrument, we must look at all its parts; and if we find a word, the meaning of which it is desirable to obtain, we may safely rest upon the use which has been made of the same word in other parts of the instrument. The word "establish" is one of frequent recurrence in the Constitution; and I venture to say that it will be found uniformly to express the same idea. In the clause enumerating our powers, Congress has power "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization," &c. In the preamble, "We, the people 'of the United States, in order to form a more 'perfect union, establish justice, &c., do ordain 'and establish this Constitution," &c. What pre-existing code of justice was adopted? Did not the people of the United States, in this high, sovereign act, contemplate the construction of a code adapted to their federal condition? The sense of the word, as contended for, was self-evident when applied to the Constitution.

But let us look at the nature, object, and purposes of the power. The trust confided to Congress was one of the most beneficial character. It was the diffusion of information among all the parts of this Republic. It was the transmission and circulation of intelligence; it was to communicate knowledge of the laws and acts of Government; and to promote the great business of society in all its relations. This was a great trust, capable of being executed in a highly salutary manner. It could be executed only by Congress, and it should be as well performed as it could be, considering the wants and exigencies of Government. And here I beg leave to advert to the principle which I some time ago laid down, that the powers granted to this Government are to be carried into execution by its own inherent force and energy, without necessary dependence upon the State governments. If my construction secures this object; and if that of my opponents places the execution of this trust at the pleasure and mercy of the State governments, we must reject theirs and assume mine. But the construction of the President does make it so dependent. He contends that we can only use as post roads those which the States shall have previously established; that they are at liberty to alter, to change, and of course to shut them up at pleasure. It results from this view of the President, that any of the great mail routes now existing, that, for example, from South to North, may be closed at pleasure or by caprice, by any one of the States or its authorities through which it passes—by that of Delaware or any other. Is it possible that the construction of the Constitution can be correct, which allows a law of the United States, enacted for the good of the whole, to be obstructed or defeated in its operation by any one of the twenty-four Sovereignities? The gentleman from Virginia, it is true, denies the right of a State to close a road which has been designated as a post road. But suppose the State, no longer having occasion to use it for its own separate and peculiar purposes, withdraws all care and attention from its preservation. Can the State be compelled to repair it? No! the gentleman from Virginia must say and I will say. May not the General Government repair this road which is abandoned by the State power? May it not repair it in the most efficacious manner? And may it not protect and defend that which it has thus repaired, and which there is no longer an interest or inclination in the State to protect and defend? Or does the gentleman mean to contend that a road may exist in the statute book, which a State will not, and the General Government cannot, repair and improve? And what sort of an account should we render to the people of the United States of the execution of the high trust confided, for their benefit, to us, if we were to tell them that we had failed to execute it, because a State would not make a road for us?

The roads, and other internal improvements of States, are made in reference to their individual interests. It is the eye only of the whole, and the power of the whole that can look to the interests of all. In the infancy of the Government, and in the actual state of the public Treasury, it may be the only alternative left us to use those roads, which are made for State purposes, to promote the national object, ill as they may be adapted to it. It may never be necessary to make more than a few great national arteries of communication, leaving to the States the lateral and minor ramifications. Even these should only be executed, without pressure upon the resources of the country, and according to the convenience and ability of Government. But, surely, in the performance of a great national duty imposed upon this Government, which has for its object the distribution of intelligence, civil, commercial, literary, and social, we ought to perform the substance of the trust, and not content ourselves with a mere paper inefficient execution of it. If I am right in these views, the power to establish post roads being in its nature original and creative, and the Government having adopted the roads made by State means only from its inability to exert the whole extent of its authority, the controverted power is expressly granted to Congress, and there is an end of the question.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

It ought to be borne in mind that this power over roads was not contained in the Articles of Confederation, which limited Congress to the establishment of post offices; and that the general character of the present Constitution, as contrasted with those articles, is that of an enlargement of power. But, if the construction of the opposite side be correct, we are left precisely where the Articles of Confederation left us, notwithstanding the additional words contained in the present Constitution. What, too, will the gentleman do with the first member of the clause to establish post offices? Must Congress adopt, designate, some pre-existing office, established by State authority? But there is none such. May it not, then, fix, build, create, establish offices of its own?

The gentleman from Virginia sought to alarm us by the awful emphasis with which he set before us the total extent of post roads in the Union. Eighty thousand miles of post roads! exclaimed the gentleman; and will you assert, for the General Government, jurisdiction, and erect turnpikes on such an immense distance? Not to-day, nor to-morrow. But this Government is to last, I trust, forever; we may, at least, hope it will endure until the wave of population, cultivation, and intelligence, shall have washed the Rocky mountains and mingled with the Pacific. And may we not, also, hope that the day will arrive when the improvements and the comforts of social life shall spread over the wide surface of this vast continent? All this is not to be suddenly done. Society must not be burdened or oppressed. Things must be gradual and progressive. The same species of formidable array which the gentleman makes, might be exhibited in reference to the construction of a navy, or any other of the great purposes of Government. We might be told of the fleets and vessels of great maritime Powers which whiten the ocean, and triumphantly asked if we should vainly attempt to cope with or rival that tremendous power? And we should shrink from the effort, if we were to listen to his counsels, in hopeless despair. Yes, sir, it is a subject of peculiar delight to me to look forward to the proud and happy period, distant as it may be, when circulation and association between the Atlantic and the Pacific and the Mexican Gulf, shall be as free and perfect as they are at this moment in England, or in any other the most highly improved country on the globe. In the mean time, without bearing heavily upon any of our important interests, let us apply ourselves to the accomplishment of what is most practicable and immediately necessary.

But what most staggers my honorable friend, is the jurisdiction over the sites of roads and other internal improvements, which he supposes Congress might assume; and he considers the exercise of such a jurisdiction as furnishing the just occasion for serious alarm. Let us analyze the subject. Prior to the erection of a road under the authority of the General Government, there existed, in the State through which it passes, no actual exercise of jurisdiction over the ground which it traverses as a road. There was only the possibility of the exercise of such a jurisdiction when the State should, if ever, erect such a road. But the road is made by the authority of Congress, and out of the fact of its erection arises a necessity for its preservation and protection. The road is some thirty or fifty or sixty feet in width, and with that narrow limit passes through a part of the territory of the State. The capital expended in the making of the road incorporates itself with and becomes a part of the permanent and immovable property of the State. The jurisdiction which is claimed for the General Government, is that only which relates to the necessary defence, protection, and preservation, of the road. It is of a character altogether conservative. Whatever does not relate to the existence and protection of the road remains with the States. Murders, trespasses, contracts, all the occurrences and transactions of society upon the road, not affecting its actual existence, will fall within the jurisdiction of the civil or criminal tribunals of the State, as if the road had never been brought into existence. How much remains to the State? How little is claimed for the General Government? Is it possible that a jurisdiction so limited, so harmless, so unambitious, can be regarded, as seriously alarming to the sovereignty of the States? Congress now asserts and exercises, without contestation, a power to protect the mail in its transit, by the sanction of all suitable penalties. The man who violates it is punished with death or otherwise, according to the circumstances of the case. This power is exerted as incident to that of establishing post offices and post roads. Is the protection of a thing in transitu a power more clearly deducible from the grant, than that of facilitating, by means of a practicable road, its actual transportation? Mails certainly imply roads, roads imply their own preservation, their preservation implies the power to preserve them; and the Constitution tells us, in express terms, that we shall establish the one and the other.

In respect to cutting canals, I admit the question is not so clear as in regard to roads. With respect to these, as I have endeavored to show, the power is expressly granted. In regard to canals, it appears to me to be fairly comprehended in, or deducible from, certain granted powers. Congress has power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. Precisely the same measure of power which is granted in the one case is conferred in the other. And the uniform practical exposition of the Constitution, as to the regulation of foreign commerce, is equally applicable to that among the several States. Suppose, instead of directing the legislation of this Government constantly, as heretofore, to the object of foreign commerce, to the utter neglect of the interior commerce among the several States, the fact had been reversed, and now, for the first time, we were about to legislate for our foreign trade: Should we not, in that case, hear all the Constitutional objections made to the erection of buoys, beacons, lighthouses, the surveys of coasts, and the other numerous facilities accorded to the foreign trade, which we now hear to the making of roads and canals? Two years ago, a sea wall, in other words, a marine canal, was authorized by an act of Congress, in New Hampshire; and I doubt not that many of those voted for it who have now Constitutional scruples on this bill. Yes, any thing, every thing, may be done for foreign commerce; any thing, every thing, on the margin of the ocean. But nothing for domestic trade; nothing for the great interior of the country! Yet, the equity and the beneficence of the Constitution equally comprehends both. The gentleman does, indeed, maintain that there is a difference as to the character of the facilities in the two cases. But I put it to his own candor whether the only difference is not that which springs from the nature of the two elements on which the two species of commerce are conducted—the difference between land and water. The principle is the same whether you promote commerce by opening for it an artificial channel where now there is none, or by increasing the ease and safety with which it may be conducted through a natural channel which the bounty of Providence has bestowed. In the one case, your object is to facilitate arrival and departure from the ocean to the land. In the other, it is to accomplish the same object from the land to the ocean. Physical obstacles may be greater in the one case than in the other, but the moral or Constitutional power equally includes both. The gentleman from Virginia had, to be sure, contended that the power to make these commercial facilities was to be found in another clause of the Constitution—that which enables Congress to obtain cessions of territory for specific objects, and grants to it an exclusive jurisdiction. These cessions may be obtained for the “erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, or other needful buildings.” It is apparent that it relates altogether to military or naval affairs, and not to the regulation of commerce. How was the marine canal covered by this clause? Is it to be considered as a “needful building?” The object of this power is perfectly obvious. The Convention saw that, in military or naval posts, such as are indicated, it was indispensably necessary, for their proper government, to vest in Congress the power of exclusive legislation. If we claimed over objects of internal improvement an exclusive jurisdiction, the gentleman might urge, with much force, the clause in question. But the claim of concurrent jurisdiction only is asserted. The gentleman professes himself unable to comprehend how concurrent jurisdiction can be exercised by two different Governments at the same time over the same persons or things. But, is not this the fact with respect to the State and Federal Governments? Does not every person, and every thing, within our limits, sustain a two-fold relation to the State and to the Federal authority? The power of taxation as exerted by both Governments, that over the militia, besides many others, is concurrent. No doubt embarrassing cases may be conceived and stated by gentlemen of acute and ingenious minds. One was put to me yesterday. Two canals are desired, one by the Federal, and the other by a State government; and there is not a supply of water but for the feeder of one canal; which is to take it? The Constitution, which ordains the supremacy of the laws of the United States, answers the question. The good of the whole is paramount to the good of a part. The same difficulty might possibly arise in the exercise of the incontestable power of taxation. We know that the imposition of taxes has its limits. There is a maximum which cannot be transcended. Suppose the citizen to be taxed by the General Government to the utmost extent of his ability, or a thing as much as it can possibly bear, and the State imposes a tax at the same time; which authority is to take it? Extreme cases of this sort may serve to amuse and to puzzle; but they will hardly ever arise in practice. And we may safely confide in the moderation, good sense, and mutual good dispositions, of the two Governments to guard against the imagined conflicts.

It is said by the President that the power to regulate commerce merely authorizes the laying of imposts and duties. But Congress has no power to lay imposts and duties on the trade among the several States. The grant must mean, therefore, something else. What is it? The power to regulate commerce among the several States, if it has any meaning, implies authority to foster it, to promote it, to bestow on it facilities similar to those which have been conceded to our foreign trade. It cannot mean only an empty authority to adopt regulations without the capacity to give practical effect to them. All the powers of this Government should be interpreted in reference to its first, its best, its greatest object, the Union of these States. And is not that union best invigorated by an intimate, social, and commercial connexion between all the parts of the Confederacy? Can that be accomplished—that is, can the federative objects of this Government be attained but by the application of federative resources?

Of all the powers bestowed on this Government, Mr. C. thought none were more clearly vested, than that to regulate the distribution of the intelligence, private and official, of the country; to regulate the distribution of its commerce; and to regulate the distribution of the physical force of the Union. In the execution of the high and solemn trust which these beneficial powers imply, we must look to the great ends which the framers of our admirable Constitution had in view. We must reject, as wholly incompatible with their enlightened and beneficent intentions, that construction of these powers which would resuscitate all the debility and inefficiency of the ancient confederacy. In the vicissitudes of human affairs, who can foresee all the possible cases, in which it may be necessary to apply the public force, within or without the Union? This Government is charged with the use of it, to repel invasions, to suppress insurrections, to enforce the laws of the Union; in short, for all the unknown and undefinable purposes of war, foreign or intestine, wherever and however it may rage. During its existence, may not Government, for its effectual prosecution, order a road to be made, or a canal to be cut, to relieve, for example, an exposed point of the Union? If, when the emergency comes, there is a power to provide for it, that power must exist in the Constitution, and not in the emergency. A wise, precautionary, and parental policy, anticipating danger, will beforehand provide for the hour of need. Roads and canals are in the nature of fortifications, since, if not the depositories of military resources, they enable you to bring into rapid action the military resources of the country, wherever they may be. They are better than any fortifications, because they serve the double purposes of peace and war. They dispense, in a great degree, with fortifications, since they have all the effect of that concentration, at which fortifications aim. I appeal from the precepts of the President to the practice of the President. While he denies to Congress the power in question, he does not scruple, upon his sole authority, as numerous instances in the statute book will testify, to order, at pleasure, the opening of roads by the military, and then come here to ask us to pay for them. Nay, more, sir; a subordinate but highly respectable officer of the Executive Government, I believe, would not hesitate to provide a boat or cause a bridge to be erected over an inconsiderable stream, to insure the regular transportation of the mail. And it happens to be within my personal knowledge that the head of the Post Office Department, as a prompt and vigilant officer should do, had recently despatched an agent to ascertain the causes of the late frequent vexatious failures of the great northern mail, and to inquire if a provision of a boat or bridge over certain small streams in Maryland, which have produced them, would not prevent their recurrence.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

I was much surprised at one argument of the honorable gentleman. He told the House that the Constitution had carefully guarded against inequality, among the several States, in the public burdens, by certain restrictions upon the power of taxation; that the effect of the adoption of a system of internal improvements would be to draw the resources from one part of the Union, and to expend them in the improvement of another, and that the spirit, at least, of the Constitutional equality would be thus violated. From the nature of things, the Constitution could not specify the theatre of the expenditure of the public treasure. That expenditure, guided by, and looking to, the public good, must be made, necessarily, where it will most subserve the interests of the whole Union. The argument is, that the locale of the collection of the public contributions, and the locale, of their disbursement, should be the same. Now, sir, let us carry this argument out; and no man is more capable than the ingenious gentleman from Virginia, of tracing an argument to its utmost consequences. The locale of the collection of the public revenue is the pocket of the citizen; and, to abstain from the violation of the principle of equality adverted to by the gentleman, we should restore back to each man's pocket precisely what was taken from it. If the principle contended for be true, we are habitually violating it. We raise about twenty millions of dollars, a very large revenue, considering the actual distresses of the country. And, sir, notwithstanding all the puffing, flourishing statements of its prosperity, emanating from printers who are fed upon the pap of the public Treasury, the whole country is in a condition of very great distress. Where is this vast revenue expended? Boston, New York, the great capitals of the North, are the theatres of its disbursement. There the interest upon the public debt is paid. There the expenditure in the building, equipment, and repair, of the national vessels takes place. There all of the great expenditures of the Government necessarily concentrate. This is no cause of just complaint. It is inevitable, resulting from the accumulation of capital, the state of the arts, and other circumstances belonging to our great cities. But, sir, if there be a section of this Union having more right than any other to complain of this transfer of the circulating medium from one quarter of the Union to another, the West, the poor West—[Here Mr. BARBOUR explained. He had meant that the Constitution limited Congress as to the proportions of revenue to be drawn from the several States; but the principle of this provision would be vacated by internal improvements of immense expense, and yet of a local character. Our public ships, to be sure, are built at the seaports, but they do not remain there. Their home is the mountain wave; but internal improvements are essentially local; they touch the soil of the States, and their benefits, at least the largest part of them, are confined to the States where they exist.] The explanation of the gentleman has not materially varied the argument. He says that the home of our ships is the mountain wave. Sir, if the ships go to sea, the money with which they were built, or refitted, remains on shore, and the cities where the equipment takes place derive the benefit of the expenditure. It requires no stretch of the imagination to conceive the profitable industry—the axes, the hammers, the saws—the mechanic arts which are put in motion by this expenditure. And all these, and other collateral advantages, are enjoyed by the seaports. The navy is built for the interest of the whole. Internal improvements, of that general, federative character, for which we contend, would also be for the interest of the whole. And, I should think, their abiding with us, and not going abroad on the vast deep, was rather cause of recommendation than objection.

But, Mr. Chairman, if there be any part of this Union more likely than all others to be benefited by the adoption of the gentleman's principle, regulating the public expenditure, it is the West. There is a perpetual drain from that embarrassed and highly distressed portion of our country, of its circulating medium to the East. There, but few and inconsiderable expenditures of the public money take place. There we have none of those public works, no magnificent edifices, forts, armories, arsenals, dockyards, &c., which more or less are to be found in every Atlantic State. In at least seven States beyond the Alleghany, not one solitary public work of this Government is to be found. If, by one of those awful and terrible dispensations of Providence, which sometimes occur, this Government should be unhappily annihilated, every where on the seaboard traces of its former existence would be found; whilst we should not have, in the West, a single monument remaining on which to pour out our affections and our regrets. Yet, sir, we do not complain. No portion of your population is more loyal to the Union, than the hardy freemen of the West. Nothing can weaken or eradicate their ardent desire for its lasting preservation. None are more prompt to vindicate the interests and rights of the nation from all foreign aggression. Need I remind you of the glorious scenes in which they participated, during the late war—a war in which they had no peculiar or direct interest, waged for no commerce, no seamen of theirs? But it was enough for them that it was a war demanded by the character and the honor of the nation. They did not stop to calculate its cost of blood, or of treasure. They flew to arms; they rushed down the valley of the Mississippi, with all the impetuosity of that noble river. They fought the enemy. They found him at the beach. They fought; they bled; they covered themselves and their country with immortal glory. They enthusiastically shared in all the transports occasioned by our victories, whether won on the ocean or on the land. They felt, with the keenest distress, whatever disaster befell us. No, sir, I repeat it, neglect, injury itself, cannot alienate the affections of the West from this Government. They cling to it, as to their best, their greatest, their last hope. You may impoverish them, reduce them to ruin, by the mistakes of your policy, and you cannot drive them from you. They do not complain of the expenditure of the public money, where the public exigencies require its disbursement. But, I put it to your candor, if you ought not, by a generous and national policy, to mitigate, if not prevent, the evils resulting from the perpetual transfer of the circulating medium of the West to the East. One million and a half of dollars annually, is transferred for the public lands alone; and, almost every dollar goes, like him who goes to death—to a bourne from which no traveller returns. In ten years it will amount to fifteen millions; in twenty to —; but I will not pursue the appalling results of arithmetic. Gentlemen who believe that these vast sums are supplied by emigrants from the East, labor under great error. There was a time when the tide of emigration from the East bore along with it the means to effect the purchase of the public domain. But that tide has, in a great measure, now stopped. And as population advances farther and farther West, it will entirely cease. The greatest migrating States in the Union, at this time, are Kentucky first,

Ohio next, and Tennessee. The emigrants from those States carry with them, to the States and territories lying beyond them, the circulating medium, which, being invested in the purchase of the public land, is transmitted to the points where the wants of Government require it. If this debilitating and exhausting process were inevitable, it must be borne with manly fortitude. But we think that a fit exertion of the powers of this Government would mitigate the evil. We believe that the Government incontestably possesses the Constitutional power to execute such internal improvements as are called for by the good of the whole. And we appeal to your equity, to your parental regard, to your enlightened policy, to perform the high and beneficial trust thus sacredly reposed. I am sensible of the delicacy of the topic to which I have reluctantly adverted, in consequence of the observations of the honorable gentleman from Virginia. And I hope there will be no misconception of my motives in dwelling upon it. A wise and considerate Government should anticipate and prevent, rather than wait for the operation of causes of discontent.

Let me ask, Mr. Chairman, what has this Government done on the great subject of Internal Improvements, after so many years of its existence, and with such an inviting field before it? You have made the Cumberland road only. Gentlemen appear to have considered that a Western road. They ought to recollect that not one stone has yet been broken, not one spade of earth has been yet removed in any Western State. The road begins in Maryland and it terminates at Wheeling. It passes through the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. All the direct benefit of the expenditure of the public money on that road, has accrued to those three States. Not one cent in any Western State. And yet we have had to beg, entreat, supplicate you, session after session, to grant the necessary appropriations to complete the road. I have myself toiled until my powers have been exhausted and prostrated to prevail on you to make the grant. We were actuated to make these exertions for the sake of the collateral benefit only to the West; that we might have a way by which we should be able to continue and maintain an affectionate intercourse with our friends and brethren—that we might have a way to reach the Capitol of our country, and to bring our councils, humble as they may be, to consult and mingle with yours in the advancement of the national prosperity. Yes, sir, the Cumberland road has only reached the margin of a Western State; and, from some indications which have been given during this session, I should apprehend it would there pause for ever, if my confidence in you were not unbounded; if I had not before witnessed that appeals were never unsuccessful to your justice, to your magnanimity, to your fraternal affection.

But, sir, the bill on your table is no Western bill. It is emphatically a national bill, comprehending all, looking to the interests of the whole. The people of the West never thought of, never desired, never asked, for a system exclusively for their benefit. The system contemplated by this bill looks to great national objects, and proposes the ultimate application to their accomplishment of the only means by which they can be effected, the means of the nation—means which, if they be withheld from such objects, the Union, I do most solemnly believe, of these now happy and promising States, may, at some distant (I trust a far, far distant) day, be endangered and shaken at its centre.

JANUARY, 1824.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

When Mr. CLAY had concluded—

The question was taken on striking out the enacting clause in the bill, and decided in the negative—ayes 74, noes 109.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to fill the blank for appropriation with the sum of thirty thousand dollars, which was carried—ayes 105.

The Committee then rose, and reported the bill with the amendment, and, on the question of its engrossment for a third reading, the yeas and nays were called, on motion of Mr. MERCER, and are as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbot, Adams, Alexander of Tennessee, Allen of Tennessee, Allison, Baylies, J. S. Barbour, Bartlett, Bartley, Beecher, Blair, Breck, Brown, Buchanan, Buckner, Campbell of Ohio, Carter, Cassidy, Condict, Cook, Crowninshield, Cushman, Cuthbert, Durfee, Dwight, Eddy, Ellis, Farrelly, Forsyth, Forward, Fuller, Garrison, Gazlay, Govan, Gurley, Harris, Hayward, Hemphill, Henry, Herkimer, Holcombe, Houston, Ingham, Isacks, Johnson of Virginia, J. T. Johnson, F. Johnson, Kent, Kremer, Lawrence, Lee, Letcher, Little, Livingston, McArthur, McDuffie, McKean, McKee, McKim, McLane of Delaware, McLean of Ohio, Martindale, Marvin, Matlack, Mercer, Metcalfe, Miller, Mitchell of Pennsylvania, Mitchell of Maryland, Moore of Kentucky, Moore of Alabama, Neale, Newton, Owen, Patterson of Pennsylvania, Patterson of Ohio, Plumer of Pennsylvania, Poinsett, Prince, Rankin, Reynolds, Rich, Rogers, Ross, Saunders, Sandford, Scott, Sloane, William Smith, Spence, Standefer, J. Stephenson, Stewart, Storrs, Strong, Swan, Test, Thompson of Kentucky, Tod, Trimble, Udree, Vance of North Carolina, Vance of Ohio, Vinton, Warfield, Wayne, Webster, Whitlesey, White, Wickliffe, James Wilson, Henry Wilson, Wilson of Ohio, and Wright—114.

NAYS—Messrs. Alexander of Virginia, Allen of Massachusetts, Archer, Ball, Barber of Connecticut, P. P. Barbour, Bassett, Bradley, Buck, Burleigh, Burton, Cambreleng, Campbell of South Carolina, Cary, Clark, Cobb, Cocke, Collins, Conner, Crafts, Craig, Culpeper, Day, Dwinell, Eaton, Edwards of North Carolina, Floyd, Foot of Connecticut, Foote of New York, Frost, Gatlin, Gist, Hall, Harvey, Hayden, Herrick, Hobart, Hogeboom, Hooks, Jenkins, Kidder, Lathrop, Leftwich, Lincoln, Litchfield, Livermore, Long, Longfellow, McCoy, Mangum, Mallory, Matson, Morgan, Plumer of New Hampshire, Randolph, Reed, Richards, Sharpe, Sibley, Arthur Smith, Alex. Smyth, Spaight, Sterling, A. Stevenson, Stoddard, Taylor, Ten Eyck, Thompson of Georgia, Tomlinson, Tracy, Tucker of Virginia, Tucker of South Carolina, Tyson, Van Rensselaer, Van Wyck, Whipple, Whitman, Williams of Virginia, Williams of North Carolina, Wilson of South Carolina, Wood, and Woods—82.

To-morrow was then assigned for the third reading of the bill.

The following is a copy of the bill as it passed the House:

A Bill to procure the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, upon the subject of roads and canals.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, to be made, of the routes of such roads and canals as he may deem of national importance, in a commercial or military point of view, or necessary for the transportation of the public mail, designating, in the case of each canal, what parts may be made capable of sloop navigation; the surveys, plans, and estimates, for each, when completed, to be laid before Congress.

And be it further enacted, That, to carry into effect the objects of this act, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ two or more skilful civil engineers, and such officers of the corps of engineers, or who may be detailed to do duty with that corps, as he may think proper; and the sum of thirty thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated.

THURSDAY, January 15.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to which was referred the petitions of William Whitehead, John Tappan, Nathaniel W. and Charles H. Appleton, Joshua Aubin, Benjamin Hazletine, Samuel Adams, James Graham, and of James Crawford, and others, made a report thereon, accompanied by a bill for the relief of certain persons who have paid duties on certain goods imported into Castine; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made a report on the petition of John Thomas and Company, of Ohio, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims were discharged from the consideration of the petition of Captain Pollard, Blue Eyes, and Jim Robinson, Indians belonging to the Seneca tribe, and from the petition of James Wilson; and the petitions were referred to the Committee of the Whole to which is committed the bill concerning invalid pensioners.

On motion of Mr. McKIM, the Committee of Ways and Means were directed to inquire into the expediency of reviving the first, second, third, and fourth sections of an act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, passed the third day of March, 1815.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution, which was read; and, on motion of the mover, laid on the table, viz:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to report a bill appropriating the annual proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and the dividends of the United States Bank stock, commencing from the 1st January, 1823, to the purposes of internal improvement, to be distributed among the States, according to their representation, and expended on objects to be designated by Congress, within or

H. OF R.

Monument to Washington.

JANUARY, 1824.

bordering on the respective States, unless where any State may consent that its proportion of the fund shall be applied to an object not immediately connected with it territorial limits.

The engrossed bill to procure the necessary estimates, plans, and surveys, upon the subject of roads and canals, was called up for a third reading; when it was, on motion of Mr. FOOT, of Connecticut, ordered to lie on the table.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed bills of this House of the following titles, viz: "An act further extending the term of half-pay pensions to the widows and children of officers, seamen, and marines, who died in the public service;" and "An act making a partial appropriation for the support of Government for the year 1824;" with an amendment to each. The Senate have also passed a bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Joseph Wood, of Ohio;" in which amendments and bill last-mentioned they ask the concurrence of this House.

Mr. McDUFFIE gave notice that he would, tomorrow, call up the consideration of the reported amendment of the Constitution, respecting the choice of President and Vice President of the United States.

The amendments of the Senate to the partial appropriation bill were considered, and concurred in.

The bill from the Senate, for the relief of Joseph Wood, of Ohio, was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The House then, on motion of Mr. FORSYTH, took up the report of the Committee of Foreign Relations, on the petition of Henry and David Cotheal, and David S. Hallett, which was read and agreed to; so that the committee is discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWS.

Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of giving the same pensions to the widows of the officers and soldiers who died in the service during the late war, and who enlisted to serve during the war, as is allowed to the widows of those who enlisted for a shorter term.

Mr. T., in support of his resolution, observed, that he had been much surprised at the fact disclosed to him in answer to a recent application, that, for the widows of those who had enlisted for the whole war, no provision had been made, while others, who served but for twelve or eighteen months, had a pension granted them. Mr. T. made some further explanations as to the existing inequality of the laws, and he thought, if the nation had a pension list at all, it ought to rest on some principle of justice, which, he contended, at present it did not.

Mr. WRIGHT moved to amend the resolution, by substituting, for the Committee on Pensions and Revolutionary Claims, a select committee; which was not carried.

Mr. MCCOY suggested to the mover, that the resolution be so modified as to revive the former law on the same subject. To this Mr. TUCKER dissented; and, the question being taken, the resolution was not agreed to.

MONUMENT TO WASHINGTON.

Mr. BUCHANAN presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire in what manner the resolutions of Congress, passed on the 24th December, 1799, relative to the erection of a marble monument in the Capitol, at the City of Washington, to commemorate the great events of the military and political life of General Washington, may be best accomplished, and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. BUCHANAN said, the House would, he trusted, excuse him for making a few observations in explanation of the motives which had impelled him to offer the resolution now under consideration. On the 24th December, 1799, the Congress of the United States resolved, "That a marble monument be erected by the United States, in the Capitol, at the City of Washington, and that the family of General Washington be requested to permit his body to be deposited under it; and that the monument be so designed as to commemorate the great events of his military and political life." They also resolved, "That the President of the United States be requested to direct a copy of these resolutions to be transmitted to Mrs. Washington, assuring her of the profound respect Congress will ever bear to her person and character; of their condolence on the late afflicting dispensations of Providence; and entreating her assent to the interment of the remains of General George Washington in the manner expressed in the first resolution." The then President of the United States transmitted these resolutions to Mrs. Washington, who, on the 31st December, 1799, returned an answer, which I will take leave to read to the House:

MOUNT VERNON, Dec. 31, 1799.

SIR: While I feel with keenest anguish, the late dispensation of Divine Providence, I cannot be insensible to the mournful tributes of respect and veneration which are paid to the memory of my dear deceased husband; and, as his best services and most anxious wishes were always devoted to the welfare and happiness of his country, to know that they were truly appreciated, and gratefully remembered, affords no inconsiderable consolation.

Taught by that great example which I have so long had before me, never to oppose my private wishes to the public will, I must consent to the request made by Congress, which you have had the goodness to transmit to me; and in doing this I need not, I cannot say what a sacrifice of individual feeling I make to a sense of public duty.

With grateful acknowledgments, and unfeigned thanks, for the personal respect, and evidences of condolence, expressed by Congress, and yourself.

I remain, very respectfully,

Sir, your most obed't humble servant,

MARTHA WASHINGTON.

During the same session of Congress, a bill passed the House of Representatives for erecting

JANUARY, 1824.

Monument to Washington.

H. OF R.

a mausoleum for George Washington in the City of Washington. It was postponed in the Senate until the next session. Several attempts have since been made in Congress to redeem the plighted faith of the nation, but they have all proved unavailing. The man who was emphatically first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen, has been sleeping with his fathers for almost a quarter of a century, and his mortal remains have yet been unhonored by that people, who, with justice, call him the father of their country.

It is difficult to determine, whether this neglect be more impolitic or ungrateful. Every wise nation has paid honors to the memory of the men who have been the saviours of their country. Sculpture and painting have vied with each other, in transmitting their images and the memory of their deeds to the remotest generations. By these means, the holy fire of virtuous emulation has been kindled in the bosoms of the youth of succeeding ages.

Our country has produced a General, whose prudence and perseverance, whose courage and military skill, conquered our independence, against fearful odds, from the most powerful nation on earth; and what is still more wonderful, was never intoxicated by the illusions of military glory. Our country has given birth to a statesman, who was chiefly instrumental in converting the chaos of the old Confederation, into the most perfect fabric of human wisdom—the Federal Constitution; and whose conduct, as President of the United States, was characterized by such wisdom and virtue, that, after the strictest examination, it is now admitted to be the most proper guide, to direct us in the path which leads to the nation's prosperity and glory. In short, our country has produced a WASHINGTON; he has been dead for four and twenty years, and we have erected no monument on which to record his virtues, and our gratitude.

Mr. B. said, that Congress, by neglecting, for so long a period, to accomplish the object of the resolutions, had been subjected to the imputation of perfidy, as well as ingratitude. We made a solemn promise to the widowed partner of Washington, and to the people of the United States, by a legislative act, that we would erect a monument to his memory. That distinguished lady has long slumbered with him in the grave, and this pledge has never yet been redeemed. Although his mortal remains, have, at our request, and by her consent, become the property of the public, yet they still lie neglected. Indeed, I have been credibly informed, that an attempt has been made to steal them away from his country, which had almost proved successful.

Do we, Mr. Speaker, consider it a matter of necessity, in all respects, to preserve the public faith inviolate? And shall we prove faithless only in what concerns the memory of Washington? The danger of the precedent, the argument so often repeated in this House, against the adoption of measures, will, in this case, be unavailing. The long list of ages, which preceded the birth of Washington, had never presented a human character so perfect; and there is but a bare possibility that future generations will produce his equal.

Mr. B. hoped the resolution would pass unanimously.

Mr. CARY, of Georgia, arose and said, that, before the question was taken on the resolution, he would ask leave to occupy the attention of the House for a few moments, while he gave expression to what he believed were the just sentiments and feelings of an American on the subject it contemplated. The resolution directs a committee of this House to report, by bill, or otherwise, on the propriety of erecting a monument, or mausoleum, to the memory of WASHINGTON. He had listened with attention to the ingenious and unimpassioned address of the mover of the resolution, in which he had endeavored to prove that it was a duty of justice and of gratitude in this nation, to give such an expression of what it feels itself to owe to the memory of its illustrious benefactor; but he dissented from that honorable gentleman in the opinion he had expressed, and it was the purpose of his present address to vindicate to that gentleman and to the House the dissent he had now expressed; in doing this, he would empty his mind of the sentiments he held on this subject. The gentleman had very truly said that it had long been the practice of nations to express their veneration for the memory of illustrious men, by erecting splendid monuments over their ashes. But, he would ask, in what spirit, and at what period, did that practice originate? It was before the lights of reason had penetrated the darkness of society, and the deposits of history had taught mankind the true mode of commemorating and eternizing the deeds of illustrious men; it had had its beginning in successful conquest, when some military chieftain first plunged his sword into a nation's bosom, and then lavished its wealth in monuments to perpetuate his name; it was a principle of vanity which had given existence to the practice. We were, to be sure, and had long been, in the habit of going for precedents to Greece and Rome, and that classic enthusiasm which animates every scholar, that consecrated reverence which he must ever feel for the labors and achievements of departed genius, deludes our judgment, and would persuade us to bring the associations derived from the venerable remains of ancient sculpture, to times of a wholly different character, and a country in wholly different circumstances. The Government of this Union was entirely and widely different from those of the old world; it had a different origin; it was a phoenix-like Government, which sprung from the ashes of all the corruptions of those which had preceded it; and as the Government itself was new among men, those who had achieved its establishment should be commemorated in a new style. We need, Mr. Speaker, (said Mr. C.) no monuments to tell us that WASHINGTON has lived; he has a monument, he will continue to have one, in the heart of every American; such a monument as none before him ever had; and let it be our peculiar pride to enshrine him there alone. Yes, sir, we will keep WASHINGTON's monument in our bosoms. We will commit it to no perishable stone; his name shall have a purer, a more enduring memorial. Sir, my heart beats as ardently and fires as high as that of any of my countrymen on this subject; but I would erect no tomb. Suppose we build one, and determine its place to be here in this Capitol, will it be seen by the nation? No, it will only be visible to the favored few who are drawn to this spot by their public functions, who visit it on a jaunt of pleasure, or attend it on concerns of private business. But WASHINGTON has a monument already, far greater than you can build; his memorial is every where; from Maine to Louisiana; from the ocean to the mountains; and wherever, in their widely-spreading emigrations, the people of this Confederacy shall direct their steps, WASHINGTON travels with them, and they will continue to bear on his living monument till they have fixed it on the farthest shores of our continent.

Mr. BUCHANAN observed, in reply, that when he brought forward the resolution he had the honor to present to the House, he did not suppose that any gentleman would feel it to be his duty to oppose its adoption. He differed wholly from the honorable gentleman from Georgia. That gentleman maintained that it was not proper for a Republic, by monumental marble, to excite its citizens to virtuous deeds by publicly honoring the memory of those who had been the benefactors of their country. He, on the contrary, thought that in the case of Republics there was in the practice a peculiar and special propriety. Such monuments had, in all ages and countries, exerted a powerful effect in inciting men to patriotic virtue; our Government rests, its very foundations are laid, on that virtue; and it therefore seemed in a peculiar manner adapted to the circumstances of this Republic. It was, too, a practice which had been already sanctioned by the example of some of the most respectable States in the Union. But it was now too late to talk about the policy of the measure. Is not, asked Mr. B., the faith of the nation pledged? Has not the measure been publicly resolved upon by both Houses of Congress? Has it not received the sanction of the President of the United States? Is the country to promise to-day, and violate its promise to-morrow? The faith of the Government, pledged twenty-five years since, to the family of the deceased, and to the American people, has never, to this day, been redeemed. Shall we hold all our contracts inviolable but this? As to the precedent, that question has already been settled; the pledge has been given. And were gentlemen alarmed at the danger of such a precedent? They might calm their apprehensions; there was not the remotest danger of such another case recurring. The world, in its long course of days, had never beheld such a man before; and, in all the march of time, there was little probability of the world's ever seeing such another; and for himself, Mr. B. said, he felt so deeply the obligation to redeem the pledged promise of the nation, that, though little accustomed to make such requests, he must ask that the yeas and nays might be recorded.

Mr. TRIMBLE said that he did not rise for the purpose of pronouncing WASHINGTON's eulogium; that was a theme to which none was competent but the equal of WASHINGTON; and such a man was no where to be found. But he had risen to disabuse this nation from the charge of ingratitude to the memory of its benefactor. On what proof had so grievous a charge been founded? On the fact that no national monument of marble had yet been erected to his memory to inspire us (if he understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania) with sentiments of public virtue. Our patriotism must be cold indeed, if it could only be inspired by the coldness of a marble monument. God forbid that he should advance an opinion that such a monument ought not to be erected. But he would ask, if it had been erected fifteen or twenty years ago, and fixed within the walls of this Capitol, where would it have been, or what would have become of it, when this building was wrapped in flames? It would have fallen into the unhallowed hand of a barbarous enemy, who would have mutilated or carried it off. The only charge of ingratitude that could then have been urged, would have been, that the nation neglected to defend the Capitol; that, instead of fourteen thousand retreating from a handful of the invaders, they did not fight till only fourteen were left alive. When they had done this, they might erect a splendid monument. But when the Capitol, that is now going on in building, shall first be completed, and the monument itself shall have first been procured, it would be time enough to pass resolutions for fixing it in the Capitol. In the meanwhile, WASHINGTON has a monument in every place where there are Americans, where there are men; two worlds had joined to celebrate his actions; two hemispheres were filled with his name; and the globe itself might be pronounced his best and only fit mausoleum.

The resolution was then, on motion of Mr. GAZLAY, of Ohio, ordered to lie on the table, by a vote of 97 to 67.

SINKING FUND.

On motion of Mr. McLANE, the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the bill "authorizing the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to purchase the seven per cent. stock of the United States, in the year 1824."

[This bill provides, that the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund be, and they are hereby, authorized to purchase, during the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, any stock of the United States, bearing an interest of seven per centum per annum, not exceeding the sum of eight millions six hundred and ten thousand dollars, upon such terms as they may think proper, not exceeding the following rates above the principal sum purchased; that is to say:

For all such stock as they may purchase before the 1st day of April next, at a rate not exceeding one dollar and seventy-five cents for every sum of one hundred dollars, in addition to the interest which would have accrued on that day upon the said stock.

JANUARY, 1824.

Sinking Fund.

H. OF R.

For all such stock which they may purchase between the 1st day of April and the 1st day of July next, at a rate not exceeding seventy-five cents on every sum of $100, in addition to the interest which would have accrued on the day last mentioned.

For all such stock which they may purchase between the 1st day of July and the 1st day of October next, at a rate not exceeding, on every sum of $100, the amount of interest which would have accrued on the day last mentioned: and

For all such stock which they may purchase between the 1st day of October next and the 1st day of January, 1825, at a rate not exceeding the principal and the interest which shall have accrued at the day of purchase.

The 2d section of the bill provides, That the said Commissioners are hereby authorized to make such purchases under the foregoing restrictions, at such times and places as they may deem most eligible; and, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated.]

The 1st section being under consideration, Mr. McLANE moved to amend the bill by striking out one dollar and seventy-five cents in the 12th line, and substituting two dollars [so as to allow the Commissioners to pay for such United States stock as they may purchase prior to the 1st of April next, at a rate not exceeding two dollars on $100 in addition to the interest.]

Mr. McLANE said, in proposing the amendment to increase the premium in the first period, for the purchase of the seven per cent. stock, as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, from one dollar seventy-five cents to two dollars, that it might be expected of him to explain the considerations by which this proposition was recommended.

When they reported the bill, the Committee of Ways and Means supposed a premium of one dollar and seventy-five cents would be sufficient to promote the objects in view, but further reflection had satisfied him that they would be more certainly attained by enlarging the sum.

It was necessary to consider the measure proposed by the bill, in reference as well to the interests of the Government as to those of the stockholder, and the operation should be conducted with a view to both.

All the seven per cent. stock of the United States, said he, amounting to the sum of $8,606,490, will be redeemable on the first of January, 1825, and it is now certain, that there will be, on that day, sufficient funds, at the disposal of the Government, for this purpose. If no larger a sum were thrown at once into the market for new investment, it would necessarily produce serious inconvenience and embarrassment to the owners of the stock. The bill proposes to avoid these evils, by providing for its gradual redemption, during the present year, and offering to the stockholders the opportunity of selling their stock to the Government, whenever, in the course of the year, they may find a suitable investment for their funds.

As an amount of money, sufficient to purchase this stock, would otherwise remain idle in the Treasury, the gain produced by this plan to the Government, consists in the saving of the interest; or, in other words, the difference between the premium paid for the purchase and the interest which would accrue on the first January 1825.

It will, therefore, be manifest to the Committee, that the earlier the purchases shall be made, the greater will be the saving to the Government, and that, for this reason, it is not only their interest, but they have the means to offer larger inducements to the stockholder to sell in the first and second terms, contemplated by the bill, than at any later period.

By the bill, as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, which is, in this respect, conformable to the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund are authorized to purchase the stock, upon certain terms, within four several periods of the year, answering to the usual quarterly divisions; but I apprehend the premium authorized in the two first periods will not be found to bear a just proportion to the end proposed. The holder of the stock will no doubt sell, whenever he may find a proper opportunity for the safe investment of his money; but, as the principal gain to the Government is to be made in the two first periods, the inducement to the stockholder to seek this opportunity should be larger in these than the later periods.

It was clearly the interest of the Government, he said, to purchase the whole stock, if practicable, within the first quarter, and therefore he had offered the amendment to increase the premium in that quarter to two dollars, in order the more certainly to induce the sale.

That his observations upon this subject might be better understood, he begged leave to submit to the Committee some statistical statements which would exhibit the operation of the proposed plan, and of his amendment, during the year, and in each period, both in regard to the holder of the stock and the Government.

Mr. McL. said as it is now impracticable for this expedient to go into operation before the first of February, he would assume that as the day on which the sale will take place, and the seller of the stock will be supposed to invest his funds for the remainder of the year at an interest of five per cent. In that case, he will receive for his $100 of stock a premium of - - - - $1 25

Three months interest, at 7 per cent., from 1st January to 1st April - - - - 1 75

Eleven months interest, at 5 per cent., from 1st February to 31st December - - 4 58½

Making - - - - - 7 58½

Which will be a gain to him at the end of the year of - - - - - 0 58½

By disposing of his stock on the 1st April, the second period proposed by the bill, the seller will receive during the year on his $100 of stock, a premium of - - - - $0 75

H. of R.

Sinking Fund.

JANUARY, 1824.

Six months interest, at 7 per cent., from 1st January to 1st July - - - - 3 50

Nine months interest, at 5 per cent., from 1st April to 31st December - - - - 3 75

Making - - - - - $8 00

Which will be a gain to him of - - - - 1 00

By disposing of his stock on the 1st of July, the third term proposed by the bill, the seller will receive during the year on his $100 of stock, nine months interest, at 7 per cent., from 1st January to 1st October - - - - $5 25

Six months interest, at 5 per cent., from 1st July to 31st December - - - - 2 50

Making - - - - - $7 75

And which will be a gain to him of - - - - 0 75

It will be perceived by this statement, he said, that the gain to the seller, in the first period, is less than in either of the others, while the interest of the Government requires that the purchases should be made within that period. And to present a proper inducement for this purpose, he had proposed, by the amendment, to increase the premium in the first period to two dollars. At that rate, the seller will receive during the year on his $100 of stock, by disposing of it on the 1st February next, a premium of - - - - $2 00

Three months interest, at 7 per cent., from the 1st February to the 1st April - 1 75

Eleven months interest, at 5 per cent., from the 1st February to the 31st December - - - - 4 58½

Making - - - - - $8 33½

Which would be a gain to him of - - - - 1 33½

If the amendment prevail, the gain to the seller in the third period will be three-fourths of the gain in the second period; and the gain in the second period will be three-fourths of the gain in the first; and I apprehend such a proportion will lead much more certainly to large purchases in the first period than the rates contained in the bill.

It will be apparent, also, he said, that a sale to the Government at the rate here proposed, will be more advantageous to the seller than a sale to an individual at an advance which this stock will be likely to bear during the year; and in addition to the premium, it gives the interest of one quarter in advance, and thus encourages an early sale. With the certainty which exists of the redemption of the stock at the end of the year, it can scarcely be expected that its price will at any time exceed three per cent. above the par value; it is not probable that it will reach that sum, but estimating its value in the market at three per cent., the sale to the Government would be more advantageous, because, if the holder sell to the Government on the 1st of February, he will receive during the year on his $100, as already shown, $8 33; if he sell on the same day to an individual, he will receive a premium of $3, and eleven months interest, at 5 per cent., $4 58½; making $7 58½; and is less, by 75 cents, than the sum to be received by a sale to the Government.

Mr. McL. also remarked, that if the Committee would reflect upon the operation, as to the Government, of the proposed amendment, they would be satisfied of its propriety, and the utility of the expedient proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury; he said that at the proposed rates the Government will save, on the purchase of the whole stock, amounting to $8,606,490, as follows:

If the stock were purchased in the first period, the Government will pay on each $100—$3 75; which, being deducted from $7, the amount of the interest for the whole year, would be a saving of $3 25, and on the whole stock, a saving of $279,710 93.

If the stock be purchased during the second period, the Government will pay on each $100—$4 25; which, deducted from the year's interest, gives a saving of $2 75, and on the whole sum, a saving of $236,678 47.

If the stock be purchased during the third period, the saving to the Government will be $1 75 on each $100, and on the whole, the sum of $150,613 57.

With respect to individuals, Mr. McL. said, the operation of the proposed plan in the second and third terms might be differently stated; and he remarked that, by selling to the Government on the 1st April, the individual would receive a premium of - - - - - $0 75

Three months interest, at 7 per cent., from 1st April to 1st July - - - - 1 75

Nine months interest, at 5 per cent., from 1st April to 31st December - - - - 3 75

Making - - - - - 6 25

If, on the contrary, he retained his stock from the first April to the end of the year, he would receive nine months interest, at 7 per cent., which is - - - - - $5 25

And less than he would receive by selling it, of - - - - - 1 00

By selling to the Government on the 1st day of July, he would receive three months interest at 7 per cent., from the 1st July to 1st October, $1 75

Six months interest, at 5 per cent., from 1st July to 31st December - - - - 2 50

$4 25

If he retained his stock, he would receive six months interest, at 7 per cent. - 3 50

Which is 75 cents less than he would receive by the sale.

Mr. McL. said he had troubled the Committee with these statistical details of the plan proposed, in order that every one should be satisfied with its operation in this respect, though he himself supposed the measure was partly founded upon other considerations, and looking beyond a mere calculation of profit and loss.

For himself, he believed, as he had already intimated, that though the terms proposed presented an immediate pecuniary advantage to the seller, the principal advantages afforded by the recommendation in the annual report, were the means of converting his stock into money at rather more than its value, whenever he may discover an opportunity for investing it safely and profitably. He believed the prudent stockholder would not fail to appreciate this advantage, when he reflected that not only the $8,606,490 of 7 per cent., but also as much of the 6 per cent. stock as the Government will be able to pay off on the 1st of January, 1825, will, on that day, be thrown into the market for investment. If the stockholders are wise, they will speedily look for the means of profitable investment, and he felt persuaded that the amendment would offer additional and reasonable inducements to do so.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

The amendment was adopted, and the bill as amended was reported to the House, and ordered to a third reading, without further debate.

SURVEYS FOR ROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to take up the bill providing for the procurement of surveys, &c., for roads and canals, which had been laid on the table this morning to make way for the preceding bill. This motion was carried—ayes 97, noes 76.

The bill then had its third reading.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, rose and said, that his views neither of the public interest nor his own duty would suffer him to see a bill, such as that now before the Committee, about to pass into a law, without entering his protest against the principle on which it was founded. The present individual bill was comparatively of small moment, but, if passed, the principle would be sanctioned; and it was not attempted to be concealed that other bills were to follow it of a far more serious kind. The present was avowedly only a preliminary measure.

Heretofore, he said, it had been deemed important that the barriers between the General and the State Governments should remain untouched; and, on that account, the principles on which both rested had been reduced to writing, and infinite pains had been taken to adjust the due proportion between them. To arrive at a just construction of the Constitution which separated and defined them, it was necessary to look back to the compact which had preceded the Constitution—to the confederation between the thirteen united States, which was nothing more than an alliance of sovereign powers for the common good. The defects of that confederation it was which led to the formation of a different form of government, and a due consideration of which defects must necessarily throw great light on the true intent and meaning of the Constitution, which was intended to remedy them. Wherein do the two compacts differ? In comparatively few particulars. Very few powers are granted by the Constitution which were not formerly granted by the Confederation—those relating to revenue were the chief. Under the Confederation, Congress had power to borrow money; to raise armies; to maintain a navy; to make treaties; to declare war, and to make peace; it had, in short, the same power over the general means of the nation that it now has, but the mode of its operation in obtaining them was different. The quotas of the several States were laid by the General Government on the Legislatures of those States, and by them collected from the people. The hand of the General Government could not reach the pockets of the people, but it had to wait, for its supplies, the tardy movements of thirteen different independent Legislatures; but now its power comes in immediate contact with the people—its means are taken at once from the imports—its operations are prompt, and consequently vigorous, and the public faith may be safely pledged, because it will be certainly and promptly redeemed. This was almost the sole object for which the Confederation was changed into the Federal Government.

Now, in the first place, I ask whether, by the Confederation, Congress was vested with municipal powers? Certainly not. But the power to make roads and canals is, beyond dispute, a municipal power. Gentlemen contend that Congress may do this under a general power to diffuse the intelligence of the country. Why, sir, by this reasoning, I can equally prove that it has the power to erect common schools. They diffuse intelligence, and in a most efficient manner. Again, to the well being of a republican government, a general equality of property is as requisite as a general diffusion of knowledge. Have then Congress power to regulate descents of real estate? The inference to that power is stronger than to a power to dig canals. But, by the express letter of the Constitution, Congress has power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States." Well, sir, I ask, in the first place, what is the power which is here granted over foreign commerce? It is both legislative and executive—it extends indeed to a right to close all our ports; but the Government is bound to furnish the citizens with a market, and therefore the Constitution gives it authority to make treaties; but it has placed this power not in Congress, but in the President.

The Constitution gives, further, a power to "lay and collect taxes, duties, and imposts." This, said Mr. W., is the sole power of Congress over foreign commerce; it has power to lay the duty and to collect it—this is the extent. The whole power of Congress, in relation to foreign commerce, is exhausted by the tariff, and by the collection of it. The power to erect lighthouses, is one which belongs to this power of "collecting duties," and not to the power of "regulating foreign commerce." The great object of duties is revenue; and Congress may prohibit altogether, or it may qualify, by certain regulations, the entrance of goods into the country. Over this Congress has entire sovereignty. Revenue is not, however, the exclusive object of duties; they may be laid for political as well as fiscal purposes—to protect our rights—to coerce other nations to justice, or to requite them for benefits, and also to foster domestic industry.

I now inquire, what is the power intended to be granted in a "power to regulate commerce among the several States?" Congress certainly have nothing to do with the buying and selling of internal productions, nor can it lay duties on exports from one State to another; trade between the States is free—perfectly free. And, with relation to imported goods, when once the duties on their importation are paid, those goods are as free as if they were the growth of the soil; they may be carried wherever the owner pleases to carry them. Congress has no power over them whatsoever. What then is the power of Congress over the internal trade of the States? None; it has none whatever. To what then does the clause relate? Wholly to the coasting trade. Owing to the extent of our coast, danger exists; that, in conducting this trade, the revenue will be defrauded; and with a view to prevent such defrauding, the Constitution empowers Congress to “regulate” this branch of commerce. And to this its power extends, and no farther. If this is so, where is the basis of any power to make canals? There is no substratum for such a power; the whole theory is a mere castle in the air, and at the touch of sober investigation, it tumbles into ruins.

The next clause in which the power sought for has been supposed to reside, is that which authorizes Congress to establish post offices and post roads.

And what need is there of power to enforce the use of a post road? Does any State resist the use of its roads by the General Government? We must remember that when the Constitution was framed, its framers had respect chiefly to the old thirteen States—States already in a state of advanced improvement, abounding with roads in all directions. And looking toward such a state of things, all that this clause intended was to give Congress power authoritatively to say on which of these roads the mail should travel. What is the practice which has ever prevailed, and which still prevails, on this subject? The States make and preserve the roads, and the General Government uses them. No jurisdiction over them is surrendered by the States.

Mr. W. said he thought that the reasoning which had been employed on this subject by the friends of the bill, was improper and inapplicable; but, having been used, it must be answered.

The States, he said, originally were absolutely sovereign, and politically omnipotent; they vested certain powers in a General Government for the general defence and welfare. Is it necessary for the general defence that the General Government must have the power of making roads? Surely, the State governments must have been deranged, if they intended to give up the care of their own roads. What was their intention? [Here Mr. W. read several clauses of the Constitution, and referred to the “Federalist.”] Here all powers over local and municipal matters, such as are necessary to the internal prosperity, are reserved to the States. Sir, what was the opinion on this subject in the State conventions which were held on the question of adopting the Federal Constitution? In all of these conventions it was taken for granted that municipal powers remained to the States—no other idea entered their heads. We have the contemporaneous constructions of thirteen independent deliberative bodies, of the authors of the Federalist, and two Presidents. Sir, the evidence would be sufficient to convince a jury, if capable of such decision.

If you attempt to establish the power of making roads, as one belonging to the General Government, every pillar of our political fabric is laid prostrate at once, and the Constitution is a useless thing. The powers as granted in that Constitution are either concurrent or exclusive. The power of war and peace is given exclusively to the General Government; others are given exclusively to the State governments; others are concurrent—such, for example, as that of the taxation of land; this may be a concurrent power, because its exertion by neither exhausts the subject. But it is not so with the power over roads. This is a moral subject, a moral power—once exercised it is exhausted.

According to the opposite theory, the whole sovereignty over this subject lies in the General Government; but I say, on the contrary, that the whole sovereignty lies in the States. It is said that the power of making roads cannot be injurious to the people of the States, but must be wholly to their advantage. Allow me to put a case. The Government of the United States think it expedient to make a road from New York to Buffalo, and to put toll gates upon it—one of these toll gates near Buffalo is destroyed or injured—the man who did it must be brought five hundred miles to be tried in the United States court for a trespass of the value of two and sixpence. Is this no injury, no oppression, sir? It is treading under foot the State jurisdiction—it is prostrating the State judiciary. Sir, it brings the interference of the General Government to every man’s fireside, and is calculated to render it odious to a free people.

Sir, I believe I may, without presumption, say I have ever been a friend to the Federal Government, and so have I ever been friendly to internal improvements, and have promoted them, too, sir, with my utmost power, in my own sphere, under a legitimate jurisdiction. I did so long before the great canal in our State was ever thought of. But, however noble, however beneficial, the contemplated plan for internal improvement may be, its excellence is not the question before this committee. The simple question is into our power to execute it. Sir, we must go by the grand landmarks of the Constitution. If such a power is really necessary, ask the people for it; they are the fountain of all power, and they will never refuse to grant it. Why strain, why violate the Constitution? Why break down one pillar after another in our fair temple of rational liberty, till the whole temple lies prostrate in the dust? No, sir, we have begun to do this, but let us step back; our acts, thus far, are not irretrievable; let us wait for power till it is given us; the small delay can do no injury.

But, sir, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and especially from New Jersey, has talked to us about a new era—a political millennium, in which a new faith is to prevail, far more liberal than the old fashioned notions of our fathers; and, in a tone of menace and defiance, has told us that at that auspicious period our voices will not be heard. Sir, to me, this is ominous: it tells me in what spirit these plans are projected; and the exultation already visible is, in my view, but a melancholy presage of that louder shout that shall announce a perfect victory over the last struggles of the expiring constitutions.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Mr. MALLARY, of Vermont, said that he was sensible that whoever rose to oppose the bill now before the House must be liable to great embarrassments, in consequence of the recent vote, by which it appeared that a decided majority was in its favor. It was not very often that he claimed the attention of the House, but he viewed this bill as a part of a system of measures of such magnitude, that he should reproach himself with a neglect of duty did he not express the disapprobation he was constrained to feel towards it. He was aware that the subject possessed a character calculated to excite the deepest interest and solicitude. So important did some gentlemen view it, that, in their estimation, the Government itself would appear contemptible if it refused to carry into execution such magnificent policy; and it was to be feared that the opposer, whatever might be his real motives, would appear contracted and illiberal.

To the grandeur of the plans of internal improvement, Mr. M. said, he was not insensible; their utility, he acknowledged, and it would afford him the greatest pleasure to concur in their support—he would say more—he could join, with the most ardent enthusiasm, in aiding their prosecution, did he consider himself authorized by the Constitution of the Union. But, as he at present viewed that instrument—the polar star of our legislation—it had intrusted him with no powers whatever, on the subject. His views might be very trite, but, such as they were, he would endeavor, very briefly, to present them, for his own vindication, in opposing the bill.

The first inquiry was, as to the character of the power now proposed to be exercised by Congress. It is that of constructing roads and canals throughout the territorial limits of the several States, of which this Confederacy is formed. The objects to be accomplished, according to the views of the honorable Speaker, are, the distribution of the force, the commerce, and intelligence, of the nation. This power, if it exists in the General Government, must be an original power—an exclusive power. It cannot be within the control of the several States. The United States must hold it as the uncontrolled sovereign. The States can never interpose any interfering claim. The General Government may enter the jurisdiction of every State, and seize upon the soil, for such roads and canals as it may choose to construct, and forever hold it by its resistless authority. The State governments remain secondary, degraded, and even contemptible. The General Government, to-day, takes the great highway from New York to Burlington, Vermont, under its control. To-morrow, it seizes on some other great avenue from one part of a State to another, or from a State to its neighbor State. One road is taken, under pretext that it is a post road, and necessary for the distribution of intelligence; another is taken, for the more convenient distribution of commerce; and where exists a more tremendous power? What independence can exist to a State, when another Government assumes the prerogative of holding its only avenues of communication? All this, it is true, may not be the work of a day, but, when once begun, the power of the Union will proceed, step by step, till at last the State governments will be, virtually, if not actually, annihilated.

This is the power of the General Government, contended for by the advocates of internal improvement. Is it given by the Constitution?

It is contended that the expression in the Constitution, that Congress shall have power to establish post offices and post roads, confers an unlimited power over roads in general. What is the fair and unequivocal import of that expression? Can there be any doubt as to its extent, its object? Is it not clearly and unequivocally defined? Is there any other end in view than the distribution of intelligence, as the honorable Speaker has expressed it? To make this clause a pretext, a shield, for the accomplishment of other objects, must be an unwarrantable exercise of usurped authority. Can the General Government declare, that, having the power of providing for the distribution of the intelligence of the nation, that it has, also, from the same source, the right to provide for the distribution of the commerce, the force, of the nation? It appears to me, that the process of reasoning which would lead to such conclusions, is manifestly erroneous and absurd. No language can be more precise, clear, and intelligible, than the clause of the Constitution alluded to. It is simply the power to establish post offices and post roads. What else? Nothing.

Mr. M. said, he concurred with the honorable gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. BARBOUR,) as to the application and use of the word "establish," as used in the Constitution. It was intended only a power to designate and to give a legal character to the road upon which the mail should be transported, and for that purpose alone. But, supposing that Congress have the power to create and construct a post road, the most liberal construction would not allow Congress to create and construct one, and exercise jurisdiction over it for every other purpose. For the purpose of proving that this was the true construction of the clause in question, Mr. M. read the following passages from the Federalist:

"In the first place, it is to be remembered that the General Government is not to be charged with the whole power of making and administering laws: its jurisdiction is limited to certain enumerated objects, which concern all the members of the Republic, but which are not to be obtained by the separate provisions of any. The subordinate Governments, which can extend their care to all those other objects, which can be separately provided for, will retain their due authority and activity, &c. A second observation to be made, is, that the immediate object of the Federal Constitution is to secure the union of the thirteen primitive States, &c.

"Let it be remarked, in the third place, that the intercourse throughout the Union will be daily facilitated by new improvements. Roads will every where be shortened and kept in better order; accommodations for travellers will be multiplied and meliorated; an interior navigation, on our eastern side, will be opened throughout the whole extent of the thirteen States. The communication between the Western and Atlantic districts, and between different parts of each, will be rendered more and more easy by those numerous canals, with which the beneficence of nature has intersected our country, and which art finds it so little difficult to connect and complete."

These remarks, said Mr. MALLARY, are found in the great commentary on our Constitution; they express the views of some of the most distinguished statesmen of any age or country; of men who assisted, by their wisdom and intelligence, in forming the Constitution of the Confederacy. They had no idea that the General Government would undertake to construct roads and canals, any more than to establish public houses of entertainment, to multiply and meliorate accommodations for travellers.

The honorable Speaker, said Mr. M., considers that the term "establish" is wholly creative. He has illustrated his explanation by a reference to the preamble of the Constitution. It is, "We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, &c., do ordain and establish this Constitution," &c.

It seems to me, said Mr. MALLARY, that the honorable Speaker has been unfortunate in his illustration of his views, by making this reference. Is the expression "establish justice," creative? If so, the principles of justice did not exist among the people of the United States until the adoption of the Constitution. It would have been a very singular preamble, indeed, if the people had said "We, in order to form a more perfect union, create justice." The meaning of the expression must be, that the principles of justice, already existing, are to be enforced by the means of the Constitution. Again, it declares that the people do "ordain and establish this Constitution." The plan and frame of Government had been formed by a Convention, created by the people for that purpose. It had been presented to the people for their consideration. They did ordain and establish this prepared plan of Government; they, by establishing it, gave it its legal character—its binding effect. The same may be said of that exercise of power by Congress, when they declare and establish a road, constructed by a State, a post road.

But it seems to be admitted that the power required is nowhere expressly given, yet that it is an original and incidental power inherent in the Constitution. Its great and transcendent character has been described. It is well known how great was the anxiety on the part of the people to preserve their State sovereignties as little impaired as possible. They never intended to confer on the General Government any right or power but such as could not with safety be exercised by themselves. They preferred State independence to national consolidation. The framers of the Constitution, therefore, employed the most precise language, and described the minutest objects, the jurisdiction over which the States were called upon to surrender. It is, therefore, very extraordinary that the power now claimed as so indispensable to the existence and prosperity of the General Government should never have been mentioned at all.

The Constitution gives to Congress exclusive jurisdiction over a District, ten miles square, to be the immediate seat of the General Government. What could be more clear than that the General Government must have power to erect and control a convenient place for legislation? What might, with more certainty, be inferred, had it been omitted, and what more safely could have been omitted, than such a power? Yet we find this power granted in express terms. So of places for the erection of forts. Nothing would seem more necessary and evident, than that the General Government, being charged with the defence of the Union, had power to erect fortresses in that defence, wherever it might deem it necessary. Yet we find this point guarded with the most scrupulous care. No fort can be built, no fortification erected, over which the Government can exercise a sovereign control, unless the soil on which they may stand is purchased by the consent of the States. The same provision of the Constitution extends to the sites of the military posts, arsenals, and dock yards. After having given to the Government of the Union the power to raise armies and build navies, how readily might incidental powers have been discovered, by which it might have created arsenals and dock yards, and governed them also. But the framers of that instrument never thought of the capacity of modern construction. They supposed that nothing was left to presumption, to inference, to opinion, as to the original grant of power. Therefore, express provision is made, that Congress can exercise jurisdiction, only by consent of the State, over the soil where the fort or arsenal is erected. Is it not extraordinary that, in one instance, the States refuse to surrender jurisdiction to an acre of land, to the smallest spot for a national object, until their consent is required, and yet, in another, they intended that the General Government should have the right, by implication, to command all the land and water communications of the nation? Not allow Congress to interfere with a foot of soil for the most important operations of defence, yet allow us to control all those privileges which render the soil of any value! In giving, therefore, a just construction to the Constitution, we ought to allow it consistency, and, to its several parts, some due proportion with each other.

We are told by the honorable Speaker that it is wholly improper to leave the power of constructing roads and other improvements to the States. The States, he tells us, will always make them for their own local convenience; they will not extend their views and policy so as to confer a benefit on other States, much less on the Union at large. But what is the fact? When one State opens a road, does it not take into view the road of another, which is to meet the first, and the places to which it may lead? Interest alone will secure this. Can gentlemen point out in New England, for example, any better directions, more convenient for their own people and for the nation, than where they are constructed? Sir, the General Government can never have more intelligence or wisdom on this subject, than the people of the States. Why, then, interfere? If you want post roads, they must be for the benefit of the people. Wherever you find people, you find roads; and to establish post roads where there are no people to enjoy the benefits, would be very useless employment for an enlightened Government; it would confer but little honor on its administration to exercise its power in the distribution of intelligence where none could receive its blessings. There then is no necessity for inference. It would be as useless to the General Government as vexatious to the States, supposing the claimed power had a Constitutional existence.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

It has been asserted that the General Government may exercise its exclusive power over objects of a national character. This, I contend, is to be decided by the Constitution. A great variety of objects are both State and national in their nature. As the Union is composed of the individual States, whatever affects a part, must, in a greater or less degree, affect the whole. If the General Government may control every thing which, by a liberal construction, may be deemed national, the States hold their supposed independence by a miserable tenure. We have been told that the object is national where it cannot be accomplished by the exertions of a single State. There the power of the Union is indispensably necessary. To illustrate this, we are referred to proposed canals between different States. Let me refer to the existing roads between the same States. How are they constructed? Has a want of power ever been discovered? If they are competent to make roads, are they not as competent in power to make canals? If canals between States are of national character, are not the roads national which pass from State to State? If the General Government has the power over canals, has it not equal power over roads which may happen to connect two States? If it has the power over roads which pass their boundaries, has it not the right to seize on all the roads of a State—as their connexion is indispensable? If so, as has been asked, in what does the independence of a State consist?

Again, admit that the power exists in the General Government to distribute the force and commerce of the nation, and that it employ all convenient means to carry that power into execution. Let us see its operation. The State of New York has displayed a noble spirit of liberality, enterprise, and perseverance, in effecting, by her own resources, her great Western canal. Accumulating streams of commerce flow in all directions to her emporium. You now cross the Alleghany with your canal at our common expense. The people of the centre of the Union, from East to West, may believe that an equal share of commerce does not fall to their portion; that too much is enjoyed by the North, and that there ought to be a more equitable distribution. It becomes necessary to control the New York canals. They may be purchased. If New York should demand too much, or prove refractory, the General Government have only to say, We want these water courses, as the means of distributing the force, the commerce, the intelligence of the nation, according to the language of the honorable Speaker, and we must have them. Would the people of New York readily consent to this? Would they look with composure on this exercise of authority—to see the representatives of Vermont, Georgia, Kentucky, and Pennsylvania, meeting out that portion of commerce which should pass through their State? Would they be pleased to hear Congress declare that too much commerce found its way to market at New York, and too little found its way across the Alleghany to Baltimore and Philadelphia? Ought not Congress, therefore, to be careful how they assume this power by construction?

The Constitution itself lays it down as a universal principle of its own construction, that all powers, not granted to the General, are reserved to the State governments. But it appears to me that the interpretation demanded by the supporters of the bill proceeds from a contrary rule—that all power, not expressly reserved to the States, must, of course, be vested in the Government of the Union. The rule of proceeding would seem now to be, to find some object which would be convenient for the Union to have accomplished, and then hunt up some hidden power in the Constitution to justify the measure. I cannot find, in the writings of any statesman, or in the discussions of the day, when the Constitution was adopted, any idea that the power now asked to be exercised ever existed in the national charter. No, sir, such were the apprehensions of the times, that, had this power been proposed to be given to the Federal Government, the States would have as soon abandoned their sovereignty and returned to the jurisdiction of the mother country, as have surrendered it.

Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to another view of the subject. There is a tendency in the General Government to accumulate its own powers. It has the purse, the sword, and undivided exertion. The States are divided, and can seldom act in concert. An injury to one is not felt by the other. The General Government construes its own powers, and can enforce its own construction by the arm of the nation. The States, separately, are weak and impotent. When they claim their powers, the Federal Government is the judge of its right, under a predisposition in favor of its own privileges. If a State is right, it is powerless; if the General Government is wrong, it is also resistless.

The power claimed is said to be of the most

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

JANUARY, 1824.

beneficial tendency. It will be the means of preserving the Union; of most effectually uniting them. Yes, sir, it may unite the States, it may chain them together, but at the price of their independence. It is the States which are to be the great nurseries of republicanism. It is there that consolidation is to be resisted—aristocracy counteracted. When you strike at the independence of State power, you strike at the root of your republican institutions. Preserve that independence untouched and entire, as your Constitution intended. Give the State governments some of the benefits of construction, and not use it wholly against them.

If consolidation of the States was the express and avowed object of the bill, could any measure be more politic and wise? Congress declares to-day to Vermont, that we must regulate and distribute your commerce in a manner more beneficial than you have ever done. We will take under our care your roads to other States; we will open for you a canal—for your benefit as well as for the Union; but we claim and will hold jurisdiction. If Vermont is opposed, no other State takes any interest in her concerns. Congress wields the whole force of the Confederacy. The State must submit. The General Government next enters Jersey, and opens a canal through that State. The same difficulties arise, and the same result follows irresistibly. It then turns to Delaware; and, in succession, passes from State to State, encountering each one singly, with its whole strength, influence, and patronage, and the multiplied means which must always be under its control. What, then, must be the condition of the individual States, I again repeat, when these splendid objects are accomplished? If they remonstrate against the policy of the Government, they may be told that Congress holds the avenues of the States. If they intimate that the General Government expounds the Constitution too liberally, that incidental powers are becoming too numerous at the Seat of Government, they may be told that Congress already holds the power to distribute the force of the nation, as well as its commerce and intelligence.

To his view, said Mr. M., in conclusion, the power contended for is of vast importance. It is admitted that it is not expressly given. It was assuming an awful responsibility, on the part of Congress, to take it by a doubtful construction; a construction not necessary for the existence of the General Government, but which would terminate in the prostration of the States. He was, therefore, bound, by a deliberate conviction of duty, to oppose any and every form of its exercise.

Mr. RANDOLPH moved that the bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole. This motion (it is supposed with a view to allow the Speaker to take part in the debate) was carried—yeas 106.

FRIDAY, January 16.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanied by a statement, exhibiting the value of the trade which the United States held with Greece, Asia Minor, and Egypt, during the years 1820, 1821, and 1822, prepared in obedience to the resolution adopted on the 2d instant; which report and statement were laid on the table.

The Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the consideration of the petitions of George Taylor; of merchants and underwriters of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia; of the executors of the will of Thomas Chapman, of South Carolina; and of the ninth convention of the Manumission Society of the State of Tennessee; and the said petitions were laid on the table.

Mr. PLUMER, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill for the relief of William Nichols Earle; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VINTON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Joseph Wood, of Ohio," reported the same without amendment, and it was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to which was referred the petition of Francis G. Macy, and others, made a report thereon, accompanied by a bill, releasing the owners of the ship General Jackson from the payment of certain duties; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE, from the same committee, made a report on the petition of Bernard Thooft, accompanied by a bill, authorizing the issuing of debentures to the petitioner; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE, from the same committee, to which was referred, on the 14th instant, a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Arkansas, with a report of the Secretary of War thereon, reported a bill, making an appropriation towards the extinguishment of the Quapaw title to lands in the Territory of Arkansas; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made a report on the memorial of the trustees of the church of St. Anne, in Detroit, in the Territory of Michigan, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the Corporation of the Church of St. Anne, Detroit, and to authorize the extension of Larned street, in the town of Detroit; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which had been referred sundry petitions and memorials upon the subject of land claims in the State of Missouri, reported a bill, enabling the claimants to lands within the limits of the State of Missouri to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. Cook, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, provision is proper to be made, to enable the holders of claims to land in Illinois, confirmed to them by the Governors of the Northwestern Territory, and which were afterwards rejected by the Board of Commissioners appointed to revise such confirmations, to try and determine the validity of their claims, and, in the event of their appearing valid, to receive compensation therefor.

JANUARY, 1824.

Invalid Pensioners.

H. OF R.

On motion of Mr. HOBART, the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing so much of the act, entitled "An act laying a duty on imported salt, granting a bounty on pickled fish exported, and allowances to certain vessels employed in the fisheries," passed 29th July, 1813, as authorizes a bounty on pickled fish exported, and of granting, in lieu thereof, an allowance on the tonnage of vessels employed in the mackerel fisheries, in the same way as to vessels employed in the bank and other cod fisheries.

Mr. TOMLINSON laid the following resolution on the table, for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the Navy Hospitals be directed to report to this House the amount of the sums which they have received and expended by virtue of the act, entitled "An act establishing Navy Hospitals," the balance remaining in their hands on the 31st of December, 1823, designating the sum which has been "absorbed in the pay of the Navy, and which is due to the Hospital Fund," and what measures they have adopted to carry into effect the provisions of the said act.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the proper accounting officers to settle the accounts of James Whaley, late a captain in the service of the United States, according to the principles of justice and equity.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to purchase the seven per cent. stock of the United States, in the year 1824," was read the third time, and passed.

The amendment proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act further extending the term of half-pay pensions to the widows and children of officers, seamen, and marines, who died in the public service," was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

INVALID PENSIONERS.

The House went into a Committee of the Whole on the bill concerning Invalid Pensioners.

Mr. LITTLE moved an amendment, adding the names of certain individuals to the list of those contained in the bill; some conversation took place on this amendment which was at length adopted.

Mr. COCKE moved that the bill be further amended, by striking out the name of James Royal, [who was wounded by an explosion at a feu de joie, in celebration of a victory.]

Mr. LITTLE stated, that the committee had inserted this case on the principle that, if a soldier was wounded in the performance of any lawful order of his commanding officer, he was as much entitled to a pension as if it happened in battle.

Mr. TAYLOR assented to this principle, but doubted the fact, and called for the reading of the papers in the case. The papers were read.

Mr. ALLEN observed that his knowledge of the individual in question, and the circumstances attending his case, compelled him to oppose the amendment offered by his honorable colleague.

Sir, this bill is intended for the relief of an unfortunate man, whose devotion to his country has cost him every earthly blessing. After serving a tour of duty in the late war, he joined his comrades, in a public demonstration of joy and satisfaction at the success that attended a cause which every patriot then felt interested in. At this meeting a cannon exploded, and wounded him in the most shocking manner, leaving him ever since blind and helpless.

I am aware that it will be said, the time and place this accident occurred, will not bring it within the principle that governs Congress in granting pensions. I confess that, without reflection, this objection had its weight with me; but, when all the circumstances have been considered, I am fully persuaded it will be found within the spirit and meaning of the policy that ever has governed this or any other country, in mitigating the calamity that war inflicts on those that venture their lives in support of it.

Although this man was not engaged in an act strictly in the line of a soldier's duty, it was an act of infinite service to the country—it was one which every friend to his country felt himself called upon to perform.

Yes, sir, at that critical juncture an expression of public opinion was all-important—it gave new life and vigor to a doubtful contest.

Who is it that does not recollect the efforts made at that time by unprincipled men to impress the enemy with a belief, that the war was not a war of the people. The Hartford Convention and other mischievous engines were busily employed distracting public sentiment. The Treasury was drained of its last dollar, public credit at the lowest ebb, and the soldiers sent home without pay. At such a time was it not praise-worthy to rouse the patriotism of the nation by celebrating its victories and publicly proclaiming the attachment of the people? Yes, sir, victorious battles themselves did not do the case more service than such meetings. This man willingly engaged in both, it was his misfortune to be sacrificed in that kind of service which was voluntary, but not less acceptable on that account.

I ask then, is it fair to exclude him from all the bounty the nation has so liberally bestowed, as well upon unfortunate sufferers in the shape of pensions, as in swords and medals for meritorious achievements? His case is recommended both by merit and unexampled suffering, he has no where else to go for relief; he has tried private charity, and found it too precarious a dependence. The municipal regulations of counties and corporations close the door against him, because it was not their cause alone that made him a pauper. Is death the only friend left to relieve him? I hope not; his country owes him a support, and Congress has the power of granting it without danger from precedent, because there is no other case like it. It is an extraordinary one indeed, and one which ought not to be met by cold calculations and deductions drawn from fixed principles intended for general purposes. It is not by rules and forms that he expects a magnanimous nation to judge him. Is there any one in this House that would not give to this unfortunate man his sight, had he the power to do so? Why then withhold the only remnant of comfort left? Is there any principle, human or divine, that would be violated by doing that which we all believe to be right? If we believe the war made him blind, we must believe the authors of it ought to support him.

H. OF R.

Amendments to the Constitution.

JANUARY, 1824.

Sir, I like to act from principle in legislation, but it must be principle that does no violence to my judgment and feelings. There is a principle of right and wrong, implanted by nature, which cannot be misunderstood. I will take it for my guide in voting for this bill.

On the question being taken, the motion of Mr. COCKE was agreed to, and the name stricken out.

The bill was then reported as amended, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

On motion of Mr. McDUFFIE, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the resolution by him reported from a select committee, for amending the Constitution of the United States, respecting the choice of Electors of President and Vice President.

Mr. FORSYTH, of Georgia, was desirous that the consideration of this subject should be postponed. He had not had opportunity to prepare himself to discuss it, and he asked it from the courtesy of the mover, that the subject should not be pressed at this time. He had a further reason. It was known to all that the Senate was now occupied on the same subject, and he was desirous to wait, and first see whether that branch of Congress could not come to some decision in respect to it; and he moved that the Committee rise.

Mr. McDUFFIE said, that he had given notice of the present discussion three weeks ago, and the notice had been repeated, from time to time, ever since. It was probable the subject would occupy the House more than the present day; and, as it had been usual, thus far in the present session, to adjourn over from Friday to Monday, the gentleman from Georgia could have time to prepare himself before any question should be taken on the resolutions; he, therefore, could not consent to defer the discussion.

The question being taken on the motion to rise, it was decided in the negative.

Mr. McDUFFIE, of South Carolina, commenced by remarking, that, entertaining a deep conviction that the harmony of the Union, and the purity of the Government, were essentially involved in the proposed amendment, he could not but congratulate the Committee and the country upon the propitious combination of circumstances under which it would now be investigated. While the current events of our history, said he, furnish a practical and impressive exhibition of the evil tendencies of our system, in that department which it had been found most difficult to organize, we shall be shielded from the imputation of acting with a view to personal objects, or under the influence of temporary considerations, by the moral, I may almost say, the physical impossibility of consummating the amendment in time for it to operate in the approaching election for the Presidency.

In bringing forward a proposition so fundamental in its character, and calculated, in my opinion, to exert a lasting influence upon the happiness of future generations, it is a source of sincere gratification to reflect, that the measure does not rest upon the recommendation of an individual so humble and inexperienced as myself, but that its leading provisions (subject to some subordinate modifications, which, I hope, will be adopted) are approved and sanctioned by many of the most profound and experienced statesmen of the country. This proposition has been for more than eight years before the nation; it was recommended by a majority of the States, and a change has been anxiously desired by a large majority of the American people. When, to the imposing weight of these circumstances, we add the consideration, that the great body of the people are, at this moment, deeply and justly excited upon the subject, it must be apparent to every member of the Committee, that this proposition comes before us with a weight of authority which imperatively demands, and will undoubtedly secure for it, the most solemn and dispassionate consideration.

I am not unaware of the difficulty which must be encountered at the very threshold of an investigation having for its object a fundamental change in the Constitution of the country. There is a general indisposition to touch that instrument, proceeding, I believe, from a sort of vague and indefinite apprehension that it may give rise to a spirit of innovation more dangerous than even the acknowledged vices of the system itself. As I know these to be the views of several honorable members, I feel that I am called upon by the occasion to present some general views of what I deem to be the true theory and philosophy of Constitutional amendments.

The dread of innovation, by which some gentlemen are restrained from giving their sanction to amendments, which they believe to be judicious in themselves, may be traced, said Mr. McD., to the history of simple democracies, or of countries in a revolutionary state. In the ancient republics, for example, where popular oratory exerted an absolute ascendancy over the passions of the multitude, it was necessary to secure the existing institutions against the fluctuating movements of the popular will, by all the barriers of superstition and public opinion. The history of republican France, recorded in the blood of the various factions which were successively thrown up and destroyed by the universal commotion of the political elements, is a striking illustration of the tendency to perpetual changes while a country is in a state of revolution. But these examples, while they show the dangerous tendency to innovation, in certain forms of government, and certain conditions of society, indicate, at the same time, a distinction which will warrant me in the assertion that our tendency is of an opposite kind. Indeed, nothing can be more true, in relation to countries in a state of political tranquillity, than the proposition contained in the document which proclaimed us a free people; "that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves, by throwing off the forms to which they have been accustomed."

JANUARY, 1824.

Amendments to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

But it has often been urged in conversation, that, by making amendments of the Constitution, we should impair the popular veneration for that instrument. This may be true, and doubtless is true, of governments founded upon injustice and usurpation, and resting, for their security, upon the ignorance of the people. It is unsafe to subject to the scrutiny of reason, institutions which cannot stand the test of investigation. But nothing can be more dangerous than the inculcation of this sort of superstitious idolatry in this country. Its inevitable tendency is to confound the vices of our system, with the system itself; and, in that way, to convert the best feelings of the community into the means of preventing the correction of imperfections, which time must disclose, in all human institutions, and of perpetuating abuses, from which no government, administered by men, has ever been exempted.

We should never forget (what is our proud distinction) that this Government is founded upon the intelligence of the people; and that, in proportion as their veneration and attachment for the Constitution proceeds from a discriminating attention to its practical operation, in the same proportion will their liberties be secure and the Government preserved in its purity.

It is, indeed, one of the most important rights of a free people to make those gradual changes in their political institutions, which may be indicated by the changes in the social system, the progress of intelligence, and, above all, by the lights of experience. It is in this way, and in this way only, that the Constitution of a country can be adapted to the condition and circumstances of the people whose liberty it is intended to secure. No constitutional provision can be wise which has not this peculiar adaptation; and no part of the Constitution evinces the wisdom of the Convention more clearly than the provision made for its amendment.

This, said he, is an age distinguished for improvements in the science of Government. Within the last fifty years it has made more signal advances than at any former period of the world. Within that time, we have ourselves made a great political experiment, which is destined, I trust, to have a lasting influence on the affairs of mankind. But it cannot be disguised that the Executive department of this Government was organized by the Convention, without any of those benefits of experience which aided them in the establishment of the other departments. Representative assemblies had existed here from the first settlement of the country, to say nothing of the experience of England. A similar remark may be made of the Judicial department. But the world had never witnessed the spectacle of an elective Chief Magistrate, presiding over so extensive a country, containing millions of freemen, from whom his authority was at least intended to be a direct emanation. And, accordingly, said Mr. McD., we find the provisions for electing the Chief Magistrate of the Republic more imperfect, in their actual operation, than any contained in the Constitution; though, at the time of its adoption, those provisions were believed to be the most unexceptionable of all. We must, therefore, make up our minds to examine and expose the vices of the system; and nothing can more clearly show the safety with which this may be done, than a particular investigation of the process through which every amendment must pass before it can become a part of the Constitution. To effect any change, the concurrence of two-thirds of both branches of Congress, and three-fourths of the State Legislatures, is indispensably necessary. Is it possible, then, that any change can be precipitately made, under the influence of temporary delusion? I will venture to predict that no amendment will ever be adopted that is not sanctioned by the deliberate sense of a decided majority of the people, long and steadily maintained. This is conclusively demonstrated by the history of the very proposition we are now discussing. It has been more than eight years before the people, and has been constantly gaining ground during the whole of that period. It was originated by the intelligent, patriotic, and unpretending State of North Carolina; a State which is honorably identified with one great era in our political history, and I sincerely hope it is her destiny to be associated with another, in my opinion, not much less important. I believe history will accord to her the honor of having first made a declaration in favor of the national independence; and, if this amendment should be adopted, (as it certainly will be, at no distant period,) she will have another title to the lasting gratitude of the nation. Her proposition was sanctioned by a majority of the State Legislatures—I believe, by nearly three-fourths of them—and, in several instances, by an unanimous vote. It has been repeatedly discussed in Congress, and as repeatedly passed by two-thirds of the Senate; and, in one instance, it wanted but three or four votes of a Constitutional majority in the House of Representatives. Now, said Mr. McD., there is no political principle more undeniable than that the deliberate opinion and settled conviction of a majority of the people, in a Government recognising in them the right and the capacity of self-government, ought to prevail over the will of the minority, even in relation to the Constitution. Why, then, it may be asked, does that instrument require, for an amendment, the concurrence of more than a majority? I answer, for the very wisest of purposes; but not, surely, to give the permanent ascendancy to the opinion of the minority. This requirement was intended for no other purpose, than to prevent hasty and inconsiderate changes, and to give time for reflection and deliberation. But when the sense of a decided majority of the community is permanently and unalterably settled down in favor of any amendment, the end of this provision is answered, and the minority ought to yield. I will not say, that they have not the Constitutional right, as well as power, to oppose the will of the majority; but I contend, that it is their moral duty, as well as their undoubted interest, to yield, under such circumstances. I have said, that this Government rested upon the intelligent and discriminating attachment, and not upon the superstitious veneration of the people. I will now add, that nothing can more effectually impair their confidence in our political system, than a pertinacious adherence to parts of it, which they believe to be vicious, and calculated to deprive them of their just rights.

I will now proceed, said Mr. McD., to show, and I flatter myself it can be done to the satisfaction of the Committee, that this amendment has none of the characteristics of innovation; and proposes only to reclaim the usurped rights of the people, and to draw back the Government to its true original principles.

The Constitution provides that "each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall prescribe," the Electors of the President. I am not, said he, in the habit of construing a Constitution, addressed to the common sense of the great body of the people, with logical refinement or critical nicety. I cannot but remark, however, that it is a very liberal mode of construing the powers of the State Legislatures, to assume, under the general authority to prescribe the mode of making an appointment, the right of making that appointment themselves. The intention of the Convention on this subject is so conclusively shown as to supersede argument, by a contemporary exposition of the Constitution, written by three of the most distinguished members of that illustrious body. The Federalist contains the following words: "They [the Convention] have not made the appointment of the President to depend upon pre-existing bodies of men, who might be tampered with beforehand, to prostitute their votes; but they have referred it, in the first instance, to the immediate act of the people of America, to be exerted in the choice of persons for the temporary and sole purpose of making the appointment." Such was the exposition made to the American people by the framers of the Constitution, while the expediency of its adoption was still a pending question; and there can be no doubt that this exposition operated as a strong inducement with the people to adopt the Constitution. The great improvement which the Convention made upon all the federative systems of which history furnishes any record, was in the introduction of the provision that the General Government should not operate upon the local governments, or States collectively, but upon the people directly and individually. To complete this great improvement, which constitutes an era in the history of confederated Governments, it is indispensable that the people should act upon the Government as directly as the Government acts upon the people. In this manner, responsibility is made to be co-extensive with power, the only adequate security for freedom which is to be found in our system. It would, indeed, be a strange anomaly if the General Government should be controlled by the State governments, and operate upon the people. It is, said he, an extraordinary notion which some indulge, that the State governments are to be considered as sentinels to guard the people against the encroachments of the General Government; and it is a notion still more extraordinary, that they were to be secured in their fidelity by making them instrumental in creating that Government. Is there no danger that these sentinels will prove faithless? Is it not a reasonable apprehension that combinations may take place between the two classes of public agents, and that the State governments will, instead of checking, give a morbid impulse to the usurpations of the General Government? It seems to me to be an entire misconception of the true theory of our system, to suppose that our freedom is to be secured by this irregular sort of checks and balances. The great and only efficient security is a practical responsibility to the people themselves—a responsibility which is completely broken by the interposition of the State Legislatures.

Mr. McD. said he would next attempt to demonstrate the position assumed in the report of the select committee, that there existed no Constitutional provision for the appointment of a President, and consequently, that the question really to be decided was, whether we should have a Constitution or no Constitution in this important particular. A Constitutional provision, said he, is a rule established by the people in their original act of sovereignty, paramount to any legislative act, whether emanating from Congress or the State Legislatures. In this sense, I challenge gentlemen to point out any Constitutional rule which fixes the mode of electing the President of the United States. To say that each State Legislature prescribes its own rule, is a distinct admission that there is no established rule at all, characterized either by permanence or uniformity. In fact, our experience has taught us that the modes of choosing Electors are as various as the views of different States, and as changeable as the power and ascendancy of rival parties. In one State the appointment is made by the Legislature; in a second, by a general ticket; and in a third, by districts. In the same State, these various modes are adopted according to the exigency of circumstances, and accordingly as the one or the other may be best calculated to accomplish the views of the ascendant party, or to give the State the greatest possible power in the Presidential election. I confidently submit it to the justice of the Committee, whether there ought not to be some uniform rule on the subject? Is there a shadow of equity in giving one State the advantage of a consolidated vote, while another is divided into districts, and probably neutralized by the division?

JANUARY, 1824.

Amendments to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

No State will submit, or ought to submit, to such flagrant injustice. A conflict is thus produced in which correctness and expediency are arrayed against each other. The district system is the true system; that to which the people are attached, because it renders their elective franchise efficient, and gives to every portion of the State its legitimate influence. But, as long as some of the States adhere to the general ticket system, all the rest will be compelled, in self defence, to adopt it, and, in this manner, the very worst plan will prevail, from a sort of State necessity, in opposition to the deliberate sentiments of the community. North Carolina has always been attached to the district system, but has finally abandoned it, and justly abandoned it, because other States would not adopt it. The State of Maryland, magnanimously sacrificing her influence to her principles, has, up to this moment, adhered to the district system, and thus neutralized her weight in the election of the President. Her noble example, so worthy of imitation, has not been followed, and, if I were a citizen of that State, I would no longer submit to the disinterested sacrifice, while other States are so little disposed to appreciate it.

From this brief view of the operations of the existing system, said Mr. McD., I think the plan of the select committee will be exempted, at least, from the charge of innovation. It proposes to substitute uniformity in the place of variety; permanence in the place of perpetual changes; and the plan evidently intended by the Convention for the chaos of clashing expedients, which has sprung up under the influence of State rivalry; and yet we are told of the danger of innovation, and that all reverence for the Constitution will be destroyed by changing it! What, I ask, is meant by the Constitution? Is it the parchment upon which it was written, and the words in which it is expressed? Assuredly not. Properly understood, it means the system of government and the fundamental rules by which it is organized. In this sense of the term, the Constitution may now be changed every month in the year, and almost every day in the month; and it is the tendency of the proposed amendment to prevent these ceaseless changes, originating in the ambitious conflicts of contending parties, and productive of the most violent and acrimonious excitement, that furnishes one of its strongest recommendations.

I have already shown, from the highest authority, that the Convention intended that the Electors of the President should be chosen by the "immediate act of the people of America." I will now attempt to show that it was equally intended that the people should vote by districts. I believe I may safely assert, that, at the time the Constitution was framed, the general ticket system; by which the whole population of a State gives an aggregate vote, either for Representatives or other public agents, was unknown in the political history of the world. I call upon gentlemen, if any such example existed, to produce it. It is an invention of after times, the mere offspring of temporary expediency, and never entered into the conception of the Convention. By adverting to the proceedings of that body, it will be seen that all the propositions, involving a specification of the mode of choosing Electors and members of Congress, contained a provision for dividing the States into districts. The mode of choosing was finally left to the State Legislatures, that they might regulate the details of the election; but, in the confidence that they would adopt the only plan of popular election which had ever existed. The State Legislatures have violated the confidence reposed in them, and it is certainly time that the people should reclaim their lost power, and secure themselves in its exercise by a permanent regulation made by themselves, and not liable to be altered by any set of public agents. Mr. McD. next proceeded to examine the practical operation of the general ticket system. He said a system could not be devised more pregnant with danger to the very existence of the republican form of our Government. Reason and experience concur, said he, in demonstrating that where the whole mass of the people of a State votes in common for the whole number of Electors, some central power is necessary to nominate the Electoral ticket; or, to give it a more general expression, to concentrate popular opinion. Disguise it as we may, the result must be that the elective power of the State will be thrown into the hands of a few political managers. I do not mention this with a view to cast the slightest censure upon those into whose hands this power may happen to fall; but to expose the vices of a system which makes such a dangerous depository of power inevitable. I admit that, as long as the general ticket system prevails, such a depository, dangerous as it is, must exist, and ought to exist. New York, being the largest State in the Union, will furnish the strongest illustration of the subject. That State is entitled to thirty-six Electors, and consists, probably, of forty or fifty counties. Admitting that a vast majority of the people should be united in their preference for a particular candidate for the Presidency, would it be practicable for them to agree upon Electors to carry their will into effect, without some political combination, (I will not characterize it by the odious name of junte,) clothed with authority to prescribe the Electoral ticket to the people? It is impossible. Thus the elective power would be nominally restored to the people, while, in point of fact, it would be exercised by a few prominent politicians, who might happen to have the ascendancy in the State. Admitting these to be as virtuous as any one may choose to suppose them, is it consistent with wisdom to make a system universal, which offers such facilities, and holds out such temptations, to intrigue and corruption? What would be the case presented under such system? The whole Electoral votes of the State, thirty-six in number, and, in all probability, absolutely decisive of the Presidential election, depending upon the influence of a few individuals, perhaps of a single individual! What, in such a case, is the temptation to use corruption? The Presidency itself. What the means? The whole patronage of the Government. What the security? The virtue of a single individual! Sir, said he, I will not say that such a state of things will inevitably result in corruption; but I will say that, if it does not, the virtue of public men is, under all circumstances, an ample security against their ambition, and that no political check, no tie of responsibility, no Constitutional regulation, is necessary to secure the liberties of the people, and preserve the purity of the Government. Upon the whole, I am inclined to think, that, in the course of time, the general ticket system will be found, at least, as bad in practice, as the appointment of Electors by the State Legislatures.

H. OF R.

Amendments to the Constitution.

JANUARY, 1824.

Another objection, said he, exists against the general ticket system, which has been explained in the report of the select committee. It deprives the minority of their unquestionable rights in the respective States, and makes it to depend upon accidental combinations, whether a majority or a minority of the whole of the people of the Union should elect the President. In the result, the majority, however inconsiderable, gives its own vote, added to that of the minority; although, in point of fact, the vote of the minority is opposed to that of the majority, and ought to be subtracted from it. I am aware that it may be answered that, in voting by districts also, the voice of the minority, in each district, will be suppressed. This is true, but it only goes to show that the remedy proposed is not perfect. It will be obvious, on the slightest reflection, that the probability of such combinations as would throw the Government of the country into the hands of a minority, under the general ticket system, is, to the probability of such combinations under the district system, as two hundred and sixty, the number of districts, is to twenty-four, the number of States. In any given State, for example, the chances are, that the minority in one district will counterbalance the minority in another: so that the electoral vote of the State will nearly correspond with the aggregate popular vote, giving the minority its due weight. But, even if it were otherwise, the district minorities, being small masses, will submit to the will of the majority, without any violent excitement. On the contrary, the aggregate minority of a whole State, distinctly perceiving their numerical strength, and feeling the injustice, not only of throwing their vote out of the general estimate, but of giving it to the candidate against whom they intended it to operate, would have deep and permanent feelings of discontent. This would be more certainly and more justly the case, if the districts which constituted the minority should have, in reference to the great concerns of agriculture, manufactures, or commerce, interests different from those of the majority.

There is another view of the general ticket system, calculated, I think, to make a deep impression upon every member of the Committee who will duly consider it. This system places it in the power of States to form political leagues, and secret combinations with each other, for the purpose of securing the elevation of a particular individual.

The few politicians into whose hands the whole elective power of the States would be thrown by the operation of this system, would be enabled to form alliances, by which States might be brought to co-operate in the Presidential election, whose principles and interests were wholly different. Under the district system, such combinations could not take place. It would be utterly impracticable for two hundred and sixty districts, each having its own separate will, and its own centre of operation, to be brought to co-operate, by all the powers of intrigue and corruption.

Mr. McDUFFIE next invited the attention of the Committee to the last branch of the amendment; that which provided that, in the event of there being no election at the first balloting, that the names of the two highest candidates should be sent back to the Electors. This, said he, will almost infallibly insure an election by the people. But, I have heard it urged as an argument against this part of the plan of the select committee, that the length of time which would elapse between the appointment of the Electors and the second balloting, would give an opportunity for tampering with them to prostitute their votes. As this is the only argument which, I believe, can be urged against this branch of the amendment, I beg the particular attention of the Committee, while I attempt its refutation. The only fair mode of reasoning upon this subject, is, to examine the operation of the whole scheme proposed, in comparison with the existing system. How, then, stands the comparison? As the Constitution now stands, the general ticket system will universally, or at least generally, prevail. Under that system, it is a notorious fact, that the Electors are nominated from ten to eleven months before their election. I appeal to the honorable members who represent States where the Electors are appointed by a general ticket, to bear witness to the fact. The general practice has been for the Legislatures to nominate the Electoral ticket in December or January, and from that time to the period of their election, in the succeeding November, it is as well known who will be the Presidential Electors, as if they had been actually chosen.

In Virginia, I may almost say the Electors are a permanent body, as I understand they are scarcely ever changed; and we had recently seen an Electoral ticket formally announced in North Carolina for the ensuing election in November. Now, what, said he, will be the operation of the proposed amendment? The district system will supersede the necessity of previous nomination, and the time for tampering with the Electors will be only from the period of their actual election, to the period of their final vote on the second balloting. This will not be more than two months at the utmost. And is it possible that gentlemen can overlook the dangers to which I have just adverted in the present system, and yet indulge a serious apprehension, that two hundred and sixty Electors, emanating directly from the people, and scattered over the whole Union, will be liable to corruption? Will two months furnish ampler opportunities for intrigue than eleven? It is most obvious, that the danger is greater, under the present system, at the first balloting, than it will be, under the proposed plan, at the second.

JANUARY, 1824.

Amendments to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

Of this part of the amendment I may safely say, as I have said of the District system, that it has none of the characteristics of an innovation. It introduces no new principle into our system. Its only effect will be, to render efficient the primary mode of election established by the Convention. Had the framers of the Constitution foreseen that, from the multiplication of States, and the increase of local interests, the number of candidates would be so great as to render an election by the House of Representatives an ordinary occurrence, they never would have left the Constitution where it is. They evidently contemplated the devolution of the election upon this body as an extreme contingency, which would scarcely ever occur, but when two candidates should have an equal number of votes. This is apparent, from the exclusion of members of Congress from the Electoral College, and from the fact that, in all the discussions upon the mode of electing the President, scarcely any thing was said as to the fitness of the House of Representatives to exercise the electoral function. Even if the objection urged against the second balloting of the Electors rested upon more substantial grounds, said Mr. McD., its efficacy in preventing the election from devolving on the House of Representatives, would reconcile me to its adoption. I trust I shall not be considered as speaking disrespectfully of the body of which I am a member, in the general remarks I shall feel it to be my duty to offer to the Committee, on this part of the investigation. I can say, with the utmost sincerity, that I have never been associated in the public service with a body for whom I have a higher respect than for this branch of the National Legislature. For wisdom and virtue I do not believe they are excelled by any deliberative assembly of the world. But, sir, this part of the discussion must have reference to general principles, which are to operate through the long course of future time; and, in this view of the subject, the only concession which I ask, as the basis of my argument, is, that the House of Representatives will always be composed of men. I will grant all the wisdom and virtue which any gentleman may choose to ascribe to them, and I still believe it can be shown that nothing can endanger the purity of our republican system so much as the habitual election of the President by the members of this body.

Sir, said Mr. McD., I believe it is in the power of human wisdom to keep out of temptation, but I do not believe it is always in the power of human virtue to resist it, when thrown into the sphere of its fascinations. And if there existed no other evidence of the Divinity of our Saviour, than the admonition he has left us, to pray for deliverance from this besetting enemy of frail humanity, I should deem that sufficient. The danger to be apprehended from the election of the President by Congress, is not from corruption, in the vulgar acceptance of the term. In a country of so much intelligence and virtue, it would be difficult to find a man so basely treacherous as to sell himself by a palpable act of political prostitution. But it is to be remarked that, in Congress, will be generally found the ambitious and aspiring men of the country, and that the President will have the dispensation of those offices which are the natural objects of their aspiration. I need not explain the insidious disguise under which ambition may approach a member of Congress, with the whole patronage of the Government in his hands; nor the manner in which self-interest can delude the judgment, and convert a man into a factionary, without even his being conscious of the transmutation. These things must be obvious to every one who understands the human heart and the operation of the human passions. The politicians of the country, therefore, are the very last men to whom the election of the President should be confided. They, and they only, are exposed to that sort of temptation from which only any danger is to be apprehended. I solemnly declare, sir, that I would prefer that the College of Electors should be composed of the plainest farmers of the country, emanating directly from the people, and having no political expectations, rather than that it should be composed of the most wise and virtuous politicians, engaged in a course even of honorable ambition.

Nothing is more to be deprecated in the present system, than its tendency to convert Congress into a theatre for the Presidential canvass. In the course of time that question will infuse itself into the whole legislation of the country, and be productive of the most injurious distraction in the national deliberations. Members will be drawn into the vortex, and converted into partisans of the different candidates, equally by the best and the worst of the human passions. This House is not without some experience on that subject already, nor can it be disguised, that discussions of the character to which I have alluded, have tended to disgust the people and alienate their confidence. We are sent here for the great purposes of national legislation, and ought not to be distracted by considerations of a different kind.

The duties of legislating for the Republic, and electing the Chief Magistrate, are incompatible in their nature, and their combination is productive of the greatest embarrassment with the people, in the election of Members of Congress. These should be elected in reference exclusively to their virtue, talents, and capacity to serve the people. But it frequently happens that members of this description differ with their constituents as to the person who should be elected President. At the approach of every Presidential election, therefore, the people will be exposed to the disagreeable alternative of discarding many of their most faithful public servants, or of being misrepresented on the subject of the Presidency. The division of functions is as important in the Constitutional distribution of power as the division of labor in political economy. The qualifications of a Member of Congress have not the remotest connexion with his opinion of the respective competitors for the Presidency, and yet the people will regard, and ought to regard, the latter consideration as long as Congress shall have so direct an agency in the election of the President. The inevitable result, which will consummate the evils of the existing state of things, if the election of the Chief Magistrate be not removed, both in theory and in practice, from Congress, must be that the country will be governed by a succession of factions. By a faction, I mean a combination of politicians, habitually and systematically acting together, and aiming to wield the Executive Government, not with a view to political principles or the interest of the people, but to the distribution of its patronage. This, sir, is the true source of the morbid violence of party conflicts, and the fluctuations of national policy—evils peculiarly to be deprecated in a Republic. When politicians array themselves against each other, not as the organs of their constituents, but in pursuit of their own aggrandizement, they often find it necessary to invent sources of collision where none really exist. It becomes a mere contest between those who are in and those who are out of power, and the fact that one party has adopted a particular course of policy, is a sufficient reason for the other to oppose it. Hence, it will be found that every canvass for the Presidency will involve in jeopardy the great institutions of our national policy. The obvious, and, in my opinion, the only remedy is, to take the election of President out of the hands of politicians, and restore it to the people. Let neither the President be dependent upon Congress, nor the Members of Congress the instruments of the President. Destroy the connexion altogether. No people on earth are more steady in their principles than the people of the United States. They will communicate their own energy and steadiness to the Executive, if that department should be made directly responsible to them. I am warranted by our experience in saying that the people have more spirit to resent injuries, and more fortitude to sustain the burdens and privations incident to their defence and security, than any combination of politicians. The people look only to the good of the country; politicians look to their popularity also; to the means of preserving or obtaining power. I recollect, with shame, the degradation of our national character previous to the late war, and with a just pride the spirit of a brave and patriotic people, by which the country was reclaimed from its fallen condition. That war was emphatically a war of the people. Their representatives were literally driven into it, many of them with fear and trembling.

I will now proceed, said Mr. McD., to a very delicate part of this investigation, that which relates to the compromise between the large and the small States, involved in the proposition. As this will probably have as much influence upon the fate of the amendment as its own intrinsic merits, I beg the particular attention of the Committee, while I attempt to show that the mutual concessions provided are so obviously just that it is the interest both of the large and small States to make them. The division of the larger States into districts will prevent them from throwing their unbroken and consolidated vote into the Presidential contest, and from forming political combinations in reference to that object; and this is the equivalent which they give the small States for the surrender of the equal suffrage to which they are now entitled in the House of Representatives, on the contingency of the election devolving upon that body. The powers thus mutually surrendered, both by the large and the small States, are powers in my opinion utterly inconsistent with the fundamental principles of a republican Government. I have already shown that the general ticket system would transfer the elective power from the people into the hands of a few, and that it opens the door for corrupt combinations, by which an active and organized minority might govern the Union. I shall now endeavor to show that the contingent power of the small States proposed to be surrendered is even more dangerous; and that, upon the principles of popular sovereignty, it is absolutely indefensible. Upon what principle can a citizen of Delaware claim to exercise thirty-six times as much of the sovereignty of the country as a citizen of New York? Is there a semblance of justice, or even a plausible ground of expediency, by which such a claim can be sustained? Have the people of the small States any interest in the exercise of such a dangerous power? Let it be remembered that the people do not exercise the power themselves, but that their representative, whoever he may happen to be, will wield one twenty-fourth part of the elective power of the country. Can it be conceived that the people of a small State are ever desirous of placing such a fearful power in the hands of a single man, when it can have no other effect than to defeat the will of the majority of the people? There is no political principle more universally admitted in this country than the right of the majority of the people to govern. It is the very essence of a Republic. The only security we can have for the virtue and intelligence of public agents is, that they are the choice of the majority; and, most assuredly, this is the only means of securing to the Government the confidence of the people. And have not the small States the same interest with the large States, that the Executive Government should be administered by virtue and intelligence, and sustained by the confidence of the people? In such a question the citizen of Delaware has the same interest with the citizen of Pennsylvania. The interposition of an imaginary line can make none but an imaginary difference between them.

A combination of small States, containing only one-fifth part of the population of the Union, might, under the present system, elect the President. Such an event is not only possible, but probable. Indeed, it is a rational presumption, that the minority will generally prevail, when the election shall be made by the House of Representatives. Sir, no event could occur, more to be deprecated. The man who is elected by such a combination of small States, if he had the purity of an angel, could not command the confidence of the people. A single Representative is more easily secured by political expectations, or corrupt bargains, than thirty-six. Ambition would be tempted, therefore, to bring all the arts of intrigue to operate upon the Representatives of the smaller States. And how would the people reason upon the subject? They would see the power of the country thrown into the hands of a minority by the votes of a few individuals, exposed to the highest human temptation. To say nothing of the actual danger of corruption in such a state of things, it is sufficient to say, that the people would generally suspect it. It would excite a deep and dangerous distrust, calculated to alienate their affections from the system itself. I cannot conceive a situation involving a more painful and embarrassing responsibility than that of the Representative of a small State, under such circumstances. No degree of virtue could shield him from the imputations against his political integrity. And what would be the predicament of an Administration, elevated to power by a minority, under suspicions of corrupt influence, and, as a natural consequence, opposed by the popular branch of the National Legislature? A scene of distraction would be presented, which would be little better than anarchy.

JANUARY, 1824.

Amendments to the Constitution.

H. OF R.

Sir, the people of this country will never submit to be governed by a minority. If we do not amend the Constitution, so as to prevent that calamity, they will change it, and ought to change it, in practice. It is my firm belief, that, if we do not adopt an amendment similar to the one proposed, a Convention of Delegates will be regularly appointed by the people, to nominate a President, and that their nomination will be regarded as conclusive. What, then, will the small States gain by pertinaciously refusing to concur in the amendment? They will retain a contingent power, which the large States will never permit them to exercise. This is not all. The large States, by being driven into combinations against the small, will not only govern them, but govern them with the feelings of an adversary party. A notion seems to prevail with some, that, if this amendment is adopted, the small States will be liable to be oppressed by the large States. There never was a more unfounded apprehension. The small States are the favorites of the Constitution, and, even under the proposed amendment, would be eminently so. A very slight examination will make this apparent. There are seven States in the Union, which, together, contain a population smaller than that of North Carolina. What is their relative power? They have fourteen votes in the Senate, a co-ordinate branch of the Legislature, while North Carolina has but two! This, too, is a power of which they can never be deprived. And yet we are told that the small States are in danger of oppression! Their rights and interests can only be infringed by law; and their ascendancy in the Senate, is an impassable barrier against any such danger. In point of fact, the small States are so distributed among the large, and their interests so variously blended, that there can be no inducement to oppress them. But even if the seven States before mentioned lay adjacent to each other, and constituted a separate local division of the country, having interests different from the rest of the Union, would these interests be less amply secured by their subdivision into small States? Would they consent to be consolidated into one? Most undoubtedly they would not. And even in the Presidential election itself, they have a decided advantage over the large States. These seven States to which I have alluded, are entitled to twenty-six electoral votes, while North Carolina, with a larger population, is entitled to fifteen only. States, having a single Representative, are entitled to three Electors for a population of forty thousand; whereas the large States are entitled to but little more than one Elector for the same population.

There is one general remark, said Mr. McD., applicable to the powers which both the large and the small States surrender by the provisions of this amendment. They are not only powers peculiarly liable to be abused, and, therefore, inconsistent with the purity of the Government; but they are powers in which the people of those States have no sort of interest, however profitable they may be to their politicians. What benefit can the people of a large State derive from concentrating their whole elective power in a few hands, or of a small State, from exercising, through a single Representative, a disproportionate share of the elective power? In either case, a few politicians may derive an advantage from having it in their power to secure such a distribution of the Executive patronage, as they may desire; but the people will derive no solitary advantage, unless exposing their public men to unusual temptations, can be so considered.

This, sir, (said Mr. McD.) is really a contest between the interests of the people and the interests of politicians, and I am gratified to perceive so general a disposition, both among the members from the large and small States, magnanimously to surrender up the powers in question, as a sacrifice to the purity of the Government and the harmony of the Union. I confess, sir, I feel an uncommon solicitude upon this subject, more than I have ever felt on any other, since I have directed my attention to public affairs. I believe an expectation was very generally indulged, previous to the meeting of this Congress, that our deliberations would be distracted by discussions having reference to objects of a personal nature, and which would neither reflect credit upon us nor confer any benefit upon the country. Let us disappoint these expectations. Let us evince our devotion to the interests of the country, by establishing, upon an immutable foundation, those great principles of Constitutional freedom, which will secure to us the gratitude of future generations. For myself, sir, I can say, in a spirit as sincere as it is unambitious, that I would rather go down to posterity even as an humble instrument in effecting this great Constitutional reform, than to receive all the living honors this Government can confer.

When Mr. McDUFFIE had concluded—

The Committee rose, and the House adjourned to Monday:

H. of R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

MONDAY, January 19.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of sundry inhabitants of the coast of Florida, praying that the port of Fernandina, in Amelia Island, may be established as a port of entry.

Mr. CALL also presented a memorial of the inhabitants of East Florida, praying for the passage of a law excluding foreign wreckers from the coast of Florida, and to designate some particular port to which wrecked property shall be carried.

The petition and memorial were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WEBSTER presented a memorial, signed by Thomas Sewall, John N. Moulder, E. B. Caldwell, Samuel N. Smallwood, and Andrew Way, jr., a committee appointed at a numerous meeting of the inhabitants of the City of Washington, on behalf of said inhabitants, praying Congress to take measures to assure the people of Greece of the deep interest felt by the people of this country in the contest which they are now carrying on against the Turkish Government for their emancipation and freedom, and of the sincere good wishes of the Congress of the United States, for the ultimate success and triumph of their cause; which memorial was committed to the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented a memorial of sundry inhabitants of the city of Philadelphia, praying, respectively, that additional duties may be imposed on iron and iron castings, hereafter imported into the United States.

Mr. WHITMAN presented a memorial of the manufacturers, mechanics, and friends of national industry, citizens of the State of Connecticut, praying "that Congress would revise and increase the tariff of duties, by such additional duty on woollens, fine cottons, and iron, and such duty on auction sales as will encourage the manufacturer, and protect him from the greatest evil, the art and designs of rivals abroad."

Mr. MARVIN presented a memorial of delegates from most of the counties in the State of New York (especially deputed at large county meetings composed of all classes of citizens) convened at the Capitol, in the city of Albany, in the State of New York, praying, generally, that more efficient protection may be afforded to the manufacturing interest of the country; and specifically "that a duty may be laid upon the importation of any woollen or cotton goods, upon the export of which to this country a protecting duty shall be paid by any foreign Government, to twice the amount of such protection;" which memorial was laid on the table.

Mr. CASSEDY presented a petition of sundry aliens, residing in the State of New Jersey, praying that the laws upon the subject of naturalization may be revised and amended, so as to afford greater facilities to foreigners wishing to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. JENNINGS presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, praying for the aid of Congress in opening a canal navigation between the waters of the river Wabash and the waters of Lake Erie; which memorial was committed to the Committee of the whole House, to which is committed the bill to authorize the State of Indiana to open a canal through the public lands, and to connect the navigation of the rivers Wabash and the Miami of Lake Erie.

Mr. BRENT presented a petition of inhabitants residing north of Red river, in the State of Louisiana, praying for an alteration in the mode at present pursued in surveying the public lands in that State, and that the plan adopted in the State of Illinois may be adopted; also, that the right of pre-emption may be extended to settlers on public lands in certain cases.

Mr. OWEN presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, praying that the right of pre-emption in the purchase of the lands upon which the seats of justice of the counties of Bibb, Henry, and Pike, have been located, may be extended to said State, as also that the right of pre-emption may be granted in the purchase of certain lands, the proceeds of the sale of which to be applied to the erection of county buildings in certain other counties in said State, where the lands most eligible for county seats have been sold to individuals.

Mr. CALL presented a memorial of the inhabitants of the village of Fernandina, in East Florida, praying that certain public lots in said village may be granted to the inhabitants thereof.

The said petitions and memorials were referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanied by a communication from the Director of the Mint, giving the result of the assays of certain foreign coins, during the last year, made in pursuance of law; which report was read, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FLOYD, from the committee appointed on the subject, reported, in part, a bill to authorize the occupation of the Columbia or Oregon river; which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act concerning invalid pensioners," was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOL submitted to the House a comparative statement of the tariff duties as at present imposed on certain articles of foreign merchandise, upon their importation into the United States, and as proposed to be imposed on the same articles by the bill now before this House to amend the several acts imposing duties on imports; which statement was committed to the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

THE GREEK CAUSE.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TAYLOR in the Chair, on the resolution some time since offered by Mr. WEBSTER, which is in the words following:

"Resolved, That provision ought to be made by law for defraying the expense incident to the appointment of an Agent or Commissioner to Greece, when-

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

ever the President shall deem it expedient to make such appointment."

The resolution having been read—

Mr. WEBSTER rose and said, that he was afraid that, so far as his part was concerned, the excited expectations of the public mind, on the present occasion, would be disappointed. It was difficult on any occasion that called the attention to a spot on the globe connected with such associations and recollections as Greece, to avoid some degree of warmth and enthusiasm. Yet, he was entirely sensible that, in gravely legislating on the present subject, those feelings must be chastised. He should endeavor, in what he had to offer to the House, to repress such feelings as far as it was practicable; yet, if we would wholly escape from them, we must fly beyond the limits of the civilized world; we must go beyond the limits of social order, the bounds where laws and knowledge are found; nay, we must leave this Hall, before we can turn away from the memorials of ancient Greece. What, he asked, is this popular assembly? what this free discussion of public measures? what this open, unreserved action of mind upon mind? what that popular eloquence which, if it were now present, would, on such a theme, shake this Hall to its centre? what are these but such memorials? This magnificent edifice, these columns, with their stately proportions, this fine architecture by which we are surrounded, what are these but so many witnesses of what Greece once was, and what she has taught us to be? Yet, sir, said Mr. W., I have not introduced the resolution, now on your table, with any view towards repaying aught of the debt, which we, in common with the civilized world, owe to that land of science, freedom, arts, and arms. It is a debt that never can be paid. Whatever may be our feelings of gratitude for these gifts, we are constrained to act with a view alone to the present state of the world, and of our relations to it. What I propose, and what I shall say, has reference to modern, not to ancient Greece—to the living, not to the dead.

I am aware, sir, that it is a very easy thing to run over common places on the subject of this resolution; to call it a visionary and Quixotic measure, and to urge the good old maxim of its being the soundest policy for each one to take care of his own concerns. That maxim, sir, is very true, but very inapplicable to the present occasion. The question which is now to be discussed is the American question in relation to this affair—What is it best for us to do in the present aspect of things respecting Greece? And surely, sir, this is a question that comprehends something more than a mere pecuniary calculation. Whenever my mind turns to that question, I cannot forget the age I live in, as well as the peculiar position of our own country.

At the commencement of the present session of Congress, Mr. W. said, the President of the United States, in the discharge of the high duties of his station, deemed it incumbent upon him to introduce the subject to the consideration of the National Legislature; and, in his communication, he had expressed an opinion that there was reason to hope that the Greeks would be successful in the present struggle with their oppressors, and that the power that has so long crushed them had lost its dominion over them forever. The same communication contained other matters of great importance, in relation to a rumored combination of foreign Sovereigns to interfere in the concerns of South America. Under these circumstances, said Mr. W., I thought it was proper and becoming that that communication should receive a response from this House. I am aware that the practice of a general answer from the Legislature to the annual Message or Speech of the President, has, for more than twenty years past, been disused; nor do I complain of such disuse; but I am also of opinion that the practice was not without its positive advantages. It is my conviction, that, in any Government, which contains a popular branch, it is the duty of that popular portion of the Government as much to express its opinions, as to pass the necessary laws. I introduce the present resolution, under this conviction, as well as that I might have an opportunity to give my vote, directly, on one of the subjects adverted to by the Executive; and I still think that if it was proper in the President to advert to these subjects, it is equally proper in us to take notice of what he has addressed to us respecting them.

Mr. W. said, he should endeavor, however, to avoid the responsibility of any effort to change the policy of this Government towards foreign nations. He approved of the policy at present pursued; he was satisfied, in this respect, with our present condition. The policy of this Government is peace, for peace is to us the greatest source of national increase and aggrandizement. The most sanguine projector cannot furnish more brilliant or exalted prospects than those which must be realized by these States if they can preserve their pacific relations towards the rest of the world. Time, peace, industry, and the arts, are raising this Government by a certain and irresistible progress. It is our true policy, Mr. W. said, to grow, not to acquire; we are to attain to greatness by internal development, not by external accretion—and he should be the last to turn aside the wise policy of the country from its wonted and proper channel. But, said he, that policy, while it is pacific, should at the same time be liberal; he spoke now in relation to those great questions which are at this hour agitating Europe and the world—questions which are concerned wherever a nation attempts to obtain its freedom—the question, in a word, between regulated and unregulated power. Wherever it is disputed, whether a nation shall or shall not possess a constitution, our side of that question ought to be known and declared; we are bound to bring, in aid of its decision, that moral force which must ever reside in the opinion of a free and an intelligent nation. He had said that the policy of this Government was a pacific but a liberal policy; he should endeavor to show that in both of these characters it sanctioned the adoption of the resolution now on the table.

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

The age, said he, is a peculiar one—it has a marked and striking character, and the position and circumstances of our country are no less so. Had we enjoyed the option, in which period of the world's history, as thus far disclosed, our personal lot should be cast; none of us, surely, would wish to have been born in any other time, or in any other country. There has occurred no age that may be compared with the present, whether in the interest excited by what now is, or the prospects it holds out as to what shall be. The attitude of the United States, meanwhile, is solemn and impressive. Ours is now the great Republic of the earth; its free institutions are matured by the experiment of half a century; nay, as a free Government, it goes farther back—the benefits of a free Constitution have virtually been enjoyed here for two centuries. As a free Government, as the freest Government, its growth and strength compel it, willing or unwilling, to stand forth to the contemplation of the world. We cannot obscure ourselves, if we would; a part we must take, honorable or dishonorable, in all that is done in the civilized world. Now, it will not be denied, that, within the last ten years, there has been agitated, in that world, a question of vast moment—a question pregnant with consequences favorable or unfavorable to the prevalence, nay, to the very existence, of civil liberty. It is a question which comes home to us. It calls on us for the expression of our opinion on the great question now before us. Assuredly, if there is any general tendency in the minds and affairs of men, which may be said to characterize the present age, it is the tendency to limited Governments. The enlightened part of mankind have very distinctly evinced a desire to take a share, at least, in the government of themselves. The men of this age will not be satisfied even with kind masters. They have shown, (except where force has been interposed to crush them;) that they will not be contented without a participation in the Government. This is so strongly marked a feature in the social condition of this age, that it can have escaped the observation of none to whom I address myself. It cannot be denied that while this is the prevailing spirit, there is an antagonist principle also at work. This, sir, said Mr. W., is a state of things in which we, as a nation, have, we must have, an interest. The doctrines advanced (and which are promptly supported by a great force) go to prostrate the liberties of the entire civilized world, whether existing under an absolute, a monarchical, or a republican form of government. They are doctrines which have been conceived with great sagacity, they are pursued with unbroken perseverance, and they bring to their support a million and a half of bayonets.

And, here, said Mr. W., let me not be misunderstood, I am not about to declaim against crowned heads, nor enter on a tirade against other forms of government, but I ask that the declarations of the Congress of European Sovereigns, which is promulgated as that which is to form a part of the public law of civilized Europe, may be subjected to a close examination.

The entire overthrow of the late French Emperor, left the European world in a state of very strong excitement. In September, 1815, the Sovereigns, who had, by their united exertions, succeeded in putting down the French power, entered into, and published to the world, an instrument of agreement, which has since been familiarly known by the title of the "Holy Alliance." This paper, which appeared immediately on the restoration of the Bourbons, had its origin with the Cabinet of Russia. Its appearance excited, at first, but little comparative interest. It was regarded as little more than a devout expression of gratitude for the success which had attended their united exertions in bringing the long war of Europe to a conclusion. It professed to be nothing more than a declaration, that the sovereigns, who joined in it, would, in future, conduct their respective Governments on principles of the public good, and with a sacred regard to the Christian religion. Such a combination was certainly novel. Nothing like it had ever before been published by kings. Yet, under the view of it which he had just expressed, it attracted no very great share of attention. On the face of it, there seemed nothing to object to. All that was strange about the transaction was, that monarchs, who professed Christianity and civilization, should stipulate to do what, without any such stipulation, it was their acknowledged duty to do; the contract bound them to nothing to which they were not morally bound already. What was the amount of the contract? That they would not violate Christianity, nor disturb the peace of Europe. At best, such a contract was supererogatory. It was remarkable, that a celebrated writer on treaties, when defining what a treaty is, supposed, as possible, such a case as has occurred, and certainly spoke very disrespectfully of such a treaty as the Holy Alliance actually was. His words Mr. W. quoted as follows:

"It seems useless to frame any pacts or leagues barely for the defence and support of universal peace, for, by such a league nothing is superadded to the obligation of natural law, and no agreement is made for the performance of any thing, which the parties were not previously bound to perform, nor is the original obligation rendered firmer or stronger by such an addition. Men of any tolerable culture and civilization, might well be ashamed of entering into any such compact, the conditions of which imply only that the parties concerned shall not offend in any clear point of duty. Besides, we should be guilty of great irreverence towards God, should we suppose that his injunctions had not already laid a sufficient obligation upon us to act justly, unless we ourselves voluntarily consented to the same engagement; as if our obligation to obey his will, depended upon our own pleasure.

"If one engage to serve another, he doth not set it down expressly and particularly among the terms and conditions of the bargain, that he will not betray nor murder him, nor pillage nor burn his house. For the same reason, that would be a dishonorable engagement, in which men should bind themselves to act properly and decently, and not break the peace."—Puffendorf.

Such were the sentiments of this eminent writer. How nearly he had anticipated the case of the Holy Alliance, Mr. W. said, would appear from

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

comparing with what he then wrote, the preamble to that alliance, which Mr. W. read, in the following words:

"In the name of the most Holy and Indivisible Trinity, their Majesties, the Emperor of Austria, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of Russia,—solemnly declare, that the present act has no other object than to publish, in the face of the whole world, their fixed resolution, both in the administration of their respective States, and in their political relations with every other Government, to take for their sole guide the precepts of that holy religion, namely, the precepts of justice, Christian charity, and peace, which, far from being applicable only to private concerns, must have an immediate influence on the councils of princes, and guide all their steps, as being the only means of consolidating human institutions, and remedying their imperfections."

This measure, Mr. W. went on to say, was no otherwise important than that it was the first of a series, and that it was followed up by measures of the most important kind. In this point of view, it was worthy of the most mature consideration. It contained two principles, which were now declared to form a part of the law of the world, the enforcement of which was threatened by a million and a half of bayonets. The first of these is, that all constitutional rights come from the Crown. "All useful and necessary changes (says the Laybach Circular, of May, 1821) ought only to emanate from the free will and intelligent conviction of those whom God has rendered responsible for power." This principle, Mr. W. said, carried Europe back at one remove, to the middle of the dark ages. This was the form under which our sturdy ancestors obtained Magna Charta, which was given as a concession from the Sovereign. But, in a later age, in the revolution which introduced the family of Orange, the British nation had grown wiser—those things which at Runnymede were given as grants by the Bill of Rights, were afterwards formally and explicitly demanded and insisted on, as rights of the nation. They had been assented to as such, and on this basis the English Constitution rests at this hour. For this reason it was, that Britain, when she refused to unite in the principles of the Holy Alliance, declared those principles to be subversive of the principles of the English Constitution.

What, said Mr. W., is the nature of that alliance? Alliances between nations for the purpose of mutual advantage or defence, had been often heard of, but an alliance such as that at Laybach had never dared to be declared to the world. Was this an alliance of nation with nation? No, Mr. W. said, it was an alliance of crowns against the people; of sovereigns against their own subjects; it was, in a word, the union of the physical force of all Governments against the rights of the people in all countries. What was the natural tendency of such an alliance? It was to put an end to all nations, as such. Extend the principles of that alliance, and the nations are no more—there are only Kings. It divided society horizontally, (if such a figure was allowed to him,) and left all the sovereigns above, and all the people below; it set up the one above all rule or restraint, and put down the other to be trampled beneath their feet. Not satisfied with demanding from the subject allegiance to his own master, it exacted a double, a triple, a quadruple, and he believed, indeed, a quintuple allegiance. According to its principle, all people owe allegiance to all sovereigns. What must be, what has been, the practical operation of such principles? They lead, necessarily, to mutual distrust, to general discontent, and to universal war. This alliance, Mr. W. said, had changed the leading policy of Europe. It had made it criminal for the people to combine, or to resist the will of either of these sovereigns. If, for example, a Spaniard attempted to resist the Inquisition, he offended not only the King of Spain, but he sinned also against the Emperor of Russia. Or, if a Greek attempted to resist the Turkish scimitar, he, too, offended the Emperor of Russia. To use the words of the Verona circular, such a man "throws a firebrand into the midst of the Ottoman Empire."

At the Congress of Troppau, said Mr. W., we find the second of the doctrines to which I before alluded, as now published to the world, to be its law. The Declaration of Troppau says, "The Powers have an undoubted right to take a hostile attitude in regard to those States in which an overthrow of the Government may operate as an example." This right, between States whose juxtaposition renders them mutually exposed to the consequences of what takes place in either, is a part of what is called the law of vicinage; and, when confined to extreme cases, may, to a certain extent, be defended upon principles of necessity, and national defence and preservation. On this principle, the war of England against France, when the latter was in a state of revolution, was undertaken, and this is the ground on which it was defended on the floor of Parliament. But to maintain that every sovereign in Europe may go to war to repress an example, Mr. W. said was monstrous indeed! What was to be the limit to such a principle, or to the practice growing out of it? If this principle is allowed, what, said Mr. W., becomes of our example? Why are we not as legitimate objects for the operation of the principle as any who attempt to set a republican example on the other side of the Atlantic? We certainly did not subscribe to this principle in the days of the Revolution. We did think that when oppressed we might lawfully resist oppression; and I trust we are not so sick of our liberty and its effects as to be unwilling, by our example, and by the most public expression of our opinion, to recommend to others the same doctrine.

Here, then, continued Mr. W., is a combination which is expressly pledged against all who set such an example—a manifesto which sets itself against the whole course of the human intellect—against the character of the age, and which would bring us back at once to all the oppression of the feudal system. Here is doctrine which no writer, no diplomatist, which even no courtier ever thought of advancing. Sir, said Mr. W., it is a flagrant innovation on the principles and practice of the whole civilized world. I hope, said he, I shall not be considered as exaggerating the case. To convince this House that I state nothing but the sober truth—that I draw no inference that the sovereigns themselves have not drawn before me—permit me to refer to an occurrence that took place at the Congress of Verona. In a speech made at that Congress by the French Minister, Chateaubriand, he declared that, in a personal conversation with the Emperor of Russia, he had heard that august sovereign utter sentiments, which appeared to him so precious that he immediately hastened home, and wrote them down, while they were yet fresh in his recollection. The Emperor declared—

“That there can no longer be such a thing as an English, French, Russian, Prussian, or Austrian policy; there is henceforth but one policy, which, for the safety of all, should be adopted both by people and kings. It was for me first to show myself convinced of the principles on which I founded the alliance. An occasion offered itself—the rising in Greece. Nothing, certainly, occurred more for my interests, for the interests of my people—nothing more acceptable to my country, than a religious war with Turkey; but I have thought I perceived in the troubles of the Morea the sign of revolution, and I have held back. Providence has not put under my command 800,000 soldiers to satisfy my ambition, but to protect religion, morality, and justice, and to secure the prevalence of those principles of order on which human society rests. It may well be permitted that kings should have public alliances to defend themselves against secret enemies.”

This may be so; but, I trust in God, though there should be no French, or Russian, or Prussian, or Austrian, or English policy, (though this latter I never will believe,) there will at least be an American policy. The end and scope of this doctrine is neither more nor less than this: to interfere, by force, for any Government against any people who resist it. The times of the Stuarts have come back again, and with increased demands of power. Be the state of a people what it may, they shall not rise—the Government what it will, it shall in no case be resisted. And this has been carried out, too. Look at Spain—look at Greece. If a man may not resist, either the Spanish Inquisition or the Turkish scimeter, what, in God's name, may he resist? Stronger cases can never arise. This alliance laughs at the doctrine of your Blackstones, and all others who maintain that, in extreme cases, resort is to be had to first principles and natural rights. Are we prepared to part with that doctrine? The doctrine is advanced—it is supported with an immense force. The timid shrink and succumb. If it is not resisted here, and in one other spot, it will be resisted nowhere. If there is no vigor in the Saxon race to withstand it, there is none to be looked for elsewhere. Is it not time to step forth, and at least declare that we condemn and deny such monstrous opinions? How can reformation of Government ever begin but with the people? The radical defect of this system is, that it divides civilization—it would allow it to go on in all other matters, but not in principles of Government and civil liberty. But human knowledge is all connected—that knowledge is fast spreading—the great mass of society which holds, and ever must hold, the physical, is fast obtaining the intellectual power of society. The harmony which has ever prevailed, either in Europe or America, has rested on the principle of the mutual independence of nations. There have, indeed, been some instances of the violation of this principle, as in the case of Poland; but on the great scale nations have hitherto been viewed as independent sovereignties—civilization and christianity have united to establish among them international law, and from this blended influence has sprung that delightful spectacle, so truly described by a poet, the unseen, but not unfelt influence of law:

“And sovereign Law, the world's collected will,
O'er thrones and globes elate,
Sits Empress—crowning good, repressing ill:
Smit by her sacred frown,
The fiend, Discretion, like a vapor, sinks,
And e'en the all-dazzling Crown
Hides his faint rays, and at her bidding shrinks.”

Take this away, and there is nothing left but the sword. The law of nations declares that all States are equal—these papers deny it. The law of nations maintains that, in extreme cases, resistance is lawful—these papers deny it. The law of nations proclaims that one nation has no right to interfere in the affairs of another—these papers deny it.

But now, it may be asked, what is all that to us? The question is easily answered. We are one of the nations. Our system of Government is, throughout, utterly hostile to that system, and if we are safe from its effects we may thank our situation or our courage. The age we live in, and our own active character, have connected us with all the nations of the world, and we, as a nation, have precisely the same interest in international law as a private individual has in the laws of his country.

But, apart from the soundness of the policy, on general principles there is a ground of duty in this matter. What do we not, as a people, owe to the principle of lawful resistance? to the principle that society shall govern itself? These principles have raised us to a state of prosperity, in which our course is rapid and irresistible. We are borne on as by a mighty current, and if we would stop long enough to take an observation, that we may measure our national course, before we can effect it, we find we have already moved a vast distance from the point at which it was commenced. This course we cannot check; it is the course of things, and it will go on. Shall we not, thus situated, give to others who are struggling for these very principles, the cheering aid of our example and opinion?

But, whatever we do in this matter, it behooves us to do on principle. If, on the subject of the rumored combination against South America, we take any stand, it must be on principle that that stand is taken. The near approach, or the remote distance of danger, may change policy, but cannot touch principle; and the same reasons of an abstract kind, that would lead us to protest in the case of the whole Southern Continent, bind us to protest in the case of the smallest Republic in Italy.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

A second question, however, may here be asked. What can we do? This thunder is at a distance—the wide Atlantic rolls between—we are safe: would you have us go to war? Would you have us send armies into Europe? No: I would not. But this reasoning mistakes the age. Formerly, indeed, there was no making an impression on a nation but by bayonets, and subsidies, by fleets and armies: but the age has undergone a change: there is a force in public opinion which, in the long run, will outweigh all the physical force that can be brought to oppose it. Until public opinion is subdued, the greatest enemy of tyranny is not yet dead. What is the soul, the informing spirit of our institutions, of our entire system of government? Public opinion. While this acts with intensity, and moves in the right direction, the country must ever be safe—let us direct the force, the vast moral force of this engine, to the aid of others. Public opinion is the great enemy of the Holy Alliance. It may be said that public opinion did not succeed in Spain. Public opinion was never thoroughly changed there; but does any man suppose that Spain is not at this day nearer, not merely in point of time, but intellectually and politically, nearer to freedom than she was last Spring? True, indeed, the Bourbon power did make an almost unresisted march from the Pyrenees to Cadiz, but is Europe satisfied? Public opinion is neither conciliated nor destroyed—like Milton's angels, it is vital in every part—and this followed back the Conqueror as he returned, and held Europe in indignant silence. Let us, then, speak: let us speak well of what has done well for us. We shall have the thinking world all with us—and, be it remembered, it was a thinking community that achieved our Revolution before a battle had been fought.

I shall not detain this Committee by laying before it any statistical, geographical, or commercial account of Greece. The document on your table, which has been furnished from the Department of State, in some measure supplies these: and her history is familiar to us all. Within the last thirty or forty years, the condition of that country has undergone a great improvement. Her marine produces the best sailors in the Mediterranean—better, in that sea, than even our own. Their commerce, before the present commotions, had begun to extend itself to France and Spain—Hobhouse (our best authority) states their seamen at fifty thousand; but that number is certainly much too large—they have one hundred and fifty-three thousand tons of shipping, which is equal to about one-fifth of that of the United States. Their population in European Turkey is about five millions, and in Asia Minor about two millions more. Their moral state is rapidly advancing in all respects—the literati of Europe conceived a strong interest in their behalf, and sent books and scholars and printing presses into Greece—many of the works of modern Europe have been translated into their language, and they have produced many works entirely original. This people, a people of intelligence, ingenuity, refinement, spirit, and enterprise, have been for centuries under the most atrocious, unparalleled Tartarian barbarism that ever oppressed the human race. This House is unable to estimate duly, it is unable even to conceive or comprehend it. It must be remembered that the character of the force which has so long domineered over them is purely military. It has been as truly, as beautifully, said, that "the Turk has now been encamped in Europe for four centuries." Yes, sir—it is nothing else than an encampment. They came in by the sword, and they govern by the sword. They hold the captive Greeks to be their property—and when a wretched Greek has yielded up his year's earnings to some rapacious exactor, it has truly been said that he "pays his ransom to live another year." Despotism is there, if the phrase may be allowed, formed into a regular system of anarchy. The power delegated to the inferior tyrant is as absolute within its sphere, as the power of the Sultan himself—and hence, there is scarcely a great post under the whole government whose incumbent is not virtually, often actually, at war with the Porte. Between these two opposite Powers, both despotic, it is dangerous to take sides, and yet sides must be taken: in all the empire there is no property, no security. The well known and undisguised sale of all offices, is, of itself, a sufficient index of the state of society. In the whole world no such oppression is felt as that which has crushed down the wretched Greeks. In India, to be sure, it is bad enough in principle, but in the actual feeling of the oppression, it is not to be compared. There the oppressed natives are themselves as barbarous as their oppressors, but here have been seven millions of civilized, enlightened, Christian men, trampled into the very earth, century after century, by a barbarous, pillaging, relentless soldiery.

Sir, the case is unique; there has existed nothing like it, before or since. The world has no such misery to show. Surely, there is no case in which we could point to the civilized and Christian world with such an emphasis of appeal. What, during all this time, has been the conduct of the neighboring nations—nations professedly Christian? It has been a disgrace to Europe. As early as the Congress at Laybach, in 1821, the papers of that council spoke of the rising of this oppressed people as culpable, as criminal. And this charge comes from the Emperor of Russia. Certainly he did not always think it quite so criminal in Greece to resist the Porte. On the contrary, is it not known to all the world that Russia advanced a claim of some kind against the Porte to the allegiance of Greece? Did not Ivan III. discard the banner of St. George, and take the double-headed eagle in its stead? Did not Peter the Great secure for them the passage of the Dardanelles? Did he not adopt the far-famed banner of Constantine—"in hoc signo vinces?" Did he not stamp upon his coin "PETRUS

I. RUSSO-GRÆCOR. IMPERATOR ?" From 1769 to 1774, did not Russia engage in successive campaigns against the Porte, and did she not fill Greece with her armies? Were not the Turks compelled to admit, by treaty, the independence of the Czar of the Crimea? And did not the Empress Catharine, when she conquered the Crimea, inscribe over the gate of Cherson, "THE ROAD TO BYZANTIUM?" Strange, indeed, after all this, that a Greek insurrection against the Turks should excite the indignation of the Emperor of Russia! Yet, what says the Congress of Verona, held no longer ago than last year? It denounces "the rash and culpable conduct of the Greeks, who have thrown a firebrand into the midst of the Ottoman empire." If they did, that was done long before they did it, and they were by this very Power encouraged to do it. Might it not have been expected that at that Congress some relenting of compassion would have been felt for these suffering Greeks? Nobody doubts the power of that Congress to aid them—one word would have delivered the whole nation. If, as that alliance professed, they took Christianity for their guide, what must be said of their abandoning seven millions of Christian people to be trampled upon by barbarians? Nay, at their being accused, because they turned upon their oppressors, of "throwing a firebrand into the midst of the Ottoman empire?" But farther, sir: In 1821, Baron Stroganoff, the Russian Minister at Constantinople, says, in a public document, that the most unheard-of enormities were perpetrated against Greeks who had no share whatever in the rebellion; and that the conduct of the Porte toward these people was sufficient to furnish good grounds for all Europe to unite on the subject. This was in 1821. This was followed by that indescribable enormity, that appalling monument of barbarian cruelty, the destruction of Scio—a scene I will not attempt to describe—from which human nature shrinks shuddering away—a scene, thank God, without a parallel in all the history of fallen man; and that was quickly followed by the massacres in Cyprus. All these things were perfectly known when the Congress of Verona accused the Greeks, for their insurrection, of "throwing a firebrand into the midst of the Ottoman empire!"

Now, then, I repeat, that if such are the results of the system of modern European Sovereigns, it is a system which demands examination. That this was a fruit of that system is undeniable. This was an interference against the Greeks, in favor of the Turks; and it was far greater than any thing I propose for the Greeks against the Turks. Yes, sir, with that instrument in their hand, Christian Sovereigns, there professing to take the Christian religion for their guide, have advanced to check a Christian nation in resisting the bloodiest cruelty of a horde of Mahometan Tartars.

Such has been the conduct pursued towards this people. I now ask the indulgence of the House, while I state a very short account of their late revolution.

The situation of Greece had excited the sympathies of Western Europe for thirty years past. Societies had been formed in Germany to improve the condition of the suffering people—branches of those societies were extended into Greece—many of their youth were carefully instructed in literature—many disbanded officers from the European armies entered into the Grecian service, and a considerable amelioration of their condition with respect to the advantages of education began to be effected. In 1821, the revolt took place in Moldavia and Wallachia, a revolt which was supposed to have been fomented by Russia. The Emperor brought down a large force upon the Pruth—a Russian vessel, being suspected of carrying supplies to the insurgents, was stopped as she passed the Bosphorus—and a rupture seemed immediately impending. Russia demanded that the Turkish forces should be withdrawn from those two northern provinces. At the same time that Ypsilanti was in rebellion in the North, the Porte had to carry on a desperate struggle with Ali Pacha in the West. And another war with Persia threatened in the East. Then it was that the Greek revolution burst forth. They soon possessed themselves of the open country of the Morea, and forced the Turks to fly for refuge into the cities. Of these, Tripolitza soon fell into their hands; and then they began to contemplate a government. They assembled a Congress, (the name is hallowed on this side of the Atlantic—it is a name dear to freedom,) and began to organize a system of laws. The Annual Register asks what right they had to denominate this a Congress? The answer is easy; the same right, Mr. Chairman, that we had, and no more. With our Constitution before them, they proceeded to copy its features as closely as their circumstances would permit. In that year, the war with Ali Pacha was ended by treachery, and the breach of the Turkish promise. The affair was settled, too, with Russia, and it now was discovered that all that she had insisted on was, that the Turkish forces should be withdrawn from Moldavia and Wallachia; the very measure which, of all others, had the most immediate tendency to overwhelm the Greek cause. Thus was the whole force of the Ottoman Empire let loose at once upon devoted Greece; and what, sir, was the result? Where the Ottoman made his greatest effort, he was met and foiled, and in six weeks, had to turn back his steps from the Morea, whither his foot has never since trodden to this day. It was in this year that the island of Scio, the most favored island in the Archipelago, an island the peculiar property of the Sultana, the lightest taxed, the most wealthy, the most refined, the most literary spot in all Greece; where were libraries, such as few States in this Union possess, and where ease and elegance had their favorite seat, became the theatre of a massacre such as is not to be paralleled in the history of the world. The inhabitants of Samos, jealous at the comparative prosperity of this island, landed, drove the Turks into the town, and were joined by some of the country people of Scio. The Turkish fleet, lately reinforced from Egypt, happened to be in the neighborhood—they landed, and burnt the city, and when the slaughter and burning was over, out of 140,000 inhabitants, nine hundred only were left alive. 40,000 women and children, inhabitants of the island, were sold at Smyrna into perpetual slavery. A month after—when the ashes of the burnt city were cold—did they hang thirty-five Greeks at the yard-arm, and slay eighty-five more who had been given as hostages from the town. Ten more hostages were hanged in Constantinople—700, who voluntarily surrendered, were all shot down; 800 others, about whom they got into dispute, were murdered in the same manner. And, sir, on the wharves of Boston did I see the utensils from the hearths of that polished, refined, and literary people, selling for old copper. Numbers of children, all whose relatives had been slaughtered, were picked up by the merchants in the Mediterranean, and some of them are now among us. Sir, these things were as well known at the Congress of Laybach as they are on this floor—but the tale did not move a muscle of those Allied Sovereigns, or alter, one hair's breadth, the course of their unfeeling policy. During the present year, the Persian war being over, Ali dead, and the Russians gone, the whole weight of the Turkish force has again and again been precipitated on the struggling Greeks—again and again it has been triumphantly resisted—and it is only this morning, sir, that I received the news of a fresh victory.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

They now hold all the Morea, Candia, and the islands, with the exception of one or two fortresses still in the possession of the Turks—they have even ventured to act on the offensive. Their marine is strengthened—their blockades have been enforced—time, experience, and the vicissitudes of their momentous struggle, have consolidated their force, and they have now the advantage and blessing of a regular representative government. Sir, have they not done much? It would be great injustice to compare their achievements with our own—because we began our struggle already possessed of government and of comparative civil freedom—we had for centuries been accustomed to govern ourselves;—but these poor Greeks had scarce any of the means of knowledge—they were without public concert—without experience, without patronage, surrounded by nations that cast every discouragement in their way; yet they have now had a free government for two years, and their soil is unprofaned by the foot of an invader. They have carried on the struggle for three successive campaigns, against hordes of Tartar troops and auxiliary forces from the Barbary States—they have been conjured, by their neighbors, to submit; but they still manfully hold out. Two hundred thousand have heroically laid down their lives—and what say the rest? “Some of our nation are yet alive, and we will all perish, before we will yield up again our country to the oppressor.”

It may now be asked, will this resolution do them any good? Yes, it will do them much good. It will give them courage and spirit, which is better than money. It will assure them of the public sympathy, and will inspire them with fresh constancy. It will teach them that they are not forgotten by the civilized world, and to hope one day to occupy, in that world, an honorable station.

A farther question remains. Is this measure pacific? It has no other character. It simply proposes to make a pecuniary provision for a mission, when the President shall deem such mission expedient. It is a mere reciprocation to the sentiments of his Message; it imposes upon him no new duty; it gives him no new power; it does not hasten or urge him forward; it simply provides, in an open and avowed manner, the means of doing what would else be done out of the contingent fund. It leaves him at the most perfect liberty, and it reposes the whole matter in his sole discretion. He might do it without this resolution, as he did in the case of South America, but it merely answers the query whether on so great and interesting a question as the condition of the Greeks, this House holds no opinion which is worth expressing? But, suppose a commissioner is sent, the measure is pacific still. Where is the breach of neutrality? where a just cause of offence? And besides, Mr. Chairman, is all the danger in this matter on one side? may we not inquire, whose fleets cover the Archipelago? may we not ask what would be the result to our trade should Smyrna be blockaded? A commissioner could at least procure for us what we do not now possess—that is, authentic information of the true state of things. The document on your table exhibits a meagre appearance on this point—what does it contain? Letters of Mr. Luriettis and paragraphs from a French paper. My personal opinion is, that an agent ought immediately to be sent; but the resolution I have offered by no means goes so far.

Do gentlemen fear the result of this resolution in embroiling us with the Porte? Why, sir, how much is it ahead of the whole nation, or rather let me ask how much is the nation ahead of it? Is not this whole people already in a state of open and avowed excitement on this subject? Does not the land ring from side to side with one common sentiment of sympathy for Greece, and indignation towards her oppressors? Nay more sir, are we not giving money to this cause? More still, sir, is not the Secretary of State in open correspondence with the President of the Greek Committee in London? The nation has gone as far as it can go, short of an official act of hostility. This resolution adds nothing beyond what is already done; nor can any of the European Governments take offence at such a measure. But, if they would, shall we be withheld from an honest expression of liberal feelings in the cause of freedom for fear of giving umbrage to some member of the Holy Alliance? We are not, surely, yet prepared to purchase their smiles by a sacrifice of every manly principle. Dare any Christian Prince even ask us not to sympathize with a Christian nation struggling against Tartar tyranny? We do not interfere—we break no engagements—we violate no treaties—with the Porte we have none.

Mr. Chairman, there are some things which, to be well done, must be promptly done. If we even

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

JANUARY, 1824.

determine to do the thing that is now proposed, we may do it too late. Sir, I am not one of those who are for withholding aid when it is most urgently needed, and when the stress is past, and the aid no longer necessary, overwhelming the sufferer with caresses. I will not stand by and see my fellow man drowning without stretching out a hand to help him, till he has by his own efforts and presence of mind reached the shore in safety, and then encumber him with aid. With suffering Greece, now is the crisis of her fate—her great, it may be, her last struggle. Sir, while we sit here deliberating, her destiny may be decided. The Greeks, contending with ruthless oppressors, turn their eyes to us, and invoke us by their ancestors, by their slaughtered wives and children, by their own blood, poured out like water, by the hecatombs of dead they have heaped up as it were to heaven, they invoke, they implore of us some cheering sound, some look of sympathy, some token of compassionate regard. They look to us as the great Republic of the earth—and they ask us by our common faith, whether we can forget that they are struggling, as we once struggled, for what we now so happily enjoy? I cannot say, sir, that they will succeed: that rests with Heaven. But for myself, sir, if I should to-morrow hear that they have failed—that their last phalanx had sunk beneath the Turkish scimeter, that the flames of their last city had sunk in its ashes, and that naught remained but the wide melancholy waste where Greece once was, I should still reflect, with the most heartfelt satisfaction, that I have asked you, in the name of seven millions of freemen, that you would give them at least the cheering of one friendly voice.

When Mr. WEBSTER had concluded—

The Committee rose, and reported progress, and, having had leave to sit again, the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 20.

Mr. COCKE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject had been referred, reported a bill providing for the appointment of two Indian agents, in addition to those already provided for by law, and fixing their compensations; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to whom the subject was referred, on the 15th instant, reported a bill to revive and continue in force the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth sections of the act, entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," passed the 3d of March, 1815; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of Arthur H. Henley, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John Michael, deceased; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was recommitted the bill for the relief of John Jenkins, made a report recommending that the said bill be postponed indefinitely; which report was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of the representatives of John Donnelson, Stephen Heard, and others; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill to authorize the State of Indiana to open a canal through the public lands, to connect the rivers Wabash and the Miami of Lake Erie.

Mr. CROWNINSHIELD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, who were instructed, on the 15th of December ultimo, to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the construction of ten additional sloops of war, made a report thereon, accompanied by a bill authorizing the building of that number of sloops of war; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. CROWNINSHIELD, from the same committee, to which was referred the amendment proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act further extending the term of half-pay pensions to the widows and children of officers, seamen, and marines, who died in the public service;" reported the agreement of that committee to the said amendment. The amendment was then concurred in by the House.

Mr. WHIPPLE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill providing for a grant of land for the seat of government in the Territory of Florida, and for other purposes; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Ordered, That leave be given to withdraw the petitions of Daniel W. Cox, for a confirmation of the claim of Marquis de Maison Rouge to an extensive tract of land in the State of Louisiana, with the documents accompanying the same.

The resolution submitted by Mr. TOMLINSON, on the 16th, respecting navy hospitals, was taken up, and agreed to by the House.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to purchase the seven per cent. stock of the United States in the year 1824," with an amendment. The Senate have also passed bills of the following titles, viz: "An act granting to the State of Alabama the right of pre-emption to certain quarter-sections of land;" and "An act explanatory of an act, entitled 'An act for the relief of the officers, volunteers, and other persons, engaged in the late campaign against the Seminole Indians, passed the 4th of May, 1822,'" in which amendment, and two bills last mentioned, the Senate ask the concurrence of this House.

The two last mentioned bills were, respectively,

JANUARY, 1824.

Marquis Lafayette.

H. OF R.

read twice, and referred, the first to the Committee on the Public Lands; the second, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to purchase the seven per cent. stock of the United States, in the year 1824," was read, and concurred in by the House.

MARQUIS DE LAFAYETTE.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the committee to whom the subject was referred, reported an amendment to the resolution respecting the Marquis Lafayette, striking out the preamble and all that follows the word "resolved," and substituting the following:

"That the Marquis De Lafayette having expressed his intention to visit this country, the President be requested to communicate to him the assurances of grateful and affectionate attachment still cherished towards him by the Government and people of the United States.

And be it further resolved, That, as a mark of national respect, the President cause to be held in readiness a ship-of-the-line, and invite the Marquis to take passage therein, whenever his disposition to visit this country be signified."

Mr. LIVINGSTON, of Louisiana, rose to express the hope, he might, without impropriety, say the conviction, that the resolution would be adopted unanimously by the House. Not only were the merits of the illustrious man, to whom it had reference, universally known in these States, but they had been uniformly, repeatedly, and publicly acknowledged. The history of his connexions with the United States was personally known to some of the members in this House—it was known to all who had read the story of our Revolution. It was a connexion which did honor to both—to the country that received, and to the individual who rendered them. At a very early age, when pleasure presents itself in the most captivating and seductive form, possessed of a fortune, which enabled him to comply with her every solicitation, and of a rank which warranted his aspiring to the loftiest heights of ambition in his own country, he possessed, with all these, sufficient energy of character to shake off every inducement of pleasure, of wealth, and of ambition, and to join a country, in which, although there was much to gratify an honest ambition, there was nothing to be found of all that which young men of his rank and standing, in Europe, were wont most to desire. He came to our shores; he offered his services to our Government; they were accepted, and he immediately received an honorable rank and a conspicuous station. One of my earliest recollections is connected with the period of his arrival, and one of the most pleasing remembrances of my boyhood, is the being permitted, in company with one who is now a member of this House, to visit him at his headquarters, in occasional excursions from the place where we were receiving our education. I afterwards saw him, at the head of two thousand men, who had been clothed, armed and decorated at his own expense, conciliating, by his republican manners, by the steadiness of his discipline and the condescension of his behaviour, the devoted affection of the soldiery, reconciling, by the winning kindness of his address, the aged man to submit himself to the command of a youth—the hardy native of the soil to receive and submit to the command of a foreigner. At the same time, by his strict obedience to authority, he won the esteem of his superiors in command. But the most touching part of this lovely spectacle, was the deference, the veneration, the devoted attachment which ever marked his deportment towards the Father of our Country. But it was not merely in the pomp and parade of a military rank, however honorable, that Lafayette was worthy of our contemplation; he sought effective service, he sealed his attachment to our cause with his blood, at Brandywine, and in that great catastrophe which placed in our hands a British commander and all his army at Yorktown, he occupied a striking position in the busy and interesting scene. The judgment of Washington having given him command of the American forces in the storming of a redoubt, while the French, in another column, were ordered simultaneously to attack another, Lafayette obtained the palm, having carried his redoubt some minutes in advance of the French column. But his services to the cause of these States were not merely of a military character; he served us equally in a political as in a commercial point of view. He made frequent visits to France, and he used them for the purpose of strengthening our connexions with that country, and bringing its wealth by commercial operations in aid of our exhausted resources. He has a farther recommendation to our affection and respect, as the friend of temperate and regulated liberty in his own country. From the first moment of the French revolution he was the decided advocate of its general principle, and he was the advocate of that form of civil liberty, which he conceived best adapted to the circumstances and genius of France, a limited monarchy accompanied with a deliberative body. He once thought that he had attained this object, but the excesses which followed prostrated all his fond hopes, and he himself falling into the clutches of despotic power, was thrown into the dungeons of Olmutz. A better state of things afterwards succeeded, and he returned to his country, where he had the immortal honor of putting on record his vote (almost a solitary one) against the enormous grants of power to the late ruler of France. He is still the intrepid friend of her chartered rights. As such, he has claims on the respect of the friends of freedom in all countries. But, here, he has so many claims to that regard, that it would be an imputation on the American character to suppose, that the measure now proposed will not meet with the hearty concurrence of every member of this House.

If we resort to the views and feelings of the illustrious men who preceded us in this assembly, we find only one sentiment, evinced through a succession of different acts, in relation to this friend of the American cause. [Here Mr. L. read

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

a succession of extracts from the Journals of Congress, expressing welcome, recording thanks, &c.] Here said Mr. L., ends the affectionate, the touching intercourse between America and this her voluntary son. But, when he left us, and we heard of his subsequent imprisonment, a further resolution was passed, requesting the President to take all proper and practicable steps for his relief. By the heroic efforts of an American gentleman, who was his companion, he obtained his freedom; and he then sent his son for refuge to this country. I had myself, said Mr. L., the honor on that occasion of introducing a resolution, which authorized the President to ascertain the fact, and if it were so, to do whatever might, in his judgment, be proper to render the situation of the young Lafayette agreeable, and evince the respect and gratitude we felt for the distinguished services of his father.

At present General Lafayette is the only surviving General officer of the Revolutionary war; he has expressed a desire once more to visit the country he so eminently contributed to render free and happy—once more to take into his arms the companions of his early toils and dangers, and to witness for himself our progress in improvement and the practical exhibition of the blessings of a free and enlightened Government. Surely, sir, it is fit, it is becoming, if such be his wish, that he should be wafted to our shores beneath that flag which he once planted on the breastworks of our enemy. Let not his coming be in secret—let us join to do him honor—let the mode of his conveyance to our shores correspond with that enthusiasm of the public sentiment which will greet him on his landing—if gratitude has not grown cold, if feeling is not dead among us, Lafayette will be hailed by plaudits from every part of this land, as hearty as they are richly merited.

Mr. MITCHELL stated, that since he had first brought the subject before the House, letters had been received from the Marquis, extracts from which he wished might now be read; and he handed to the Clerk of the House two letters, one of them to Mr. Willet, of New York, expressive of the pleasure he should enjoy from a visit to the United States.

Mr. A. STEVENSON, of Virginia, then rose and said, that he felt it his duty to communicate to the House some recent intelligence that he had received, as to the Marquis De Lafayette's wish to return to America. He had then in his possession a letter (of the 25th of November last) written by this pure and noble patriot, and addressed to a distinguished citizen of this country, in which the following sentiments were contained: "Every motive and feeling urge me to seek those friends of my youth with whom I may still enjoy the most pleasing recollections; to revisit the happy shores of an adopted country, which has so well fulfilled our early and most sanguine expectations, and where I find, in the third and fourth generations, testimonies of benevolence that fill my heart with the most affectionate and devoted gratitude. I more and more look forward to the day when, with a safe conscience, it shall be

'my happy lot to find myself on American ground.'

Mr. WARFIELD said, the resolutions now under consideration, which were originally introduced by his friend and colleague, had his entire and most cordial approbation. It is not, said Mr. W., my purpose on this occasion to recount the signal services rendered to this country, when in her utmost need, by the great, the good, the illustrious Lafayette: they have been expatiated on by the gentleman from Louisiana, (Mr. LIVINGSTON;) they are in the distinct recollection of every member of this House; they are indelibly imprinted on every American heart; they are recorded; they adorn the faithful page of history, and will be read and admired by ages yet to come. My only object, said Mr. W., in rising, is to express the hope that those resolutions will receive the unanimous approbation of this body, composed of the immediate Representatives of the people of the United States of America.

The question being put on the adoption of the amendment, it passed unanimously in the affirmative: and the resolution as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THE GREEK CAUSE.

On motion of Mr. WEBSTER, the House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. TAYLOR in the chair.

Mr. CLAY offered the following, which he desired to lay on the table for consideration:

"Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the people of these States would not see, without serious inquietude, any forcible interposition by the Allied Powers of Europe in behalf of Spain, to reduce to their former subjection those parts of the continent of America which have proclaimed and established for themselves, respectively, independent Governments, and which have been solemnly recognised by the United States."

The Committee of the Whole having resumed the consideration of the resolution recommending an appropriation to defray the expense of a mission to Greece.

Mr. POINSETT, of South Carolina, then rose, and addressed the House as follows:

To view this question calmly and dispassionately as a statesman ought to do, requires us to exercise the utmost control over our feelings.

It is impossible to contemplate the contest between the Greeks and the Turks, so eloquently described by the gentleman from Massachusetts, without feeling the strongest indignation at the barbarous atrocities committed by the infidel oppressor, and the deepest interest in the cause of a brave people struggling alone, against fearful odds, to shake off the yoke of despotism.

Our sympathies are always with the oppressed—our feelings are always engaged in the cause of liberty. In favor of Greece, they are still more strongly excited by recollections, which the scholar cherishes with delight, and which are associated in our minds with every pure and exalted sentiment.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

The descendants of that illustrious people, to whom we owe our arts, our sciences, and, except our religion, every thing which gives a charm to life, must command our warmest interest: but the Greeks have other claims to our sympathies. They are not only heirs of the immortal fame of their ancestors—they are the rivals of their virtues. In their heroic struggle for freedom, they have exhibited a persevering courage, a spirit of enterprise, and a contempt of danger and of suffering worthy the best days of ancient Greece. The enthusiasm and liberality manifested in their cause, by our fellow-citizens throughout the Union, are, in the highest degree, honorable to their feelings. As men, we must applaud their generosity, and may imitate their example. But the duty of a statesman is a stern duty. As Representatives of the people, we have no right to indulge our sympathies, however noble, or to give way to our feelings, however generous. We are to regard only the policy of a measure submitted to our consideration. Our first, and most important duty, is to maintain peace, whenever that can be done consistently with the honor and safety of the nation; and we ought to be slow to adopt any measure which might involve us in a war, except where those great interests are concerned. The gentleman disclaims any such intention. He does not believe that we run the slightest risk, by adopting the resolution on your table. He considers it as a pacific measure, and relies entirely upon the discretion of the President, to accept or reject our recommendation, as the interests of the country may require. The object of passing such a resolution, can only be to give an impulse to the Executive, and to induce him, by an expression of the opinion of this House, to send a commission to Greece. I have as great a reliance upon the discretion of the Executive as the gentleman from Massachusetts. I believe that he would resist the suggestion of this House in favor of any measure, if he thought the public interest required him to do so. But, unless we wish and expect him to act upon our recommendation, we ought not to throw upon him, alone, the responsibility of resisting the strong public feeling, which has been excited on this subject. The question for us to consider appears to me to be, whether, if the power rested with us, we would exercise it to this extent. I think we could not do so, without incurring some risk of involving the country in a war foreign to its interests. Let us suppose that these commissioners were to fall into the hands of the Turks; an event by no means impossible, in the present state of Greece—what would be their fate? The Porte has not been remarkable for its strict observance of the laws of nations, in its intercourse with the Powers of Europe; and it is not probable, that such a Court would be very scrupulous in its conduct towards a nation whose flag it has never acknowledged. Or, let us imagine, what is much more probable, that on the rumor of our having taken any measure in favor of Greece, the barbarous and infuriated Janissaries at Smyrna were to assassinate our Consul and fellow-citizens residing there; might not a war grow out of such acts? The gentleman from Massachusetts said, yesterday, that we had already taken steps, which would offend the Ottoman Porte as much as the one he proposed. Money has been freely and publicly contributed in aid of the Greeks. What we have done in that respect is common to all Christian Europe. Large sums have been contributed for that purpose in England, in Germany, and even in Russia. He said, too, that the Executive, in the Secretary's letter, to the agent of the Greek Government, and subsequently in his Message to Congress, has used expressions calculated to irritate that Court as much as if we were to send a commission to Greece. These expressions of ardent wishes for the success of the Greeks are honorable to the Executive, and will be echoed back by the nation. They may be so by this House with safety, and that expression of our interest in their welfare and success would have all the cheering influence the gentleman anticipates from the measure he proposes.

It appears to me, that in the consideration of this question we have been misled by comparing this revolution with that of Spanish America. And I have heard it argued that, as we sent commissioners to Buenos Ayres without rousing the jealousy of any nation, and recognised the independence of those Governments without exciting the hostility of Spain, we may do the same in relation to Greece, without offending any nation in Europe.

Independently of the different attitude it becomes us to assume towards America, there is no similarity in the two cases. When we adopted the first measure, Buenos Ayres had been independent, de facto, for more than eight years, and Spain had not, during the whole of that period, made the slightest effort to recover possession of that country. When we recognised the independence of the American Governments south of us, they were all free, from the Sabine to the La Plata. The tide could not be rolled back; but, in whatever light Spain may have regarded our conduct on those occasions, the situation of the internal concerns of that country prevented any manifestation of its resentment. No, sir; it is to Europe that we must look for a case parallel to that of Greece. Let us suppose that the Italian States had made an attempt to shake off the iron yoke of Austria, would there be any doubt as to the course of policy this country ought to pursue in that case? Or, if Poland were again to make a desperate effort to recover its liberties, and to re-establish its political existence, that gallant nation would have a claim to our sympathies. Yet, I apprehend we should hesitate before we took any step which might offend the Emperor of Russia. Is there a country on earth in whose fate we feel a deeper interest than in that of Ireland? A braver or more generous nation does not exist. Her exiled patriots have taken refuge here, and are among our most useful and distinguished citizens. They are identified with us, and the land which gave them birth must always inspire us with the warmest interest. But, if the Irish were to make a general effort to separate themselves from England, we should pause before we adopted a measure which might be interpreted by Great Britain as an interference with her domestic policy. And yet the Turks are more regardless of the laws of nations, more violent in character, and more reckless of consequences, than any Power in Europe. It has been said that when we exercise an undoubted right, we ought not to regard consequences. This may be magnanimous language to hold, but would such conduct be prudent in this case? We may despise the power of Turkey, and Egypt, and Barbary, united, but can we be certain that, in the event of a war, we should have only to contend with them? The conduct of Great Britain and of the allies, in relation to the contest, which has been so fully dwelt upon, and so ably exposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, ought to convince us that they would regard any interference on our part with great jealousy. They have repeatedly declared that they would discourage any change in the present state of possession of the great European Powers, among which Turkey holds a station which might strengthen one or lessen the security of another; and that they would discountenance any act calculated to call forth a new order of things, the issue of which it would be impossible to predict. The reasons for these declarations are obvious. Every Power in Europe balances between its terror of revolutionary principles, and its dread of the augmenting power of Russia. The independence of Greece alarms their fears in both these respects. The first revolutionary movement in that country was supported by, if it did not emanate from, an association in Germany. The succors afforded by the Philhellenic societies in Germany, Switzerland, and Italy, have contributed largely to the success of the patriots. The revolution of Greece broke out simultaneously with that of Piedmont; and the agents of the Greek Government have most imprudently boasted of the effect which the liberties of Greece would be likely to produce on the neighboring States. And there is no doubt that the establishment of free institutions in Greece would have a powerful influence on the minds of the enthusiastic Italians and Germans.

H. of R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

For these reasons, among others even more selfish, Austria has been hostile to this revolution from its commencement. France is opposed to any change in the present state of possession of the great European Powers, which might grow out of the dismemberment of Turkey. Such an event could not augment her strength, and might lessen her security. For obvious reasons, that Power, in common with all others on the continent of Europe, is averse to the establishment of any new Republic. Great Britain, throughout this contest, has evinced a desire to preserve the integrity of the Turkish empire. The Ionian islands, which are under her dominion, have not only been prohibited from taking a part in the war, and the inhabitants disarmed, but the ports of those islands have been made places of deposit for grain and other supplies for the Turkish fleets. The only act of Great Britain which can be regarded as at all favorable to the Greeks, is the acknowledgment of their blockades; an act of justice which could not be refused to the relative position of the two parties. The prevailing opinion appears to be, that, united by the bond of one common religion, Greece, as the ally, or as the dependant of Russia, would, by means of her formidable marine, render irresistible that already colossal Power. Great Britain appears to have regarded the dismemberment and partition of Turkey, as a necessary consequence of a rupture between that Power and Russia. To prevent this, all her influence has been exerted, and no reasonable doubt exists, that, if negotiation had failed to effect an accommodation between them, Great Britain would have appeared in arms as the ally of the Porte.

The course of policy pursued by Russia, on this occasion, has been so fully developed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that it is unnecessary for me to dwell upon it. The sacred obligations of that Power to protect the Greeks, and even its long conceived projects of aggrandizement, appear to have yielded to the dread of encouraging revolution. In whatever light we may regard a policy which sacrifices to its selfish views the rights of humanity and justice, and the claims of a suffering Christian people, in matters relating exclusively to Europe, we ought not to interfere. We cannot do so without departing from those principles of sound policy which have hitherto guided our councils, and directed our conduct. Any interference on our part, in favor of a cause which not even remotely affects our interests, could only be regarded in the light of a crusade, and might injure the Greeks by alarming the fears of the Allied Powers. They already dread the moral influence of our republican institutions; let us not make it their interest, and give them a pretext, to attack us, by going forth to disturb the integrity of their possessions, or the security of their monarchical governments in Europe. The distinction drawn by the President in his last Message, marks the true and the only safe course of policy for this country to pursue. Mr. P. here quoted the Message:

"A strong hope has been entertained, founded on the heroic struggle of the Greeks, that they would succeed in their contest, and resume their equal station among the nations of the earth. It is believed that the whole civilized world takes a deep interest in their welfare. Although no power has declared in their favor, yet none, according to our information, has taken part against them. Their cause and their name have protected them from dangers, which might, ere this, have overwhelmed any other people. The ordinary calculations of interest and of acquisition, with a view to aggrandizement, which mingle so much in the transactions of nations, seem to have had no effect in regard to them. From the facts which have come to our knowledge, there is good cause to believe that their enemy has lost forever all dominion over them; that Greece will become again an independent nation. That she may obtain that rank, is the object of our most ardent wishes."

Mr. P. then referred also to the following letter

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

of the Secretary of State, recently communicated to Congress:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, Aug. 18, 1823.

SIR: I have the honor of enclosing, herewith, an answer to the letter from Mr. Luriottis, the agent of the Greeks, addressed to me, and a copy of which was transmitted with your despatch, No. 295.

If, on the receipt of this letter, Mr. Luriottis should still be in London, it will be desirable that you should deliver it to him in person, accompanied with such remarks and explanations as may satisfy him, and those whom he represents, that, in declining the proposal of giving active aid to the cause of Grecian emancipation, the Executive Government of the United States has been governed, not by its inclinations, or a sentiment of indifference to the cause, but by its Constitutional duties, clear and unequivocal.

The United States could give assistance to the Greeks only by the application of some portion of their public force, or of their public revenue, in their favor, and it would constitute them in a state of war with the Ottoman Porte, and perhaps with all the Barbary Powers. To make this disposal, either of force or of treasure, you are aware, is, by our Constitution, not within the competency of the Executive. It could be determined only by an act of Congress, which would assuredly not be adopted, should it even be recommended by the Executive.

The policy of the United States, with reference to foreign nations, has always been founded upon the moral principle of natural law—peace with all mankind. From whatever cause war between other nations, whether foreign or domestic, has arisen, the unvarying law of the United States has been, peace with both belligerents. From the first war of the French Revolution, to the recent invasion of Spain, there has been a succession of wars, national and civil, in almost every one of which one of the parties was contending for liberty, or independence. In the first Revolutionary war, a strong impulse of feeling urged the people of the United States to side with the party which, at its commencement, was contending, apparently, at least, for both. Had the policy of the United States not been essentially pacific, a stronger case to claim their interference could scarcely have been presented. They nevertheless declared themselves neutral, and the principle, then deliberately settled, has been invariably adhered to ever since.

With regard to the recognition of sovereign States, and the establishment with them of a diplomatic intercourse, the experience of the last thirty years has served also to ascertain the limits proper for the application of principles, in which every nation must exercise some latitude of discretion. Precluded, by their neutral position, from interfering in the question of right, the United States have recognised the fact of foreign sovereignty, only when it was undisputed, or disputed without any rational prospect of success. In this manner, the successive changes of government in many of the European States, and the revolutionary Governments of South America, have been acknowledged. The condition of the Greeks is not yet such as will admit of the recognition upon these principles.

Yet, as we cherish the most friendly feelings towards them, and are sincerely disposed to render them any service, which may be compatible with our neutrality, it will give us pleasure to learn, from time to time, the actual state of their cause, political and military.

Should Mr. Luriottis be enabled and disposed to furnish this information, it may always be communicated through you, and will be received with satisfaction here. The public accounts from that quarter have been, of late, very scanty, and we shall be glad to obtain any authentic particulars which may come to your knowledge, from this, or through any other channel.

I am, with great respect, sir, your very humble and obedient servant,

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS."

The letter of the Secretary of State to the Agent of the Greek Government, corroborates this view of our policy, and, if taken together, clearly shows the views of the Executive in relation to our foreign policy.

In this hemisphere we have already taken the station which it becomes us to hold. We have been the first to recognise the free States of North and South America, and the honor and safety of this country require us to defend them from the attacks of the confederated monarchs of Europe. We are called upon, by every consideration, to resist them, should they attempt to extend their plans of conquest and legitimacy to America; for, if they succeed in that unhallowed enterprise, the independence of nations will be but a name.

That there are indications of such intentions, no one will deny. The King of Spain has proclaimed his determination to employ force to recover his American dominions. Even he is not weak enough to undertake an enterprise of such magnitude with the resources of Spain alone. The Envoy of the Emperor of Russia, sent to congratulate Ferdinand on his restoration to the fulness of his legitimate authority, or, in other words, to the right of tyrannizing over his subjects without control, expresses the wishes of his august master that the benefits now enjoyed by his subjects in Europe may be extended to his dominions in America. In reply to our call for information upon that subject, the President indirectly tells us, that some combined movement against America is to be apprehended. Indeed, we may see the storm gathering in all the signs of the times.

And at this portentous crisis, when we may be compelled to take up arms to defend our rights and liberties on this side of the Atlantic, shall we extend our operations to the remotest corner of Europe? When, to preserve our political existence, we ought to concentrate our strength, shall we diffuse and weaken it by engaging in a distant war? Shall we, in short, so give way to feelings of mere charity and generosity, as to lose sight of the higher obligations of prudence and self-defence?

The gentleman from Massachusetts has painted in true colors the fearful combination of Sovereigns against the liberties of mankind. But, if there is danger, and I agree with him that it is imminent and appalling, it is here that we ought to meet it. A very slight examination of our resources, of the nature and character of our Government and institutions, will convince us, that, in a distant war, foreign to our interests, this nation is weak as an infant. For purposes of defence, in a war that would unite all our resources, and rouse the energies of the people, we are strong as Hercules.

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

I repeat, that if there is danger to be apprehended from the avowed principles of the Holy Alliance, it is in America that we must resist them. Like the generous animal, which is the emblem of this country, let us not go forth to seek enemies. If they threaten us, let our warning be heard over the waves, in the voices of millions of freemen, resolved to maintain their liberties. If they approach our shores with hostile intent, we may arise in the collected strength of a great nation, and hurl destruction on the foes of freedom and of America.

I think, sir, that any resolutions we pass on this subject ought to be expressive of our policy and of the position we occupy in relation to Europe, and that which we are resolved to assume in relation to America; and, with that view, I propose the following resolution as a substitute for those offered by my friend from Massachusetts:

"Resolved, That this House view with deep interest, the heroic struggle of the Greeks to elevate themselves to the rank of a free and independent nation; and unite with the President in the sentiments he has expressed in their favor: in sympathy for their sufferings, in interest in their welfare, and in ardent wishes for their success."

Mr. RANDOLPH then rose and said, that this was perhaps one of the finest and the prettiest themes for declamation ever presented to a deliberative assembly. But it appeared to him in a light very different from any that had as yet been thrown upon it. He looked at the measure as one fraught with deep and deadly danger to the best interests and to the liberties of the American people; and so satisfied was he of this, that he had been constrained by that conviction to overcome the almost insuperable repugnance he felt to throwing himself upon the notice of the House, but he felt it his duty to raise his voice against both the propositions. He would not at this time go at length into the subject; his intention, in rising, was merely to move that the Committee rise, and that both of the resolutions might be printed. He wished to have some time to think of this business—to deliberate, before we took this leap in the dark into the Archipelago, or the Black Sea, or into the wide mouth of the La Plata. He might be permitted to add one or two other views. He knew, he said, that the post of honor was on the other side of the House, the post of toil and of difficulty on this side; if, indeed, anybody should be with him on this side. It was a difficult and an invidious task to stem the torrent of public sentiment when all the generous feelings of the human heart were appealed to. But, sir, said Mr. R., I was delegated to this House to guard the interests of the people of the United States, not to guard the rights of other people; and if it was doubted, even in the case of England, that land fertile above all others (not excepting Greece herself) in great men—if it was doubtful whether her interference in the politics of the Continent, though separated from it only by a narrow frith, were either for her honor or advantage; if the effect of that interference has been a monumental debt, that paralyzes the arm that certainly would have struck for Spain, can it be for us to seek in the very bottom of the Mediterranean for a quarrel with the Ottoman Porte? And this while we have an ocean rolling between? While we are in that sea without a single port in which to refit a ship? And while the Powers of Barbary lie in succession in our path? Shall we open this Pandora's box of political evils? It has been wisely and truly said, that it is possible the mere rumor of our interference may produce at Constantinople, or at Smyrna, that which will drive us at once into a war. We all know the connexion that subsists between the Barbary States and what we may denominate the Mother Power. Are we prepared for a war with these pirates? (not that we are not perfectly competent to such a war, but) does it suit our finances? Does it, sir, suit our magnificent project of roads and canals? Does it suit the temper of our people? Does it promote their interests? Will it add to their happiness? Sir, why did we remain supine, while Piedmont and Naples were crushed by Austria? Why did we stand aloof, while the Spanish peninsula was again reduced under legitimate government? If we did not interfere then, why now? Sir, I refer you to the memorable attempted interference of that greatest of statesmen, when he was in the zenith of his glory—when all his dazzling beams were unshorn. You know I mean Mr. Pitt; and I refer you, as a commentary of that attempted interference, to the speech of Mr. Fox—a speech fraught with the wisdom of a real statesman. [Here Mr. R. paused.]

When he resumed, he said: I perceive, sir, I have overcalculated my strength. I feel that I am not what I was. The effort of speaking is too much for me. The physical effort has suspended (as, when physical effort is violent, it always does) the intellectual power. What I wished to say was, that this quixotism in regard, either to Greece or to South America, or, I will add, to North America, (so much of it as lies within our own boundary, you know I mean Mexico,) that this quixotism is not what the sober and reflecting minds of our people require at our hands. Sir, we are in debt as individuals, and we are in debt as a nation; and never, since the days of Saul and David, of Cæsar and Catiline, could a more unpropitious period have been found for such an undertaking. The state of society is too much disturbed. There is always, in a debtor, a tendency either to torpor or to desperation; neither is friendly to such deliberations. But he would suspend what he had further to say on the subject. For himself, he saw as much danger, and more, in the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, as in that of the gentleman from Massachusetts. The war that may follow on the one, is a distant war—it lies on the other side of the ocean. The war that may be induced by the other, is a war at hand—it is on the same continent. He was equally opposed to the amendment, as well as to that which had since been offered to the original resolutions. Let us look a little further at all of them. Let us sleep upon them, before we pass resolutions, which I will not say are mere hooks to hang speeches on, and thereby commit the nation to a war, the issue of which it is not given to human sagacity to calculate.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

Mr. CUTHBERT, of Georgia, hoped that the motion to rise would prevail. The resolutions of the gentlemen on the Greek question covered, of themselves, very important and very delicate ground, but that which the honorable Speaker had since offered, added to the others, threw open for discussion the entire field of our foreign relations; and it was certainly proper that they should all be printed, and submitted to the most deliberate reflection.

Mr. CLAY then rose, and said he hoped the Committee would not rise. He trusted that gentlemen were now prepared to act on the resolutions, with respect to Greece; and as to that which he had himself submitted, and which the gentleman from Virginia had, he must say, gratuitously, and without just reason alluded to in his observations, it was by no means his wish that it should be now considered. He had distinctly stated, at the time he offered it, that he wished merely to lay it on the table, that it might be reflected on. At a proper time he should call it up for discussion. He would, however, incidentally remark, since it had been made the subject of animadversion, what he hoped incontrovertibly to prove, that that resolution, or something like it, must be adopted, or we might prepare to surrender our liberty. If the gentleman wished time to consider it, he should be accommodated; he might take days, or weeks, if he pleased, for more mature reflection; but if the liberty of the country was worth preserving we must rouse ourselves—we must take decided ground, or we are gone, at least in prospect. He trusted that the Committee would now proceed: he pledged himself to show to it that this tocsin of war, which had been sounded with so much effect from one side of the House to the other, was, when examined, a mere creature of the imagination. He hoped that the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts would be adopted. The measure for which it prepared, was in strict accordance with the policy of this country, and with the practice of all our Presidents, from the days of our immortal Washington to this hour. He was disposed to accord to the gentleman from Virginia every reasonable accommodation; but, asked Mr. C., has it come to this? Have we yet to make up our minds on the question of the Greek cause? Has there, then, been no pillow reflections on such a subject? Is it now that we are for the first time to "sleep upon it?" He trusted not. He did hope that, ere this time, every gentleman had made up his mind on such a question. The proposition is before us. It asks us to speak a cheering word to the Greeks. Gentlemen had only to say yes or no. That monosyllable was all that was asked of them. Let them say, distinctly, whether they would give so much encouragement as this to a nation of oppressed and struggling patriots in arms, or whether they would shut themselves up in a cold, shivering, contracted, but mistaken policy, which must in the end react upon ourselves. If, in a proposition so simple, so plain, so harmless, so free from all real danger as this, we were to shut our hearts from the influence of every generous, every manly feeling, let gentlemen say so at once. But he could tell the gentleman from Virginia, that he who follows the dictates of a heart warmed with humanity, and with the love of freedom, has a better guide than that cold, unfeeling, pencecalculating policy, which shrinks before it is menaced, and will never do a noble deed, for fear of some remote, possible consequence of conceivable danger.

Mr. RANDOLPH, in reply, explained the object of his motion, which was simply to have the several resolutions printed, that they might be better compared and considered. He begged the pardon of the gentleman; he did not mean to interfere with his resolution. He presumed (judging from the source from which the observations just uttered had proceeded) they were held to be perfectly in order; but the gentleman from Kentucky would pardon him, if the lofty promises that gentleman had given, with respect to what he would show and prove when his resolution came to be considered, left his mind somewhat in doubt as to their realization. He recollected that, in the case lately before the House, on the motion of his honorable colleague, promises equally large had been given by the gentleman from Kentucky, which, in his judgment, had failed of their fulfilment. He certainly had not spent so many sleepless nights in Washington without reflecting, and without making up his opinion, on the question of Greece, and of that of South America too; but he did not hold this to be any reason why the respective resolutions which had been offered on those subjects should not be printed. As to consulting, in legislation, the heart rather than the head, he had, indeed, learned, from much higher authority than that of the gentleman from Kentucky, that our passions may sometimes instruct our reason; but the question was, whether the present was one of those cases?

Mr. CLAY, in answer, said, that he had presented his resolution in no invidious spirit; he had simply read it, and asked to lay it on the table; and any thing that had since fallen from him respecting it, had been drawn forth entirely by the allusions to it in which the gentleman from Virginia had, unnecessarily he must think, indulged himself. As to the realization of promises, it was possible, in the instance referred to, he might, in the judgment of the gentleman, have failed; but that gentleman was one with whom, in any effort he might make, he should not calculate on much success. Complete, however, as his failure might have been, he would venture to assure that gentleman, that it not been greater than his would be in attempting to prove the danger he had attributed to the resolution now before the Committee. Observations of this kind, he said, were painful—they were extorted from him with reluctance. He hoped the discussion would be conducted calmly, fairly, and with good feelings. So far as his own resolution was concerned, he could assure that gentleman, and every other, that he should ever be ready to afford the amplest time for deliberation and discussion.

Mr. Foor, of Connecticut, hoped the Committee would rise. The amendment, he said, enlarged the ground of discussion, and the resolution of the Speaker widened the field still more. He hoped, for his own part, that the resolutions would all be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WEBSTER said, that he thought he was not without some reasons for complaint, that matter irrelevant to the subject of his resolution, and proving, in effect, a substitute, rather than an amendment, had been permitted to take the latter form; contrary, as he believed, to a rule of the House, which forbids it. He did not refer to the resolution of the Speaker, since that was distinct, and its discussion not now insisted on; but he referred, especially, to the latter of the two resolutions offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

[The Chairman here reminded Mr. W. that the latter of these resolutions had been withdrawn.*]

Mr. CUTHBERT, of Georgia, repeated the expression of his hope that the Committee would rise; and some of the reasons he had before given, he now insisted on more largely. He glanced at the possible consequences of approaching the shores of any of the European Powers, at the very time we are about to denounce their approach to ours; and the connexion between the measures referred to in the present resolution, and those of the allied monarchs in relation to South America. The policy of this country was isolated and peculiar; the nation was unique in its circumstances, and must be carefully guarded, &c. If the honorable Speaker apprehended no danger of any attempt on South America, he would not have penned the resolution on the table. He knew his lofty and proud spirit too well to suspect him of gasconading, where there was no danger to be feared. He did not suspect him of it—he knew him better. He, therefore, hoped for further time to deliberate.

The question was then taken on rising and reporting, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 84, nays 89.

Mr. DWIGHT, of Massachusetts, said, that he was sure the House would appreciate the embarrassment he felt himself under in rising to address the Committee, at a moment when they had just been touched by the magic wand of the eloquence of the gentleman from Virginia, and the honorable Speaker of the House. But, having had the honor of bringing the subject embraced by the resolution then upon the table before the House, at the last session of Congress, he should think himself culpable, did he, on this occasion, omit to add his efforts (feeble as they might be) to those of the distinguished gentleman who had brought forward this resolution. He had not words, he said, to express the gratitude he felt to his honorable colleague, (Mr. WEBSTER,) for the very luminous manner in which he had unfolded the principles of the Holy Alliance yesterday. He would not, he said, again apply the term Holy to an alliance, which he could characterize in no other way than as a conspiracy of sovereigns, convened, ostensibly, for the purpose of securing the social order of nations, while they were, in reality, waging war upon the social rights of mankind. Although, he said, he could not express the gratitude he felt to his honorable friend, he would tender to the House a more acceptable homage—the assurance that he would not, in the remarks he was about to submit, trespass upon a subject to which such justice had already been done. He congratulated his honorable friend from South Carolina, (Mr. POINSETT,) who had preceded him in the argument, upon the eloquent description he had given of the cause and sufferings of the interesting people to whom the resolution related. He regretted, however, that he could not congratulate him upon having carried his sympathy to the utmost legitimate extent which the principles of humanity, the recognised rights of neutral nations, and the peace of our country justified. "Stern" (indeed, in the language of the gentleman) "would be the duty of a statesman," if the policy of his country always required him to suppress the best emotions of the heart, when they were sanctioned by the soundest dictates of the understanding, and approved by the acknowledged principles of national law. He felt himself under the necessity, therefore, of opposing the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, and supporting the original resolution.

The proposition, sir, is one of the highest importance, whether you regard the interesting character of the people to whom it relates, the effect it may produce upon the foreign relations of the Governments from which it proceeds, or the extensive commercial relations it may open between the United States and a numerous, intelligent, and industrious people, the fruits of whose industry, for four hundred years, have been consumed by the despots who enslaved them.

* Mr. POINSETT, at the conclusion of his remarks on Tuesday, in reply to Mr. WEBSTER, on the Greek question, submitted two resolutions, as an amendment to that offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts; the one in reference to Greece, and another in relation to the independent Governments South of the United States. The latter was withdrawn by him, in consequence of a resolution to a similar effect having been laid upon the table by the Speaker. This explanation is necessary to an understanding of Mr. RANDOLPH's (and especially of Mr. WEBSTER's) remarks. The resolution submitted by Mr. POINSETT, but afterwards withdrawn, was in the following words:

"Resolved, That this House concur in the sentiments expressed by the President, in relation to this hemisphere, and would view any attempt to oppress or control the free Governments of America South of us, by the Allied Powers of Europe, as dangerous to the peace and happiness of the United States; and that such measures as may be deemed expedient to protect them from the attacks of any Power, other than that of Spain alone, and unassisted, will meet its cordial support."

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

My object will be to show, that the adoption of the resolution is alike demanded by the character and the condition of the Greeks, by the obvious commercial policy of our own Government, and that it cannot be opposed by any well-grounded apprehensions of involving ourselves in difficulties with any of the established Governments of Europe.

In touching upon the character of this extraordinary people, he would not take up the time of the House in dwelling upon their origin. It was sufficient for him to remind them, that, in tracing the history of almost all the nations of modern times, the mind was bewildered and the heart appalled, by the mingled ignorance and barbarism by which their origin is surrounded.

To the modern Greek is reserved the privilege of pointing to a brighter spot in the darkness of antiquity, and to remind you that there was the country of his ancestors, and that he is now striving to emulate those heroic achievements, by which they were made immortal; that, when the deeds of his forefathers were embalmed in history, it was in a language rendered classical by its literature; that, in whatever nation of our own time, there exists a love of virtue, a taste for literature, a devotion to freedom—there exists also, in their appropriate language, the mementoes of his country's greatness; that the descendants of those heroes, who first conquered freedom, and of the sages who first taught civil liberty to mankind, are now struggling under the yoke of barbarian bondage; that it is to us, who have partaken of their arts and sciences, their literature and religion, their forms of political power, and their notions of civil liberty, they appeal for sympathy, against a people in whose estimation learning is useless pedantry, our common religion a delusion, and their notions of civil liberty a crime.

In such a cause, an appeal can never be made in vain to that people who, so short a time ago, by their Representatives in this Hall, recognised the independence of the South American Governments almost by acclamation.

But, sir, the appeal of the Greeks is not founded upon the merit of their ancestry, and we are compelled to turn from the contemplation of a people whose origin is wrapped up in the classic associations of antiquity, the recollection of which is unmingled with a regret, except that they have passed away, to the melancholy picture of their present condition.

From the conquest of Constantinople by Mahomet II., the Turkish Government has been kept in awe by the European Powers which surrounded it, through the means of that universal principle of self-defence which nations, as well as individuals, are bound to regard.

The doctrine of the balance of power, and the mutual jealousies connected with its existence, has permitted to sleep, upon the bosom of Europe, a Government which, as the gentleman from South Carolina has well said, were bound by the faith of no treaties, and in regard to which the principles binding the nations of the earth together, are of no obligation. To such jealousies has the Ottoman empire been indebted for her existence in Europe, and not to an intrinsic strength or disposable force, that ought to discourage the friends of Grecian freedom.

The apprehension that Russia would enlarge her colossal empire in the South, or that Bonaparte would, in that direction, take another step in his march to universal dominion; or that England would, in the Archipelago, or in the straits of the Dardanelles, make other depots of her almost irresistible marine, has, by turns, distracted the cabinets of Europe and involved its Governments in desolating wars; but has always resulted in fixing more firmly the firm despotism of the Turk upon the eastern empire of the Cæsars.

During this security from abroad, the Turkish Government had relaxed their system of oppression; for even despotism, when sated and unresisted, may become sluggish, and the interval was employed, by the industrious Greeks, in accumulating, from their soil, and the resources of their national industry, those treasures, which, alas, could serve them no other purpose than to excite the rapacity of their inhuman masters.

In other conquests, the humanity or policy of the conqueror seems to have put a limit to its own severity, and, by degrees, to have blended with its own people and laws, the persons and rights of the conquered. If the humanity of the conqueror has not extended so far, his policy has been contented to seize the dominion of person and property, and leave to the conquered the dominion of the heart, and the charities of domestic life. Not so the Turk; under his sway the conquered subject is permitted to wear his head only upon the payment of a capitation tax; and, lest he should even then forget the distinction between the follower of the Cross and the Crescent, he is compelled to bear, in the color of his costume, the degrading evidence of his subjugation.

I have said that the possessions and the rights of this people were pursued through the waste of the affections. Yes, sir: connubial love, parental affection, filial devotion, the little that binds a slave to existence, all became a crime, because their indulgence were incompatible with the claims of the conqueror. Wealthy families were turned, houseless and penniless, upon the world, to gratify the avarice of a governor, or pamper the appetite of a favorite. The innocent people, deprived of civil or political rights, were robbed without accountability, and butchered with impunity, by some agent of despotism, who purchased immunity from his master by dividing the spoils of his victim. Whole districts threw up their property into the hands of the tyrant, purchasing repose by their penury, and preferring beggary to dishonor. But, when all had been yielded to avarice which wealth could give, they were subjected to the influence of a still more execrable passion; and you have the testimony of a distinguished individual to the fact, that he has rode over large villages in the Peloponnesus, scathed by the flames, because some reputable family had refused to give up a beautiful daughter as a victim to the execrable tyrant's lusts. From these oppressions, an appeal was made to humanity every where. But it was unheard even by the nation which had exerted its power for the abolition of the more humane slave trade; by a nation that had produced a Chatham to raise his indignant voice against the less inhuman ferocity of savage war; or a Burke, to picture, in pathetic eloquence, the less excruciating sufferings of the inhabitants of Southern India. But it was not made in vain—it was heard by one of their countrymen, whose distinguished bravery and commanding character had raised him to the post of Aid-de-Camp of the Emperor Alexander, and to the command of a Major General in the Russian service. Under such auspices, the struggle for freedom commenced in the northern provinces of Wallachia and Moldavia. Every thing which genius could devise or valor achieve, was attempted, and victory had already perched upon his banners; when the sublime head of the Holy Alliance made the humane discovery, that the happiness of millions of his fellow Christians were not to be put in competition with the legitimacy of the Grand Sultan of the Ottoman empire.

The brave, the devoted Ypsilanti, was denounced and disgraced by his Royal Patron; himself and his sacred cause were made a sacrifice to cold and selfish views of State policy.

For a moment the political regeneration of Greece seemed doubtful, and might have become hopeless; but the measure of the despot's iniquities was not yet quite full. As if he delighted to add to the causes of Heaven's vengeance and a people's wrongs, the venerable Patriarch of the Grecian Church was massacred and hung up at the door of his own Cathedral; and this was followed by an universal massacre of the Greeks at Constantinople and of the hostages throughout the empire.

Amid this work of desolation, the mind has hardly the courage to dwell upon a single instance. But there is something of a peculiar horror, and yet of a grateful, though partial retribution in the affair of Scio, that compels me to bring it to your recollection.

This little island in the Archipelago was the supposed abode of the great poet of antiquity; thither, as if by a classical impulse, many of the Grecian families of easy fortune and of literary habits had resorted through successive years, until its population exceeded one hundred thousand—sixty villages and one hundred churches reared their heads throughout the island.

Here, as if the genius of Grecian poetry still lingered in its delightful shades, and among its vineyards and olive groves, was erected an extensive institution, devoted to literature, where were taught seven hundred students in the arts of peace, and all the mysteries of ancient learning; here, as if in the range of the Ottoman Empire there was a spot exempt from its despotism, peace and security might have been found. If on earth there was a people worthy of the protection of Heaven, it was the unoffending inhabitants of Scio. Yet, this sacred island was delivered up, without a crime charged upon its inhabitants, but that the blood of Leonidas and Socrates ran in their veins, to murder and rapine, conflagration and plunder.

The sex that escaped the sword were reserved for pollution; and the devastation only ceased when there was nothing left to destroy. The island became a desert. In the language of our immortal Ames, where there had been men, and wealth, and comparative liberty, there is no more than a sand bank, for sea monsters to fatten on; a space for the storms of the ocean to mingle in mighty conflict. Humanity shudders at such a recital. Atrocities like these, sir, would at any other time have roused the nations of Europe to vengeance; and yet there are men and nations who have heard it without emotion! Where, sir, is the gallantry, where the humanity, where the chivalry, of Continental Europe? Locked in the icy bands of the Holy Alliance.

But, sir, the immediate authors of these unparalleled atrocities were not permitted to go unpunished. The Turkish flag ship, while remaining in the harbor of Scio, with its Capitan Pasha and more than two thousand Turks on board, reposing after their feast of blood, was grappled by two Greek fire-ships, and blown to the elements. Avengeance so merited and yet so awful, that I should hardly have brought it before you, had I not discovered in it another ground of sympathy with that interesting people. No one who hears me will have forgotten, that a similar exploit in the Mediterranean, of some of our naval officers, first gave the brilliant presage of the glory to which the American Navy was destined.

A brilliant victory over the combined Turkish, Egyptian, and Algerine fleets at Tenedos, soon gave the ascendancy to the Greeks upon the Mediterranean. But their exploits were not confined to the water. The causes I have enumerated, had roused their nation to vengeance, and Greece exhibited, throughout, the mass of its population in arms: men and women marched, with clubs in their hands, to exterminate a tyranny which threatened them with annihilation. If it was an oppression, such as was never known, it was met by a resistance seldom equalled. If, in a moment of despondency, without discipline, and without arms, they were disheartened by the power of their oppressors, and the waste of their country, they were roused by the recollection that every object in their view presented some classic memorial of the glory of their ancestors; that the ground beneath their feet was the sepulchre of their country's heroes. As if by a refinement of emulation, they met the enemy at the well known pass of Thermopylæ, and where the Spartans had resisted Xerxes for freedom, they determined to reconquer it. A resistance roused by such oppressions, nourished and sustained by such associations, could not but be successful, and Greece once more reverted to its rightful owners.

Does any one doubt that Greece will retain what her arms have so gloriously won? Let him remember, that, within half a century, we, a less numerous, if not a less powerful people, struggled with a nation as much superior to the Ottoman Empire, as we are now superior to the Grecian Republics.

Is there a doubt whether that Government will

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

secure the principles they are contending for? Let us look at the constitution promulgated at Epidaurus, on the first day of the last year, and we shall recognise the fundamental principles of our own.

All Greeks are equal in the eye of the law, without distinction of rank or dignity. The property, honor, and security, of every citizen, is under the guarantee of the law, through the medium of trial by jury. The distribution of power into two Legislative bodies, each having a negative upon the other; and a judiciary independent of both—an Executive annually chosen—the abolition of torture and confiscation. With such a constitution; with a seat of government at Athens, where once sat the Senate of the Areopagus, with Minerva and the symbols of Wisdom for the Seal of State; it is impious to doubt whether Greece has the intelligence to be free. And yet these are the men whom the English writers would "learn to despise the theoretic and delusive idea of constitution makers."

The resolution contemplates opening new commercial relations—and with whom? Why, sir, with seven millions of people, whose industry, for centuries, under all the disadvantages of national servitude and private oppression, has sustained and fed that numerous people. It has done more; it has fed the rapacity of their conquerors. With a naval power of six hundred merchantmen, and from whose united merchant service were equipped and manned, in the short space of twelve months from the breaking out of the war, a navy that was enabled to meet the combined Turkish, Egyptian, and Algerine fleet, and to beat them. Is it with such a people, supported by such a naval power, that the policy of opening new commercial relations is doubted? No, sir. It cannot be.

But it may be said that we shall sacrifice our trade with Smyrna, and, of consequence, with the Turkish possessions in the Mediterranean. Let gentlemen look at the official returns of the Treasury of the last year, and they will see how small will be the amount of that sacrifice. The whole amount of our trade to the possessions of Turkey in Asia, Africa, and Europe, will be seen by the last returns not to exceed the value of a single cargo in the India trade. And this pitiful advantage is purchased by the humiliating concession of suffering an American citizen to reside at Smyrna, three hundred miles from the capital of Turkey, without having the acknowledgment or protection of the Government from whom he seeks this little advantage to his country's commerce.

But those who make this cold calculation of pecuniary policy in a question that involves national honor, should look well to the other side of the picture before they decide that even interest should deter us from the measure. Have they asked themselves what would become of our whole trade in the Mediterranean, should the Greek cruisers which visit every harbor and inlet of that sea choose to interfere with it? Does the well known sympathy of the Greeks for this country furnish a guarantee from such an attack? And, if it does so, does not the fact furnish the strongest support to my argument? Shall we avail ourselves of such a sentiment for the protection of our commerce, and refuse to reciprocate it for the encouragement of theirs?

But it may be said her commerce is too small to justify the interference. The argument for the recognition of the South American Republics was sustained, not by reference to their commerce as it then was, but by an enlightened calculation of what it would soon become; and events are already beginning to demonstrate the soundness of the position. Greece, with her limited territory, surrounded almost by the waters of the Mediterranean; and her dense population, devoted to the arts; and her marine, composed of the best seamen of the Continent, must necessarily become an important naval and commercial Power. The duty of the Government, then, is to take measures which may not only encourage, but protect our commerce with such a commercial and naval people.

It remains for me to show what I promised in the outset—that the measure was not opposed by any well-grounded apprehension of difficulties with the other Powers of Europe. This Government has always been, and I trust always will be, as slow to impugn the rights of other nations, as she is prompt in defending her own. But the resolution contemplates no new principle; it falls far short of that which governed this House in recognising the independence of the South American Republics. There we recognised the independence of States which had thrown off the yoke, not of governments which had conquered them, but of the mother country which had colonized and settled them. There we recognised the new governments pending treaties of amity with the old ones, without disturbing, as was fearfully predicted we should do, the amicable relations which had previously existed between us. Here we open commercial relations with a people who were never, but by conquest, an integral part of the Ottoman empire; who, neither by habits nor language, nor by the enjoyment of political rights, have been blended with the conquerors; and whose former government never has had negotiation or treaty with us. Is it an apprehension of difficulty with Russia or with England? Those Powers have only incidentally protected Turkey; not for her sake, but that a barrier might be erected between them, which their mutual jealousies would prevent each other from overstepping. The independence of Greece would form a stronger barrier, because erected and sustained by the hearts of freemen. Is it apprehended that a Republic cannot exist surrounded by the monarchies of Europe? Let us examine the case of Switzerland, that long remained a barrier in Europe, that Bonaparte, in the height of his power, dare not overthrow. Look at the United Provinces of the Netherlands, conquering their freedom from Spain in the height of her power. Look at the Venetian Republic, conquering from the Ottoman empire the fairest portion of Greece, the Morea; and compelling its cession, by the treaty of Carlowitz, in 1699. Look at the Ionian isles, whose independence was acknowledged by Russia in the year 1800, and at the Treaty of Tilsit annexed to the French empire, by the name of the Septinsular Republic. See them in 1817, after the fall of Bonaparte, demanding and receiving the protection of England.

Can Russia look with a jealous eye upon the efforts of the Greeks? What interest can she have that Greece should be reconquered by the Turk, when she has acquitted herself of all participation in her deliverance? The eye of her ambitious Emperor is too intently viewing the natural outlet of his vast empire, the Euxine, and her connexion with the Mediterranean; and, besides, he cannot regret the dismemberment of an empire which he will possess by so much the sooner, as she is weakened in this controversy. Possess—and he must sooner or later—at least Constantinople and the Straits of the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles; they are to his empire, stretching as it does from the Polar Ocean to the Black Sea, and from the Pacific to the Baltic, what the Mississippi and New Orleans are to us. The provinces of Greece would rather weaken than strengthen his colossal power. He cannot conquer; he cannot subjugate them. He may, to be sure, exterminate them; but he is too deeply read in human nature and human history, to be ignorant, that when a people have resolved on liberty, they will be free.

He might have learned, from the history of the United States, the example of a people conquering more from the force of the immortal resolution than by arms, however splendid their victories.

In regard to the motives of the Russian in entering into the Holy Alliance, or rather forming it, he begged leave to express a single opinion; it might be novel, it might be erroneous, but, if correct, it had no little bearing upon the question before the House.

That Monarch seemed to him to have aspired, like Bonaparte, to the government of Europe, by force of some general principle which might assume the shape of a continental question. Bonaparte had done it through the medium of their interests. Alexander had operated through their fears. It was an apprehension of the increasing effort at the reformation of abuses, which the enlightened character of the age had given the other monarchs of the Alliance too much cause to be afraid of. It was this apprehension which had united them under his guidance for the protection of his eight hundred thousand bayonets.

Alexander, then, does not fear the independence of Greece, and England may approve it ere long. The most authentic information from that country, Mr. D. contended, had placed the belligerent parties in an attitude, as it regards each other, which, upon the soundest principles of national law, would justify our opening commercial relations with either. The Greeks have formed a Government for themselves, and the resolution only admitted that the power resided in those who exercised it, without saying to whom it belonged, or fortifying either in their claims to it. The resolution proposes commercial relations with the Government, de facto, upon principles recognised in the history of neutral nations, as well as national law. Spain submitted to as much from all the commercial nations of Europe, for near a century, in regard to her revolted provinces of the Netherlands. She has submitted to more from England and the United States, in regard to the provinces of South America. But yesterday, an American Plenipotentiary was endeavoring to present himself to a Cortez of Spain, whose votes were construed to be treason to their King, and yet we hear of no complaint from that Government.

Upon the principle of treating with its governments de facto, were the Ministers of France received by neutral nations during the Consulate, and of England during the Commonwealth, and yet neither Charles nor Louis, upon their restoration, chose to complain.

If Greece should commit spoliation upon our commerce, we might treat with them; and shall we not prevent that from being done which we might ask redress for when effected? Could he fear this at home? Years and years might pass away before the serfs of his gigantic empire would hear the name of liberty, much less aspire to the enjoyment of it. The same period might elapse before the Cossacks of the Don and Ukraine could wish to change their profession of arms, or the Tartars of Northern Asia would aspire to a change of their Government. No, sir, he had no such fears at home. The northern hive, when it swarms, will not stop to reform abuses, to depose their king bees and drones, but will proceed to the rich fields and gardens of the South.

It was well said by the Autocrat of the North, in his speech to Monsieur Chateaubriand, Europe shall no longer have an English and French policy.

No, sir, England can never be a party to such an alliance, without carrying her back to the age of Henry VIII. She is not more entirely isolated from this policy than she is from the terra firma of Europe. She will be compelled, sooner or later, to take ground against this alliance, and the sooner the better for her interests and her honor.

It is said, sir, that a co-ordinate branch of the Government may, and from the tenor of the message it is inferred the Executive will do all that the resolution contemplates.

This coincidence of opinion is essential to the success of the measure, and one of the strongest arguments for its adoption. Concert is essential to give effect to a measure calculated to promote the great interests and essential pursuits of the country. Let it not be apprehended that this is too remote and chivalric an effort for the peaceable Government of the United States to make. Let it not be said, that the path of prudence for us is to step aside the question, and leave to others the more direct, but more hazardous one, of marching directly to it. For, it must be remembered, that, by courting the danger, they are meriting the glory of the enterprise. And here, sir, I am persuaded, that no person who duly appreciates his country's power, will hesitate to say, that if the measure is called for by our commercial interests, and sanctioned by the principles of humanity, and not opposed by the stipulations of any treaty, he will hesitate to give it his support, because some Government may choose to make it a cause of difference with us. Such hesitation would imply the surrender of our national independence. To what nation shall Greece address herself for co-operation or sympathy? Shall it be to England? The English Lord Protector of the Ionian Isles has been obliged to suppress the spontaneous sympathy of the Island brethren in their behalf, lest his country should rouse the Turk, and throw him into an alliance with Alexander.

JANUARY, 1824.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

No, sir, not to England, but to America, did Greece appeal from the Senate of Calamata, in language we cannot refuse to hear, "That having deliberately resolved to live or die for freedom, they were drawn by an irresistible sympathy to the people of the United States."

It remains to be determined whether the Congress of the United States will sanction that appeal and approve a sympathy so universal in their behalf, and of the people of this wide extended empire.

Those who regard the true foundation of their country's glory, cannot be indifferent to this interesting crisis. They will consider that her military and naval character stands already so high that it does not require to be exalted; that her progress in literature and the arts is too rapid to need acceleration; that, in the science of civil government she has already done much to adorn and enlighten the age in which we live; and that it only remains to her to consummate her national glory, by enlarging that generous philanthropy which produced the abolition of the African slave trade, and the recognition of South American independence. In such a commodity of national wealth, to be selfish, is to be ungenerous; and base would be the American heart, that would barter the well-earned glory of his country in redeeming one continent from the slave trade, and in giving freedom to another, for Alexander's share in the partition of Poland, or the right of the Bourbon to the broken sceptre of Spain. Enough of military and naval glory have we acquired, to give us most grateful recollections of the past, and most pleasing assurances of the future. The Holy Alliance will hardly assail us, while the thunder of our naval battery is yet echoing along the lakes, and reverberating throughout the Atlantic. They will remember, too, that the British Lion has crouched to the American Eagle upon the land. And, should the Russian Bear, by a bound not more extravagant than certain diplomatic logic, leap over four thousand miles of close sea, upon our Pacific border, we could point out, in Tennessee, a Western hunter that should drive him growling to his native den.

But, sir, we need not these consolations. The Greeks do not ask us for our treasures, or our arms. They bid us remember, that opinion is power, and that the expression of it here on this day, shall gladden the hearts and nerve the arms of millions of beings, as brave, as enlightened, but not yet as secure and happy as ourselves.

Mr. MANGUM renewed the motion that the Committee should rise. He hoped the gentleman from Massachusetts would indulge him in the motion. He could assure that gentleman that he had yesterday come to this House with his mind, as he thought, fully made up to oppose the resolution; but, by the luminous and able reasoning of that gentleman, his determination had at least been shaken, and he asked for further time for reflection. Thereupon,

The question was put, and the Committee rose, reported progress, and had leave to sit again; and, on motion of Mr. TAYLOR, the resolutions were ordered to be printed.

WEDNESDAY, January 21.

Mr. COCKE, by leave of the House, presented a resolution, adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, "that the Congress of the United States be requested to pass a law authorizing payment to the officers, as well staff officers as others, and soldiers, for property lost by them in the Seminole campaign; and that the ambiguity, or doubtful meaning, of the act of the 4th of May, 1822, be explained, or modified, or that such a construction be given to said act as will embrace the cases of the claimants;" which resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Josiah Hook, jr.," made a report thereon adverse to the passage of the said bill; which report and bill were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMPELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made a report on the petition of Robert S. Forman, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

The Committee on the Public Lands were discharged from the consideration of the petition of sundry inhabitants of Michilimackinac, referred on the 22d of December ultimo, and it was laid on the table.

Mr. POINSETT, from the joint Library Committee, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of appropriating five thousand dollars for the use of the Library of Congress.

On the question to agree to the resolution, it passed in the affirmative.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made a report on the petition of Thomas T. Townley, in behalf of the heirs of the late Don Miguel Eslava, accompanied by a bill confirming to the said heirs sundry claims to lands in the city and county of Mobile, in the State of Alabama; which bill was read

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

the first and second time, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act explanatory of an act, entitled 'An act for the relief of the officers, volunteers, and other persons, engaged in the late campaign against the Seminole Indians, passed the 4th day of May, 1822,'" reported the same without amendment, and it was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The report of the Committee of Claims, on the petition of John B. Smith, was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. COCKE, the report of the Land Commissioners in Louisiana, in the claim of the representatives of the Marquis de Maison Rouge, which was sent to this House by the Secretary of the Treasury, together with all papers and documents accompanying the same, were referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims; and said committee were instructed to report with a view to the final settlement and disposal of said claim.

On motion of Mr. BRENT, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making provision by law for surveying the coast, from the mouth of the Mississippi to the Sabine river, in Louisiana; and of causing buoys to be placed at, and upon, the shoals and banks off the mouth of Berwick's bay, at the pass into said bay, which leads from the Gulf of Mexico into the river Teche, so as to render the said passage secure for vessels entering thereinto.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of having a lighthouse erected, or of placing a lamp upon, or near, Point Fer, or upon, or near, the island of "Belle Isle," in Louisiana, for the facility and security of vessels navigating the coast, at the entrance into the pass which leads into the river Teche.

On motion of Mr. CALL, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire and report what alterations and amendments are necessary in the act of Congress amending an act organizing the Territorial government of Florida.

An engrossed resolution, in relation to an intended visit of the Marquis de Lafayette to the United States, was read the third time, and passed unanimously.

CAUSE OF THE GREEKS.

The House then again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, Mr. TAYLOR in the Chair, on the state of the Union, and resumed the consideration of Mr. WEBSTER'S resolution for sending an agent to Greece, and the amendment thereto proposed by Mr. POINSETT, which proposes to limit the resolve to the expression of a sentiment decisively favorable to the Greek cause.

The depending question being stated—

Mr. CARY, of Georgia, rose and said that he felt himself under some embarrassment in reconciling the circumstances in which he was placed, with the sentiments he was about to utter. If he should say to the Committee that the circumstances and nature of the present subject of debate, pregnant with the most important consequences, had pressed with peculiar weight upon his mind, he feared that he should be laughed at, because he had rushed into the debate with all the precipitate ardor of an ancient Lacedæmonian. But, after the subject had been debated day after day; when the discussion of it had elicited the most splendid talents of this House, and of the nation; when the subject of the Grecian struggle for liberty occupied the whole country—when taste, when letters, when beauty and fashion have all enlisted in the subject, and evinced the most ardent zeal on behalf of Greece—it was not surprising that he should feel, very sensibly, his own inadequacy, and his need of the indulgence of the Committee, while he expressed his decided dissent to the policy of the resolution now proposed, notwithstanding the very high source from which it had proceeded. When the distinguished mover of that resolution, at the close of the speech in which he had supported it, took his seat, surrounded with all the splendor of genius, and all the glories of eloquence, the concluding sentences of that speech had powerfully impressed Mr. C.'s mind. The gentleman had said that whatever might be the issue of the present struggle of Greece, it would be to him a theme of no regret, that he had asked, in the name of seven millions of suffering freemen, one word from this House, of cheering and of sympathy. No, sir, he need not regret it; he had advocated the cause of Greece in the spirit of Greece; he had spoken as if the mantle of Pericles had fallen upon him, and in the finest language of the Saxons he had evinced the spirit of the Saxon race. While he was speaking, Mr. C. could not but think that even if he failed, it would be glory enough to have made such an effort to succeed. Sir, that gentleman has ingrafted himself on the imperishable column of Grecian eloquence. For me, whatever may be the issue of the feeble effort I may be able to make against all the power of that splendid gentleman, I shall enjoy one source of satisfaction. It is not that I have associated myself, in this hall, with the glories of the Grecian eloquence—but that my conscience tells me I shall evince, upon this floor, the spirit of my own country: that I feel as an American, and that I speak as one.

In endeavoring to support those views which I entertain on this subject, it will be necessary to direct myself chiefly to what has been advanced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, since he stands the solitary Corinthian pillar in the Grecian cause, and supports, with so much ability and dignity, the arch on which rests our finest literature, and so many of our most valuable social blessings; and I will, therefore, proceed to show, out of that gentleman's own mouth, that the measure he proposes to this House ought not to be adopted. In the opening of his speech, that gentleman had said that the subject was one on which it was difficult to avoid being carried away by an enthusiastic ardor: a single glance of his experienced and well disciplined mind was sufficient to tell him that, in legislating on this question, feeling was not to be our guide. He knew, as a statesman, though not as an orator, that a corporate or a deliberative body has no soul—that it has, so to speak, no heart—that it must deliberate with sternness, with precision, on all the relations of the country. The gentleman conceded this when he said that our feelings would need to be “chastised.” And what was that chastisement? It was in the nature of a sort of duel, in which the judgment fought down the feelings, till it brought them to submit to an exact, sober, mathematical estimate of our relations with the rest of the world. In that spirit, Mr. C. said, he should endeavor to investigate the present question, and would present his views of it in as concise and simple a manner as he was able.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

The gentleman from Massachusetts had gone into an able, a minute, and an attic examination of the principles of that combination of crowned heads, which threatened the safety of popular liberty in Europe; and he showed, in a forcible manner, the ominous and dark forebodings to which that combination led every thinking mind. He said that the spirit of the Stuarts (I, Mr. Chairman, would rather call it the spirit of power) had again appeared and claimed the right to tyrannize over men, by a divine delegation. He connected, in a most elegant manner, with the development of these principles, the fall of that military ruler who trampled for so long a period upon the world, and had jostled the earth from its equilibrium. He said that society had its origin in a sort of family compact, in which the independence of each nation was secured by a combination to prevent the strong from oppressing and swallowing up the weak; but that, in the principles of this Confederacy, all these securities were merged and lost by an admirable and impressive figure. He represented society (if I understood him rightly) as divided, not perpendicularly, into nations, but horizontally—all the monarchs being above, and all the people below. Well, be it so. Such was, unhappily, the state of the fact. But, sir, does it result because this is the fact, that it augurs any danger to us? I say no, sir; and if you ask me where is my authority for such a denial, I answer, in the gentleman's own declaration. He said, that ever since the diffusion of that light in Europe which had produced the French Revolution, that vast political Ætna, whose every eruption made Europe tremble and turn pale, and the furious tide of whose burning lava threatened to overwhelm every nation of the continent, there had been an intelligence at work at the root of society, an inextinguishable spark thrown among its elements, which rendered it impossible that men should long submit to a system so monstrous, both in theory and practice, as that of the Holy Alliance. Sir, we believe this. It cannot last, sir. That horizontal division of society, of which the gentleman had so strikingly spoken, must and will be broken up; those glittering pageants who now appear in the upper section, rely upon it, sir, are more formidable in appearance than in reality. The materials are already in existence; they are present in the lower section, which must ultimately blow up this state of things, and prostrate these high dignitaries into proportionate degradation. Whenever we see a combination of bad men, (whether monarchs or others,) we may always conclude, on the general principles and history of human things, that the combination will ultimately be crushed. The alliance of these confederated monarchs is a rope of sand—it rests on principles false and selfish, and its continuance will, of necessity, be temporary and transient. As soon as one of the confederated Powers becomes overgrown, the combination will split to pieces—and when that happens, Europe will have too much work at home to look elsewhere.

Sir, the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts was a string of truisms; each of these was incontrovertible; each of them made a mellow and a deep impression on my own mind; but, sir, I differ wholly from that gentleman in the application that he made of them. It does not follow, because I felt and acknowledged the truth of each of the facts and opinions he stated, that the whole, as combined, produced an equal conviction. Mr. Chairman, I am a common-place man; I can boast of no effect of inspiration; I have not dived far into the wells of science, nor have I been touched by the wand of any of the magicians of learning or genius; I am of those who believe that there is no mode to receive light from Heaven but that which is common to mankind; and that, as in the physical world, the orb of day illumines alike the various districts of our country, shines equally on the South as he does on the North, and on the West as the East, so does the great orbit of uncreated light illumine alike the world of intellect. But, sir, this is a question that has a native tendency to unbase the mind; to throw it completely off its balance; and its discussion is therefore to be approached and conducted with the utmost caution. And, sir, let us not forget that this Government is one calculated not for to-day or to-morrow, but that its benefits and effects are to endure, and to diffuse themselves ultimately over the whole world. I listened with interest to the historical detail so ably and beautifully given by the gentleman from Massachusetts, respecting the treatment of the Greek nation by the monarchs of Europe. The story was interesting, from its manner; but, sir, it was not new. We all know that power cares nothing for right; that it treads on every thing; that, in its eagerness for acquisition, it grasps at more than it can hold, and, by grasping at too much, unnerves itself by its own cupidity. But, sir, let it go on to grasp; let it go on to accumulate; let it continue to pursue its crooked, transverse, and contracted policy; it is now nothing to us. We have got through all that; we fear it no longer. But, sir, is it therefore necessary or proper for us to do even what the modest and very moderate resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes? Are we called to step out of our character and mingle again in the turmoil of European politics? Above all, sir, shall we approach the struggling Greeks with fair words and a smiling countenance, but with nothing in our hand to aid them? I know, sir, that there is much in manner. I know that the great orator of antiquity, when he was asked what was the first requisite in an orator, answered "manner;" and when asked what was the second, answered "manner;" and when asked what was the third, still answered "manner;" but I fancy, sir, if that immortal example and teacher of eloquence were an auditor of our present discussions, and should be asked what was chiefly required in the intercourse of this nation with Greece, he would answer something else than "manner;" he would advise some proof of our sincerity. What is the language of Mr. Luriotis? He tells you that he looks to this country for friendship and assistance. Surely, he means substantial assistance. He does, indeed, with the politeness of a cultivated man, intimate that even one word of encouragement will be received with gratitude; but, if I understand him, he does not seem to understand our principles of neutral policy. But, sir, admitting him to mean what he says, would it not be disgraceful to this country and Government to take for our standard of action the modest and stinted demands of a polite correspondent, instead of granting the measure of full and manly aid? But, Mr. Chairman, this is not all. I did once think that we might open a commercial intercourse with that country; but I am now more than ever convinced that even this would be a dangerous intercourse.

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

Sir, if Greece be indeed so lovely, so beautiful, so exquisitely touching in her distress, who can approach her with the tears upon her cheek, and not be carried away by his pity into every extreme of imprudent zeal in her cause? Sir, the measure now proposed will only prove an entering wedge to more; if we once go a wooing up the Archipelago, we shall ere long find ourselves where it will be too late to stop. If we look at the history of our country thus far, we find no precedent to justify it; we find nothing in the writings of any of our greatest and wisest men. That immortal man who saved the Republic by his valor in the field, and saved it a second time by his wisdom in the cabinet, he who seemed to possess a mind formed for the whole universe, even WASHINGTON himself, seemed to have had a foreboding that one day a case like this might present itself, and, in his parting address, warns us against the danger. Was he not right? Yes, surely. We had won our independence by arms; a wide ocean separated us from the Old World; he knew that we were a peculiar people and peculiarly situated—that we live alone; and he advised us to keep ourselves free from embarrassing connexions with the governments of Europe, (all of which had their origin in the dark ages, and still bear the impress of that origin,) and to cleave to the ark of our own liberties. Was this unbenevolent? Was this too little a conduct for WASHINGTON to recommend? No, sir; we had bought our freedom with our own blood—and we were surely doing enough for the world, if, while we surrounded the temple of our liberty with a wall of fire from our enemies, we made an opening in that wall to receive whoever would come to us as a friend. Yes, sir; I repeat it—this Government, by its example alone, has conferred a benefit on the whole human family. That example brooded over the mind of France till it produced a revolution which threatened, and had at one time nearly accomplished, the downfall of tyranny; that same example is still impregnating the mind of continental Europe, and it will sooner or later bring forth freedom. Surely, sir, if we open this fair land, with all its signal privileges, as a refuge for the oppressed from every land, we do, on that subject, all that we are called to do. Should we, in a spirit of vain adventure, attempt to do more, may not the oppressed have reason, some day, to say to us, You left your home and let your house burn down, where not only you might have remained safe, but we too found a refuge?

Mr. CARY, in conclusion, said, that he trusted and believed he had now expressed the sentiments which became an American. Let us, in our private capacity as men, as freemen, as Christians if you please, feel for them, cheer them, and aid them too; but as a nation, as a Government, let us not mingle ourselves with the embroiled policy and the endless disputes of Europe. He had not, he said, troubled the Committee with historical details—yet there were some lessons on this subject to be learned from the history of the Greeks themselves. When Demosthenes was laboring to save the Athenian State, he advised his fellow-citizens, instead of running about the Forum, asking where is Philip? What is Philip doing now? Is Philip dead? to look after their own affairs. The affairs of Europe are to us this Philip; and the advice of the immortal orator is for us to pursue. He trusted neither the resolution nor the amendment would prevail—the latter, he said, makes a promise to the ear, but breaks it to the understanding. In the name of candor and (he felt inclined to add) in the name of God, if you do not intend to go farther, give nothing that may be welcomed as a pledge.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, rose and observed, that he had no idea that any thing that he had to say would change a single vote on the question, but that the subject had created great excitement in the community, and that what he should say, would be merely in justification of the vote which he deemed it his duty to give.

He observed, that the resolution, as explained by its advocates, implies that the United States are the guardians of liberty, and are bound to propagate it among all nations. Sir, said Mr. W., this is the doctrine of the Pope, of Mahomet, and Bonaparte, and leads to universal war—to universal power. Before we admit this doctrine, it would be well to examine what was our duty as a nation. The duties of every nation are limited to the prosperity and security of its own citizens; it owes nothing to other nations but the duties of humanity. This is more particularly the case with a government like ours, which is only intrusted with certain specific powers.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

The Government of the United States is bound to employ the treaty-making power, so as to secure a market to our own citizens for the encouragement of their industry, by stipulations with other nations for the mutual exchange of their productions, and to employ their power over imports, so as to foster domestic industry, and prevent its being overwhelmed by an unequal competition in our own markets.

The Government is also bound to provide a navy and army, with such national establishments as are necessary to repel or redress injury from other nations, and this is the limit of its authority in relation to other nations. We have no authority from the Constitution to embark in wars of ambition, or to propagate the principles of religion or liberty by the sword.

Because the world is full of oppression, is this Government the Hercules that is to free it from the monsters of tyranny and slavery? And are we bound to emulate the chivalrous achievements of the renowned Knight of La Mancha, by engaging in conflict with every windmill that we may, in the delirium of our frenzy, imagine to be a tyrant?

It will be asked, is our Government to be of no use to mankind? I answer yes; but not by its fleets and armies—not by embarking in a military crusade to establish the empire of our principles—not by establishing a corps of diplomatic apostles of liberty, but by the moral influence of its example.

It presents to the world a model by which the rights of men may be secured, and the benefit of good government may be obtained, with the least sacrifice of individual independence. It excites inquiry—it invites examination; the knowledge of it will be conveyed, by our flag, to every region of the earth. Foreigners will visit our shores; they will examine its structure; they will witness its practical operation; they will discover its excellence; and it will thus diffuse a spirit of reformation throughout the world.

Much has been said, during this debate, about the spirit of the age. The present age is distinguished from the last by liberality of sentiment in religion and politics. The American Revolution, Bible societies, and Christian missions, aided by the extension of commerce, have produced this change. It does not need the aid of physical means—such aid would obstruct its influence. This moral influence is all powerful, but does not irritate—does not excite alarm—does not provoke opposition. But, let it be connected with physical means, and it instantly will meet with resistance. Let it, then, operate as it has done, and we may expect it will continue to produce more and more important results, till the governments of the world are reformed.

Sir, the measure proposed is premature. It is predicated on the supposition that the Greeks have already achieved their independence. It is altogether uncertain what will be the result of their struggle. In the document communicated by the President, it is supposed to be uncertain. It may result in a new Grecian monarchy; and, certainly, we can have no sympathy for success in a change from one despotism to another. Any political mission, till the fact of their independence is ascertained, is an infringement of the law of nations. Public ministers are the means of intercourse between independent nations; but the law of nations does not recognise a mission from one independent Power to the subjects of another. It is stated that, in cases of competition for a Crown, or in case of civil war, where parties are equal, a minister may be sent to either. But, in case of a mission to subjects in rebellion, who should prove unsuccessful, it will be a violation of the rights of their sovereign, and a legitimate cause of war; and the nation who sends the minister ought to be prepared to aid the insurgents by force. This was the case of the French, Spaniards, and Dutch, who aided us in the commencement of our Revolution. They calculated from the beginning to aid us, if it should become necessary to the success of our Revolution—but it is not proposed, nor is it in our power, to do this.

Sir, it is very doubtful whether the Greeks possess the elementary principles that are necessary to form a free State. If a people possess the elements of freedom, they cannot be long held in slavery; and if they are destitute of these, no efforts they may make will terminate in the establishment of free institutions.

The love of liberty is so ingrained into the heart of every American, that we are apt to overlook the difficulties in the way of free government, and to conclude that every effort in favor of liberty will be successful.

It is a deception to compare the situation of other countries with ours, at the commencement of our Revolution.

We inherited the principles of liberty from our ancestors; we were educated in the free principles of the common law. We enjoyed the protection of person and property, the right of suffrage, and trial by jury; in which it would require a century for any people who have been born under the civil law to be instructed, and much longer to acquire by their own exertions.

Sir, are gentlemen aware of the value of the inheritance which they have derived from their ancestors? The privilege we enjoy is the result of a struggle of virtuous and enlightened men for more than six hundred years, with ignorance, superstition, and tyranny. They were extorted by piecemeal, with incredible labor and perseverance. It was more than two hundred years from the Great Charter to the Bill of Rights. From the time of the Great Charter to the American Revolution, distinguished individuals continued the conflict, breaking one fetter after another, until their persevering efforts terminated in a complete emancipation of this country from the shackles of superstition and tyranny, and in the establishment of civil and religious liberty, by political institutions conformable to the principles of natural liberty, and calculated to secure it.

Sir, the peace of the country was endangered

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

at the commencement of the French revolution, by disregarding those difficulties. A brief examination of the principles that are essential to the structure of every free government, will enable us to calculate the chances of a struggle in favor of liberty with ancient institutions, with more correctness.

Political writers agree, with one voice, that no people can be free, who have not intelligence to understand their rights, and virtue to submit to the restraints of law, as well as to aid their execution by the moral force of public sentiment; but they seem to have overlooked the influence of property in society. Experience proves, that intelligence and virtue may be overborne by the influence of property, secured to a few by the laws of the society.

Property is the basis of power in society. This is a law of our nature, and founded in the moral constitution of man. Men will be governed by their wants, and will be subservient to those who feed them, or who furnish them with the means of feeding themselves. The condition of the real property of any country will control and modify the Government. The possession of the whole country by a few persons, secured by the laws of primogeniture and restraints against alienation, will necessarily lead to monarchy or aristocracy; an equality of property in the soil, or the power of acquiring it, will lead to a republic. The first was the plan of the feudal system; the second is the plan embraced by the constitutions and laws of the States that compose our Union. The hereditary descent of property and established ranks, with exclusive privileges, lie at the foundation of the European Governments—the great mass of the people are tenants, laborers, and artisans, without any interest in the soil.

Before free Governments can be established in those countries, the existing establishments must be based to their foundations, and the whole structure of society must be reorganized; the restraints on alienation must be removed, ranks abolished, and equality of civil privileges established.

Were the people admitted to share in legislation, while the feudal principles of rank and property remain, their power would be unavailing to withstand their influence—the power of society would remain in the same hands with the property, and would control the acts of the Legislature. The British Parliament, with their peculiar advantages, have never been able to relieve the nation from the dominion of the feudal system.

No revolution that does not render real property partible, and couple the power of alienation with the ownerships, so that the great body of the people may become interested in the soil, and have a common interest in the country, can be the basis of a permanent free Government. It was because these changes were not made in the established order of things, that so many attempts to establish free Governments have failed. This was the cause of the failure of the efforts that were made in England, in the time of the Commonwealth, and not the want of virtue in those who conducted them, as Montesquieu supposes. This was the cause of the failure of similar efforts in France, during her revolution. They both removed the restraints on lands held in mortmain, but there they stopped—the same result will forever be produced where the revolution does not affect the feudal principles of rank and property. It was under a conviction of the necessity of the division and alienability of real property to the establishment and permanency of free Government, that the several States in our Union abolished entails and the rights of primogeniture; and it is in accordance with the same views that the courts of the different States will not tolerate any disposition of real property that leads to a perpetuity.

The tendency of society to inequality is as constant as gravity to the centre; laws that favor inequality are hostile to liberty; and the excellence of a free Government, is its fitness to counteract this tendency of society. The alienability of real property is an essential element of freedom—it is the source of all the virtues necessary to sustain it—it is the parent of industry, economy, independence, and patriotism—it is the redeeming principle that will preserve all the rest from corruption; where it exists the empire of liberty is secure. The incorporation of this principle in the laws and constitutions of the United States affords the strongest assurance of the perpetual duration of liberty in this country.

The condition of real estate in South America is what endangers the success of the efforts there made to establish free institutions. One-third of the real property is said to be in mortmain, and is occupied by tenants who are under the control of the ecclesiastical establishments. In some of the provinces, there is a species of nobility, who have immense possessions, secured by law; and unless they remove the restraints on the partition and alienation of real estate, and secure an equality of civil privileges, by their new constitutions, the temple of liberty will rest on a sandy foundation, that will not long sustain it.

Do the Greeks possess the elementary principles of freedom? This is very doubtful. They are represented by the travellers who have visited them, in general, as grossly ignorant of political principles—as by no means distinguished for a scrupulous sense of moral obligation, and as unequal with regard to property. There are some intelligent men among them, who have been educated in Italy, Germany, or France, but the great mass of the people have very little knowledge of the free States that once existed in that country; it is but recently that their ambition has extended further than to re-establish the Greek Empire without any design to form a free State. The Ottoman Empire has been decaying ever since the discovery of a passage to India by the Cape of Good Hope. The provinces are becoming independent, and new sects are dissolving the only bond that held them together. The Greeks also constitute the largest part of the population of Europe. They will probably succeed in rendering themselves independent of the Porte, and will, most probably, transfer their allegiance to a Russian Prince, and erect a new Grecian Monarchy. They may lighten their chains, but will not at present establish a free State.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

The adoption of the resolution, under these circumstances, would be premature, and might involve us in the absurdity of recognising as a fact what does not exist. But the strongest objection I have to the adoption of the resolution, is, that it may involve us in a war with the nations of Europe. The facts disclosed in this debate, as well as the Message of the President, are calculated to excite some apprehensions of danger to our repose.

We have subsisting causes of controversy with some of those Powers. Is it prudent to multiply them? The principles of our political institutions are in direct opposition. We hold that all power resides in the hands of the people; that Government is formed by them, and for their benefit, and is to be administered by persons chosen for limited periods, who are responsible to them for the faithful discharge of the trust. They hold that all power resides in the Sovereign, and that any participation to which the people may be admitted, is an emanation from the grace and favor of the Sovereign. These principles are as opposite as light and darkness: they cannot coalesce. The extension of one is the extermination of the other.

Sir, the existence of our form of government is a subject of anxiety to the Sovereigns of Europe. Our twenty-four States form a new constellation in the northern hemisphere, which, though scarcely visible above the horizon, sheds a partial but ominous light on the old world—

“As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams, or from behind the Moon, in dim eclipse, disastrous twilight
Sheds on half the nations, and,
With fear of change, perplexes monarchs.”

It is the sword of Damocles, which disturbs the slumbers of despotism, and is incompatible with its repose. Has not the extension of our principles, by the revolutions in South America, excited terror and dismay? and do we not hear, in every murmuring breeze that is wafted from the eastern continent, in broken whispers, delenda est Carthago, and shall we not be upon our guard?

War with all Europe would be extremely pernicious to us; not that I have any apprehensions of our being subdued; but, by its wasting energies, it would be less injurious to them than to us. We are not able to contend with them on equal terms; our incapacity arises from the felicity of our condition.

They have an accumulation of capital, the product of ages of industry—they have a surplus population which is a burden to them, and from which war would relieve them. They can embark in war without interrupting the common pursuits of life, or materially affecting their revenue. On the contrary, we need our whole capital for public improvements, and to lay the foundations of the institutions which are necessary for the development of domestic industry. We have no mendicant population to form an army. Our soldiers must be taken from the plough, and the common pursuits of life.

War with us deranges industry, interferes with our private pursuits—affects every cottage—arrests the progress of our improvement—annihilates our ordinary revenue, and augments the necessity, while it diminishes our ability, of contributing to the public energies.

Recollect the embarrassments of the year 1814, for men and money—recollect the universal distress occasioned by the calls of the militia from their occupations to the seaboard and to the frontiers, and pause before you pass this resolution. Let every man lay his hand on his heart, and ask himself, if such was our distress, when engaged only with a part of the force of a single Power, what would have been our condition, what would again be our condition, against the world in arms?

What is the true policy of this country in relation to foreign nations?

The common Father of our Country, among the treasures of wisdom he has bequeathed to us in his Farewell Address, conjures us, in extending our commercial connexions with foreign nations, to have as little political connexion as possible, and the Sage of Monticello, in his inaugural speech, which is the text book of his political opinions, councils us to cultivate peace, commerce, and honest friendship, with all nations, but to form entangling alliances with none.

The same course of policy is dictated by our physical and moral condition. Providence has prepared the people of this country for high destinies. When a new empire of civil and religious liberty was to be established, he selected a site three thousand miles from the corruptions of Europe, which would have checked the growth of the institutions that were to secure them. When we were ripe for independence, it was achieved, and now, to favor the prosperity of this great moral empire, which he has evidently destined to be the scene of higher degrees of moral excellence, and of a greater perfection of the human character, and of civil society, than has ever before been witnessed, he has connected our felicity with an incapacity for wars of ambition, or conquest, which would impair it. Is not this a mark of divinity? and is not the monition as authoritative as a voice from Heaven?

Sir, the laws of moral order are as obvious as the laws of civil society—the sanctions of those laws are as visible as your public prisons. It is a law of moral order, that men should avoid all excess—the sanction of this law is ill health, premature decay, and death. It is a law of moral order, that nations should live in peace and friendship; and the sanctions of this law are—derangement of industry, insecurity, loss of property, loss of lives, oppressive taxation, poverty, loss of liberty, despotism. No nation ever broke this law with impunity; the effects are recorded in history—they are verified by experience, they are written in colors as deep as the tints of the rainbow.

Will you violate this law, and share the wretched fate of other nations, or will you unite with the

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

designs of Providence, and accept the happiness that is tendered to your acceptance?

Mr. BAYLIES, of Massachusetts, claimed indulgence for a short time, while he should offer his views upon the subject now before the Committee. He was sensible of the difficulty of adding any thing new to the discussion, and should content himself in following somewhat in the track of his honorable colleague, who had spoken so ably and eloquently upon the question. He felt somewhat surprised at the manner in which gentlemen who opposed the resolution had treated the subject. The adoption of this resolution had been supposed by some to amount to a declaration of war against the Turks. Mr. B. thought the resolution had nothing hostile in its character, and contained but a plain expression of the opinion of the House. If it had no feature hostile to any other nation, the House had certainly a right to adopt it—to deny that right, were to deny the independence of this country. If the rising of the Greeks had been but a partial insurrection, or a mere temporary tumult, he should doubt the wisdom and the expediency of this measure; but this was not the case. And yet it had been said that it would be unwise to go forth and act upon such a subject where our interests are not involved. There was not a member, he trusted, on that floor, so base as to shrink from an avowal of his opinion in this contest; none could be found so degraded. And, Mr. B. said, he understood this to be simply a question, whether it was right to justify the President of the United States, by an expression of the opinion of the House, to send an agent among the Greeks for the purpose of inquiry. In the consideration of this proposition, he thought the House should take into the estimation the fact, whether the Greek provinces have actually achieved their independence; and if so, whether there is a reasonable prospect that they will be able to maintain it. He believed it was not denied, from any quarter, that a considerable portion of the Grecian territory had been rescued from subjection—that the march of despotism had been arrested upon the ancient Peloponnesus—that the city of Corinth, and almost all the Grecian islands, had been made free. In nearly every encounter on the ocean, the Greeks had been victorious, and by a general system, determined, and efficient, had endeavored to relieve themselves from an intolerable despotism, which had not only chained down the body, but had imposed fetters upon the mind, and tyrannized over the conscience. If it were then true that a considerable portion of the Greeks had succeeded in rendering themselves absolutely free, it was worth while to inquire as to the probability of their eventful success in retaining their freedom.

It was historically true, Mr. B. remarked, that, in struggles of this character, the power of the invaders was always gradually weakened and destroyed, while the capacity of defence, the discipline, and the strength of their opponents, was continually increasing. Every battle, whether won or lost, did but the more surely develop their means of resistance, every day gives new confidence. He thought it peculiarly fortunate for that people that they had hitherto resisted the efforts of those who were endeavoring to resubjugate them alone; it holds out a prospect that they will be able to sustain that resistance, as they have commenced it without help.

We know that the Powers of the Holy Alliance have recently pursued a course of policy conformable to their ideas of legitimacy, and of the settled order of things. It is under this influence that they have refrained from interposing in behalf of the Greeks, and the consequence of this course would eventually be beneficial to the Greeks; they would be better without this aid than to run the risk of being thrown in as the make-weights of some treaty, or used merely as the political views of these Powers might suggest.

But, Mr. B. said, there was a power existing in the world which would overawe all other power—popular opinion. The Emperors of Russia and Austria would not dare to join their forces with those of the followers of Mahomet. They would not dare to enter Constantinople for such a purpose, when the first light that would meet their eyes would be the white locks bleached in the wind, flowing from the venerable head of the Greek Patriarch, who had fallen a victim to Turkish barbarity.

It would be worth while, perhaps, to examine the course which England had taken towards this people—England, that lofty-minded, generous, and chivalrous people—England, who tells us that, to the brave, the free, and the unfortunate, her arms afford protection, and her bosom a shelter. What had England done for the Greeks? When their Minister to the Ottoman Porte had witnessed all the enormities that had been perpetrated upon them; when the agonizing shrieks of the victims of Turkish barbarity rang in his ears, Lord Castlereagh was not so Quixotic as to interfere in the concerns of foreign nations; and the documents communicated by the Executive show plainly what Lord Strangford had been doing. It seemed that the object of the British Ministry had been to place them under some one of the Princes of their nation—in fact, to make this gallant people no better than slaves. Mr. B. said he was not of the number of those who thought the true test of American patriotism consisted in violent denunciations of the British nation—he did not rest the acquisition of popularity upon that point—but he did think that the policy of the English nation, in regard to the Greeks, had been a mere counting-house policy. They had looked to their treasury, and considered the probable gain or loss, which was to result from the one course or the other. They had followed too servilely the maxim of the younger Pitt. It was a well known notion of his that the Turkish Government should always be considered and treated as one of the nations of Europe, and that this was necessary to preserve the balance of power. Perhaps such a course might once have been wise, but time often rendered it necessary to change existing systems. Had the younger Pitt lived till this time, he might have altered his views, and have offered the aid of England to succor the cause of the struggling Greeks—that aid might have been rendered in money, ships, and soldiers. But still there is enough of generous feeling in the great body of the English people to prevent Ministers from giving open aid to the Turks in this contest. It could not be believed that British aid would be rendered to the Ottoman Emperor with the consent of the English people.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

Unaided and alone, the Greeks have nobly sustained their ancient character. They had been subjected to the greatest hardships—they had beheld their infant children torn from their embrace—their wives and daughters consigned to the outrages of a brutal soldiery; and no hand had been extended to rescue them. But, in due time, a noble principle of resistance was awakened in their souls—they rose in the majesty of their strength, and confounded these men of blood. Another consideration lessened the chance that the Greeks would be again subjected. Nearly four centuries have elapsed since the Greeks were reduced to the dominion of the Turks; and, during all this time, they have existed as an entirely distinct people. So ignorant have the Turks been of their true policy, that they have neglected to unite to them, by intimacy, and similarity of habits and customs, this people who would have been their greatest strength and safe-guard. Hence, in the Ottoman Empire, there has always been two distinct nations—having no family alliances, no common sympathy or faith; differing in language, and differing in interests—and hence it is, that any internal commotion must shake such a nation to its centre—and if foreign difficulties occur, the Turkish Government must crumble to atoms—that Government which has been the terror, but is now the shame of the world.

Who could have expected that such noble virtues and such true bravery would have sprung up among an enslaved people, as has been exhibited by the Greeks? Every attempt to assert their rights has been met with violence; their implements of resistance have been wrested from their hands; the sabre has been applied, where any disaffection was manifested. Under all circumstances, it was natural enough that they should be distrustful of their own powers; but it is truly wonderful that their character should have shown out so splendid. The gentleman from New York, who spoke last, seemed to think that the modern Greeks knew very little of the ancients; and were hardly aware that such a city as Athens once was, had ever existed. [Mr. Wood here explained.] Mr. BAYLIES said he was glad to find himself mistaken in the intent of the gentleman's remark. One fact, however, would serve to show how far their intelligence extended, in relation to their ancestors. It had been asserted, from good authority, that the common Greeks were in the habit of reading Homer, in the original. If this were the case, the barbarous state of the Greeks could not be urged with much force.

Mr. B. said, he had heard many objections to the adoption of the resolution now under consideration; but the most plausible of all was, the hazard to our trade—that the scenes of piracy, which had so often disgraced those seas, might be renewed. But, he conceived there was little danger, on this head, from the Turks; they were too indolent a people; preferring to occupy their time in smoking opium in their camps. Most of the trade which was in danger of being assailed, we owe to the Greeks—the articles we get from Smyrna are mostly produced and carried there by them. If the Greeks are exterminated, that trade is exterminated with them. If the Greeks are successful, they will have possession of the very dens from which these piracies have been committed, and will be enabled to put a stop to them—they will check the stream at its very source. Since the establishment of our Government, we have paid tribute to prevent the depredations of these barbarians—and how many of our citizens have poured out their blood in conflicts with them, and endured the worst of slavery under them? We may go to our navy yard, and read upon the column there the names of those who were thus sacrificed. If these hordes should be eventually exterminated, our gain might far surpass any loss we should incur. During the four centuries that the Turkish empire has existed, what has it done to illustrate the human character? What has it done to advance the human intellect? What to promote human happiness? The Turks have held existence as the most degraded of all slaves; and have been a disgrace upon the face of the earth.

Mr. BAYLIES begged leave to recount, not in his own language, those scenes of horrors, from which his colleagues who had spoken on this subject, had seemed to recoil. This Hall, he said, had often resounded with the terrors of the tomahawk and scalping-knife; but he believed no gentleman, however conversant with Indian warfare, could unfold a tale of equal horror, with that which he was about to read to the House. [Mr. B. here read some extracts from the address of the merchants of Scio, in behalf of their distressed brethren, depicting, in strong and feeling language, the sufferings the devoted people of that island had experienced.] Comment on such a paper, said Mr. BAYLIES, is unnecessary. He hoped he should be indulged by the Committee, while he took a brief prospective view of the changes which the success of the Greeks would work in the world. If they do succeed, it will be owing to the exertions of an able, and well disciplined military force, it will be employed in wresting power from the hands of the Turks, and it will go on, even past the gates of Constantinople; and if the Christian banner once waves upon the towers of St. Sophia's, the crescent will have waned forever. If other provinces should discover the glimmering of day, they would soon be in arms, even to the Bosphorus; and they would succeed in driving back this encamped nation to the region in which they originated, never more to mar the fair proportions of that moral system, which should shelter and protect the liberties of the world.

In their attacks upon the Greeks, the Turks had been peculiarly assiduous to wreak their vengeance upon every thing connected with religion. The monasteries, the churches, and the priests, had been the first to be sacrificed. They had shown their irreverence of the Christian religion, conspicuously, amidst the desolation they had caused. If the Greeks succeed in their attempt, they will not only rescue Syria, but the Holy Land also. That land, so celebrated in the annals of our religion, rendered so illustrious by its miracles, will soon be theirs. Where the visions of the glory of the Almighty have appeared, may he cheer his chosen warriors by the cloud and the pillar of fire. For such a cause as this, the noblest deeds of chivalry had been done; for this, the Lion-hearted King of England had exerted his powers, in a manner almost too romantic for conception.

If the Greeks prevail, the Mahometan religion, a religion of the senses and the sword, will be exterminated. The Bible will take the place of the Koran. Religion, softening, elevating, and refining the human character, and strengthening the tone of moral feeling, will be established in the place of infidelity. The Greek language, a language of music, poetry, and intelligence, will soon become the language of a living nation. He would not appeal to the sympathy of the House by calling up the illustrious names which adorned the history of Greece. There was not a gentleman upon that floor, whether his mind had been disciplined in the school of the classics or not, but possessed sufficient knowledge of those names, and of that history. Whenever the light of science should be permitted again to dawn freely upon her, Greece will assume a new and glorious existence.

Her seas studded with islands, and her shores indented with harbors, she is destined to become an important commercial nation. And one principle exists, in regard to her navigation, which will have a tendency to carry it to the highest state of perfection: her vessels are owned by the persons who navigate them, like the whale ships and fishing vessels of our Northern States; and that fact is a most fortunate one, towards the commercial importance of Greece. She may, possibly, soon become the third naval Power in the world; and the wooden walls of Athens may be seen, ere long, floating upon every sea.

Another good effect from the success of the Greeks, will be the abolition of the base practice of polygamy. Woman, when she is allowed her proper rights and rank in society, and when made the friend and intimate associate of man, heightens the tone of every virtue, and elevates the moral character. Her influence was felt, even in the schools of chivalry, where men were taught not to be dishonorable; which, in barbarous nations, supplied the place of civilization, and by which, in the language of Burke, vice lost half its evils, by losing its grossness. Gentlemen have undoubtedly perceived that the Greek women already begin to feel the high distinctions of which their sex is susceptible. The Roman matrons sacrificed their jewels for the common good; and females in other countries have nobly evinced their devotion to the public cause; but no other women have discovered such high-toned feeling and patriotism as the females of modern Greece.

Mr. BAYLIES said he was not disposed to think, with the gentleman who preceded him, that gratitude was a feeling to be slighted, even when we had to recur to antiquity for its objects. We owe a deep debt to ancient Greece, and we can pay it in no other way than by the aid we can furnish to her descendants. We owe to the ancients much of the character of our institutions. The Grecian republics were practically and theoretically free.

How much money is gleaned daily from the pockets of the rich and poor to encourage missions to the Choctaws, to the East Indies, to the Sandwich Islands, to Africa, and other places; and what a matter of rejoicing is the doubtful conversion of a poor Indian considered? If a small portion of the money thus collected could be applied to this purpose, of much less doubtful merit, it would render the most essential service to the Greeks, and we might soon see them a happy people, possessing a free constitution.

If America should be the first to show her sympathy with the sufferings, and her wishes for the success, of this high-minded and injured people, she would insure to herself the love and the gratitude of the wise, the good, and the brave of every country and of every age.

On motion of Mr. COOK, of Illinois, the Committee then rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again.

THURSDAY, January 22.

Mr. RANKIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act granting to the State of Alabama the right of pre-emption to certain quarter sections of land," reported the same without amendment, and it was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. COCKE, the committee on so much of the public accounts and expenditures as relates to the Department of the Navy, were instructed to inquire and report, specially, touching the contingent expenses in the Navy Department, in the year 1817, 1818, 1819, 1820, 1821, 1822, and 1823, designating the objects of expenditure in each year, separately, and to whom paid.

Mr. COCKE supported the resolution by stating, that, from an examination of the acts providing for expenditures in the Navy Department, from $220,000 to $230,000 was appropriated to the head of contingencies, besides the appropriations for specific objects. There was now before the House a proposal to increase our Navy by the erection of ten additional sloops of war; and, if that should be adopted, and the contingent expenses increased in proportion, he did not know where we were likely to stop. The object of his resolution was to direct the Committee on Expenditures in that Department to look back and see what had been appropriated since 1817. He regretted that the officer who lately presided in that Department is no longer at its head; but it was a consolation that we have at the head of it an officer whose duty it is to look after this expenditure. While he was up, with a view to save the necessity of a farther resolution, he would invite the chairman of the committee to look also into the pay of the officers. He believed that such officers as were not on duty now receive one-half of their regular pay; he thought this was not enough, but he also understood that an arrangement is practised, by which the law on this subject is virtually evaded. Both subjects certainly invited and demanded inquiry.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy transmitting a list of the officers of the Navy of the United States, denoting the periods of their admission into the public service, the dates of their present commissions, and the time of their actual service at sea, since the 1st January, 1815; prepared in obedience to a resolution of this House, on the 16th of December ultimo; which letter and list were ordered to lie on the table.

THE GREEK CAUSE.

On motion of Mr. WEBSTER, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Greek resolution.

Mr. COOK, having the privilege of the floor, (having moved last evening that the Committee rise,) addressed the House in a speech, of which the following is the outline:

Mr. COOK said, he was quite sure that the knowledge he was to occupy the floor at this time had not excited much expectation; and he felt as sure that he was incapable of meeting, in any great degree, whatever of it might have been produced. From the course of argument pursued in relation to the resolution before the House, it seemed to be understood as a proposition fraught with the dangers of war, and calculated to involve us in difficulties with the Governments of the European world; after such views had been taken of it, it was not unreasonable for even the humblest member of the House to assign the reasons which induced him to be in favor of the measure.

He must state, in the outset, that on this subject he entirely differed in opinion from the gentleman from South Carolina; and was, therefore, opposed to the amendment he had proposed. What, in effect, was the amount of the measure proposed by that amendment? A strong and ardent wish for the success of the Greeks in obtaining the blessings of a free government. But, Mr. Chairman, is it possible, (asked Mr. C.,) that at this time of day, after our blood has run like water in that cause, that it is necessary to pass a formal resolution, to inform the world that we sympathize with a nation engaged in the same struggle through which we have so successfully passed? Do not our free institutions, do not the spirit and genius of our Government, does not our whole history and our whole national condition and character, proclaim this daily? Sir, our Chief Magistrate, in his Message, has made the declaration already, and he has therein spoken the sentiments of the whole American people. This is enough; as to a mere declaration of opinions and feelings, it is useless to go further. He preferred the resolution to the amendment. In giving his reasons for this preference, Mr. C. stated, that the President, in his Message, had informed the House, that, "from the facts which have come to our knowledge, there is good cause to believe that their enemy has lost forever all dominion over them." That Greece will become again an independent nation, that she may obtain that rank, (adds the President,) is the object of our most ardent wishes. Here, said Mr. C., we are presented with the facts of the case—they are separated forever from their barbarian oppressors, and they have a separate government of their own. The question then recurs, whether, when such a people have attained such a measure of success and independence, we, the American people, shall look on the sight with cold indifference, or whether we shall not hail them with joy? Whether we shall sit still and hold no intercourse with them, or whether we shall prepare to give some demonstration of a wish for amicable relations with them? Sir, setting aside all commercial calculations on one side, if we had not now, and never should have a single dollar's worth of commerce with their shore, the love of freedom is itself inducement enough for us to meet them with smiles and a cheering expression of our good will. But, sir, turn to the communications laid upon your table: what says our Secretary of State to the organ of this newly established government, (Mr. Luriettis?) "It will give us pleasure to learn, from time to time, the actual state of their cause, political and military." And how, sir, are we to learn this? Through newspaper articles, of doubtful authority, and distorted, according to the views or interests of the hands through which they pass? Surely not. If such information be desirable and necessary, the resolution before you provides a direct mode by which it may be obtained. It provides for the sending to that country an intelligent and respectable man, who, whether he sustain an official character or not, may possess opportunities to obtain the most authentic information of all that relates to her situation and progress. The Secretary of State, in his letter to our Minister at London, speaking of Greece, says, "the public accounts from that quarter have been, of late, very scanty; and we shall be glad to obtain any authentic particulars which may come to your knowledge." This statement, sir, is official; the resolution proposes a mode of meeting and supplying the desideratum thus officially acknowledged, and it does nothing more.

We have been told, sir, by the gentleman from New York, that this resolution is premature; that Greece is not yet in a situation to render such a measure expedient. But, sir, that gentleman's argument, and others on the same side, seem to take it for granted that the resolution aims at a coalition—an alliance. Sir, if that were the case, the resolution would indeed be at present premature; and, what is more, sir, it will at all future

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

times be equally premature; to seek foreign alliances will never be the true policy of this Government. But no such thing is in the resolution, nor is intended by its friends. Its utmost scope is diplomatic intercourse. The Greeks, as has been already insisted on, have succeeded in separating themselves from the Turkish empire; and though no Government has yet ventured to acknowledge their independence, it is no reason that we may not see fit to do so. When we acknowledged that of the South American provinces, no Government had acknowledged it before us. No, sir, the resolution is not premature. Look at the doctrine laid down for eternal ages by these United States in '76. It is the doctrine of true freedom—the doctrine of the God of nature himself. [Here Mr. C. quoted the preamble to the Declaration of Independence.] This, sir, is the doctrine which is the last hope and refuge of men, and which is destined ultimately to redeem Asia, Europe, and Africa, from their yoke of bondage. These are the principles whence has sprung, and will continue to proceed, the intellectual, moral, and social improvement of our race. On these principles Greece has dared to act; she has broken her chains, and set up for herself a free Government; in recognising that Government, we break no international law. Sir, these principles, to use the language of an eloquent statesman, are not the manufacture of the people of the United States; they are principles which have come down from the earliest periods of human existence. [Here Mr. C. read a quotation from an oration of the honorable John Quincy Adams.] If these immortal truths are to be admitted, then surely the Greeks have done only what they had a right, both moral and political, to do.

But, Mr. C. said, he was willing to argue the propriety of the resolution on another ground—on the ground of the Constitutional power and duty of Congress to regulate foreign commerce. It was a part of this superintending and fostering duty towards the commercial interests of the Union to send agents into foreign countries to obtain information and to facilitate the arrangements of trade. Suppose, instead of being what it now is, our trade with Greece was of great and important extent—Would the political state of that country deprive us of the right to regulate and protect our commerce? Suppose half Europe was in a state of political convulsion—Are we to have no commercial relations with her, or agents to take care of those relations? Must our commerce languish or be cut off whenever the States of Europe choose to quarrel with each other? Yet that is the scope of the argument. Surely, gentlemen who avow such hostility to internal improvements, will not advocate an argument which goes to paralyze the interest so dear to them—the commercial interest of these States! But if we may, without just cause of offence to other nations, protect and regulate our commerce, then, without such offence, we may send an agent to Greece.

But we are told the practical result of such a measure will be to embroil us with the European Governments; to involve us in the dissensions and contests of the multifarious jugglers of the corruptions of the Old World. But how is this shown? Has not England (herself a member, at least to a certain extent, of the Holy Alliance) sent commercial agents to South America? sent them long ago, though the independence of those Governments is still disputed by the mother country? Is this policy of Britain an infraction of the law of nations? Has any Court complained of it? Have any Cabinets protested against it? Has this involved or embroiled her with any of her neighbors? No, sir; nor is such the object, nor will such be the effect of the measure now before you; it aims merely at obtaining such authentic intelligence of the progress of the Greek cause as will enable us to judge when it will be expedient to stretch out our hand, and welcome her as a sister, into the fraternity of Republics.

The interests at present involved in the resolution, are, in my view, as nothing; the principle of the resolution, to me, is every thing. I do maintain, sir, that we have a right, without offending any Power on earth, to maintain official intercourse with any Government holding, de facto, exclusive power over its own territory; if not, we have no right to protect our commerce, and we do so by mere sufferance of others. But Greece does, at this day, exercise exclusive power over her own soil; and, therefore, we have a right to open, and to keep open, diplomatic intercourse (unquestionably commercial agency) with her. And, having the right, sir, it is our duty to act with some degree of generous feeling towards a people like this, struggling victoriously for the dearest rights of men. If we refuse it, I fear, sir, the world will think our practice at war with our professions; that we are wanting in generous and manly feeling for our fellow freemen. The gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. BAYLIES,) who last addressed you, (whose praise it is not for me to sound in this House, where its feebleness would but be lost on its object,) has truly represented the character of this Government; it is established by the hands of freemen, to protect person and property; nor is the exercise of that protection to be chained to our soil, or restricted within any bounds of territorial limitation. Wherever Americans go forth, throughout earth or sea, the mantle of their Government is over them, to protect them and theirs. They have the same right to be protected in the Archipelago as in our own harbors. Sir, before the manly, the enlightened spirit of this Government, and this age, the slave trade, that reproach on our race, has been nearly abolished. Yes, sir, the noble, intrepid spirit displayed on that subject, by this Government, has done much towards effecting this great triumph of justice and humanity. Your Executive Magistrate has told you that, within the year, our flag has not been dishonored by a single act of participation in that accursed traffic, and he has proposed to this Congress to declare it piracy. Sir, this is noble; but shall we take the wretched slave out of the hand of his pirate master, shall we then seize off the chains from his limbs, shall we then seize his spoiler and hang him at the yard arm; and yet, when a land like Greece, with all her claims on the gratitude of mankind, is trampled on by the worst of all pirates and spoilers; when her people, in thousands, are captured, carried off, and slain, and such enormities are practised on them as led the official organ of the Russian Government to declare there was sufficient ground for all Europe to combine in their defence, we must not even express an emotion of sympathy for them! We pity the captive African, and call the man that stole him a pirate; shall we not pity the suffering Greek, stolen, sold, and then butchered by the most ruthless of all oppressors? Shall he have no share, not a little share, in our expressions of compassion? In like manner, the bold spirit of this Government has set its face against the practice of privateering, and the President is now engaged in negotiation on that subject, with happy prospects of success. Why shall we be backward in this one cause of humanity while so prompt in every other?

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

Independent nations, as such, are strictly equal; if Greece has a separate and regularly organized Government, we have a right to treat her as an equal; or, if, as is beyond all doubt, she will consummate her freedom, can there be any harm in being prepared to meet, and to welcome her when free?

But the gentleman from South Carolina objects to the resolution, as having the aspect of pressing or hurrying the Executive into a measure of perhaps a hostile, at least an impolitic character. Sir, I for one, have more confidence in the wisdom, the sound discretion, of that officer, than to suppose that he can be hurried, by any resolution we may pass on the subject, into a measure that is against his judgment.

But on this point, sir, if the gentleman will but take a short retrospect, he will find on your journals, three years ago, a much stronger resolution, in the case of the South American Colonies. In that resolution this House pledged itself to support him in the proper measures for acknowledging the independence of those Governments. Yet, sir, the President did not act; he waited till what he believed was the ripe and proper time. He will do so, if you pass this resolution. He was not carried away, by what was then called the Quixotism of the House. The manly, noble step of acknowledging those Governments, was not taken till the facts in their condition sanctioned the belief that they were in a mature state for recognition. I voted then against the resolution. I thought it, myself, premature. I knew that we had no commercial treaty with Spain, and that the treaty for the cession of the Floridas was not ratified. I feared the influence of the measure on the success of our negotiations; but, sir, the issue showed that those fears were groundless. The Spanish Government did, indeed, demand, that the refusal to acknowledge her colonies should be a sine qua non in the treaty. The demand was promptly and indignantly rejected, and the treaty was concluded and ratified notwithstanding.

He would not enter into an examination of the doctrines of the Holy Alliance. It had already been done, with consummate ability, by the gentleman from Massachusetts. He coincided in the views which had been given of that combination—conspiracy, rather let him call it—against the liberties of mankind; but he could not perceive that the mission of an agent to Greece could give any just cause of offence to either of its members; nor did he think it comported with the dignity of this Government, when consulting about a measure of our own policy, to be calculating the probabilities and possibilities of the umbrage that might be taken at it by some member of the Holy Alliance.

Mr. BARTLETT, of New Hampshire, said, that the subject before the Committee had called him to the severest trial of the impulse of feeling, and the more solemn dictate of duty. Nothing but the painful result to which a deliberate consideration of the question had brought him, could have induced him to make this an exception to the good resolution he had formed, not to demand more time for the expression or explanation of his opinion, than should be necessary to answer in a single monosyllable to the call of the Clerk. And I rise, said Mr. B., at this time, not to make a speech. If there were no other obstacle, the topics are all on the other side of the House, and the inducements too. There are no Grecian wreaths—no ready penned votes of thanks—for those who may feel compelled by a sense of duty to stem the torrent of popular excitement.

I am aware, said he, that the resolution before you is one touching a country, at the very mention of which all the proudest associations of human nature are at once revived—associations co-extensive with the limits of civilized society. At the name of Greece the artist forgets the more than two thousand years that separate him from his masters, and he hails it as the land of his nativity. The scholar hourly converses with their mighty dead; and the soldier talks of their deeds of valor and heroism, as the achievements of his compatriots. It is a resolution, too, in relation to a struggle for Liberty—a word that has enchantment in itself. Liberty! to which that statue shows, as well our almost idolatry, as the source whence we derive the power to give the goddess a local habitation. Liberty! for which our kindred have bled; in defence of which there are, in this Hall, those who bear marks of the weapons of her enemies. This struggle, too, is by those of our common Christian faith, against tyrants, barbarians, murderers! It is a resolution, the subject of which has excited the sympathies of the whole nation—of all nations capable of sympathy. Our Legislatures are daily sending us pledges of their feelings. Societies are formed to aid the Greeks. Individuals are pouring out their treasures. Humanity is literally in tears at the recital of their sufferings. And there is, said Mr. B., in relation to this subject, an influence upon me, connected with the distinguished individual who moved this resolution, that I have neither the inclination nor power wholly to resist. While it has been urged upon us with a force which shows that eloquence expired not with the renowned orators of ancient Greece, we have listened with pleasure—with pride—for the American character; a pride more cherished by me, as the claim of New Hampshire—dearer still, as my own native village. Though such is the resolution, under such circumstances, and thus urged upon us, yet must I vote against it.

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

In voting against this resolution, shall I assent to be charged with forgetfulness of the debt which we, which the world, owe to the ancient seat of science and the arts—with want of ardor, of zeal, in the cause of freedom—with indifference to the sufferings of the oppressed—forbearance, tolerance, to the accursed cruelties of their oppressors? Disregard of the feeling of the nation—the sympathies of humanity? With coldness to the animated, ardent, and eloquent appeal in their behalf? No, never! Nor from such vote should it be inferred that I am enamoured of the faith, doctrine, or practice, of the Holy Alliance. On that point, said Mr. B., I can boast of no new light—no recent or sudden conversion. When the “august contracting parties,” in ’15, published that league which has received such severe and just animadversion from the honorable mover of this resolution; when our churches were profaned—Christianity outraged with te deums in honor of the “Magnanimous Sovereigns”—the mighty deliverers—the patrons of peace societies—I had no voice for the song. Yet, the Holy Alliance is not without its instruction to the world. It affords, at least, the lesson of the infernals. When good purposes scarce produce an union of effort, it should be, it is—

“Shame to men, while devil, with devil damn’d, Firm concord holds.”

But what is our ground of complaint against the Holy Alliance? It is not that they are forging new chains for their own enslaved, degraded subjects. It is, that they claim to interfere with the governments of other Powers. Against this we protest—this is our principle—this, said the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, is the American question. Keeping this principle, then, in view, let us for a moment more particularly examine the character, object, and consequences, of this resolution. As to its character, its opponents cannot differ more widely than have its friends. By the honorable Speaker, it was represented as the unpretending, inoffensive expression of good feeling and good nature—as contemplating a dove-like embassy, that was to bring us nothing but emblems of peace, evidences that the tide of civil war in the East had abated from all the face of the earth; while other of its advocates have given to it a supernatural efficacy: it was to be to the enemies of Greece more terrible than an army with banners—to carry the Cross over the Crescent to the heart of the Ottoman empire—to be a flaming sword to guard the pass of that terrestrial paradise, from which these angelic Greeks have thrust the infidel offender. Yes, more! It was to prove the very desideratum of Archimedes, the fulcrum by which we are to move the world.

Were this the resolution of a convivial club, or even of a parish meeting, it might not deserve a character more important than first given it; but, as the act of the National Legislature, although I have no faith in its doing the miracles imputed to it, still it assumes an importance in relation to its operation upon ourselves. We cannot assert a doctrine on this subject to-day, and to-morrow reverse it. This resolution is not to be passed, and to pass into forgetfulness, with the momentary excitement, that may have given it rise. It becomes the record of your nation—and, so far as it be necessary to be used against us, it is the property of all nations. So far, then, as it may change our principle or policy in our intercourse with foreign nations, it is second in importance to no measure in the power of the Legislature to adopt.

What are the reasons for adopting it? The object of this resolution? By the gentleman from Illinois, who has just resumed his seat, it is urged upon us for the purpose of obtaining information of the state of Greece. Is that the only object? If so, it is totally unnecessary. The President now has all the power necessary—and, it is to be hoped, the discretion how to use it. But the honorable gentleman who moved the resolution most distinctly disclaimed that as the principal motive or object of it. The opinion, the declaration of this House for Greece, was wanted. It was that which was to give vitality—to give importance, to the measure. As such, then, it is intended as encouragement, as aid—a pledge, a promise to Greece: or it is a mere ceremony—form—“words, mere words.”

As most respectful to its advocates, we are bound to give it a meaning and intent. It is, then, intended as encouragement, aid, or pledge of aid, to the Greeks. Where, then, is our principle? the American question? What is our complaint of the Holy Alliance? What right have we to interfere with the internal concerns of the Government of Turkey? Who are these modern Greeks? Whether they, or their enemies, are more or less Christian than the savages of this country, whom we are every day driving into the Pacific, alters not our political rights in relation to them. They are, and have been for four hundred years, the subjects of the Ottoman Sovereign; and he is their legitimate sovereign, if any potentate of Europe can claim that title. These subjects are in rebellion, and we propose to aid them.

Suppose that a certain part of the population of the United States should attempt to take the government, by force, into their own hands—and they have not been four hundred years under their masters—should the sovereign of Hayti send “an agent or commissioner” to encourage them—and we cannot deny he has a right to feel for them as much sympathy as we do for the Greeks—should we take it kindly? Would we not expound the law to him, and, if necessary to convince him of his error, resort to the ultima ratio regum? But, if we pass this, and another extraordinary resolution on your table, do we not at once furnish an authority against ourselves? Is not our principle abandoned?

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

But what particular motive have we for this measure? If we are to set up as the deliverers of the world, the champions of nations, are there no other objects of our solicitude? Is there no slavery, no misery; no call for our benevolence, our charity, our sympathy, on any other spot of earth? Not to enumerate instances, can we have forgotten that which is now history, and which, within the last ninety days, was passing before us? We have seen the most chivalric, the most gallant nation on earth, trodden under foot by an invading army, for asserting the right to choose its form of Government. We have seen her fields smoking with the blood of her citizens; we have seen her patriots and heroes fighting to the last trench, and making that their grave, for their own rights as citizens and men—and we have looked calmly on. The tortures of the Inquisition had no horrors for us. Did our indifference result from the circumstance that the subjugation of the liberties of Spain had the countenance of His Most Christian Majesty? or, was it because the foe was more formidable? No; we despise to do that against the most contemptible sachem, that we would not dare to the very beards of all the allied Sovereigns. It was our principle that restrained us. But this measure is pressed upon us as a response to the sentiments of the President, as called for by his Message. The doctrine that we are bound to respond to them is better fitted to that Government which is now the theme of so much reproach than to this House. His opinions are entitled to respect as the opinions of an experienced statesman, but as authority we are not bound even by the solemn, and surely, not by less deliberate opinions of any man.

If we seriously propose taking the Ottoman sovereignty in hand, what are our hopes of success to establish a free Government in Greece? The advocates of the measure have assured us, that the condition of the Greeks is, and for centuries has been, that of the most abject slavery; that they hold even life itself at the pleasure of their tyrants—and are such the materials with which to erect and support a Government of any sort? The moment the external pressure of the common enemy is removed, scenes of anarchy and horror will be witnessed, that may, if possible, exceed even those already exhibited.

Should they even be found capable of government, is it to be supposed that the Holy Alliance will suffer such example on their very borders? The question is already answered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. He informs you they have declared that they do not will it. Do we doubt their power? They have but to lift a finger, and the Greeks perish; with a breath they can remove them as a nation from the face of the earth.

But if this resolution cannot effect all its objects, its consequences may not be unimportant to ourselves. Is it to accomplish such wonders for the Greeks as its advocates suggest; and is the Ottoman not to discover its operation? Are the Barbary Powers so much better disciplined by peace societies, that they would not resent what we should deem good cause of war? And are we to rely for impunity upon their moderation, forbearance—their meek and forgiving temper? We shall find our commerce at once swept from the Mediterranean—our citizens in chains, or their heads upon the gate post of the palace yard. We are at war. Are we prepared for such event? When our property is captured, and the Turkish scimitar is dyed in American blood, where then will be your Greek committees—your Greek dancers? You may then pipe in vain for them to dance. Where then will be your volunteer pilgrims to the tomb of Leonidas and Socrates? They will prefer the domestic fireside to any tomb, ancient or modern, to be found in the Ottoman Empire. We ought not to refuse instruction from the experience of the late war. It was a war in defence of our own rights—for the liberties of our own captive citizens. And yet, is this to be so much more holy and righteous, that our pulpits shall not again resound with the cry of murder?

But such apprehensions, we are told, are the mere vagaries of the imagination. Human nature has not changed, and “the thing that has been, shall be.”

It has, however, been said that whatever we now do will be no new provocation, and if Turkey be set upon war, cause already exists. And we are referred to the letter of the Secretary of State for proof. Greece calls upon us for aid, for support, because contending for liberty. The Secretary answers that Government can give no aid or support; that our policy and our principle has been, is, and must continue to be, not to interfere in any way in such contests. And can this letter be quoted as a war measure against Turkey, or an argument to support this resolution?

Such, it is believed, are the inevitable consequences of the resolution, if it mean what we have supposed—aid or encouragement to the Greeks. This is to be answered only by saying, as have some of its advocates, that it means not so much—it means no such thing. Then it is mere form, and nugatory.

For what has been all this excitement? The Greeks call upon us for aid; supplicate us for their lives; and we send them—what? Ships, armies, money? No! an unmeaning resolution. Again and again, during this debate, we have been hurried into the thickest of the fight; led to the desolate hearths of the slaughtered; while hecatombs of their dead have been piled to the heavens before us; that we may insult the miseries of the living, by an unmeaning resolution. And is this being noble, generous, gallant?

If for nothing else, we are told it is proper as a mere expression of our sympathy. And is this necessary to give it an existence? Can our sympathy be sustained only by force of law; and has it no efficacy but by virtue of the enacting clause, Be it resolved, or Be it enacted?

The severe remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, upon stipulating by treaty, to do what all the laws of God and man required without, appear to me not inapplicable to such a measure. But I deprecate such a system of legislation; I deprecate such a mode of aiding friends, or annoying enemies. We are too justly reproached already

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

for our wordy valor; too deservedly nicknamed a logocracy. If a nation insult us, we send a proclamation! If an enemy is to be vanquished, or a province captured, we send a proclamation! If our Capitol is attacked, we run for our lives, but we send back a proclamation! Enough already, more than enough, have we had of this.

As legislators, we must resist the impulse of feeling. I know this is called "cold-hearted, penecalculating policy." These are easy epithets; and must pass as substitutes for reason, for argument, if nothing better can be offered. While a disregard of consequences is termed generous, noble, glorious. The word glory is the death-watch of this Republic; and the oftener we shall hear it repeated in this hall, are we reminded of our doom.

If this Government has done a foolish or ridiculous act, it has been for glory. We levy taxes, incur debts, seek adventures, fight battles, disregard consequences, we perish for glory. This is all consistent enough with the principles of the distinguished knight, who has been introduced in this discussion; but it may not be our duty to run a tilt against every windmill, merely to show how gallantly we can break a lance.

If we can find no subject of practical utility to legislate upon, let us listen once more to our long supplicating fellow-citizen, Captain Symmes; or, if his path be not lofty enough, and gentlemen would prefer the bottom of the Mediterranean to his bottomless region, then let us mount the flying machine, which occupied our deliberations on a former occasion, and "wing our way" at once to glory and renown. But, said Mr. B. I mean not to trifle on this subject.

The resolution is not necessary for information. If it is intended for aid, or encouragement, it is against our principle, and fraught with fearful consequences. If it is not for aid or encouragement, it is nugatory.

In either view I must vote against it.

Mr. FARRELY then rose; but we regret that, owing to his distant situation from our reporter's seat, we lost the introductory remarks of his speech, and heard the residue but imperfectly.

We understood Mr. FARRELY to say, that he rejoiced that the time was come, when something should at length be done, expressive of the gratitude due from the civilized world to Greece, for her philosophic principles—her republican forms of government—her classic language, and the inspiring example of her heroic valor. Yet, if he thought that the resolution before the House was about to issue in an improper interference with the policy of other nations, or a rupture of the peace of this, he would be the last to vote for its adoption. But, according to his views of national policy, there was nothing in this measure to produce such consequences. He could not see that it was any departure from the uniform steady course of this Government, on the subject of recognizing other Governments. The rule hitherto pursued, if he understood it, was to inquire simply what was the Government de facto, (throwing away all de jure questions,) and to acknowledge that Government as soon as its existence was duly certified. This plain and wise rule of policy had never, hitherto, embroiled us with any of the European nations, or their Governments. Without regarding the doctrines of legitimacy, we send public agents to Governments of every character. In France, we had accredited agents near her Government, under its republican, under its consular, under its regal, and under its imperial form, and yet no umbrage was taken—no evil consequences ensued. So, when Spain was aiming at a revolution, we sent a Minister to her Cortes, although the legitimate Government was espoused and supported by the Holy Alliance, and yet no threats were either issued or executed against us. The gentleman from New York had said, (and he was followed by the gentleman from New Hampshire,) that, to send an Envoy to Greece would be encouraging rebellion, and an infraction of the law of nations. But, was it so held, when we sent to the Cortes? In all the convulsions of other Governments, our diplomatic intercourse has remained without interruption. It had, to be sure, been never our policy to enter into their contests, but, only when those contests developed a new Government, then to acknowledge it. The resolution on the table fell far short of that which was passed in the case of South America. How could it be a war measure? Did we not send Ministers or other public agents to Spain, to Portugal, to the Netherlands, when they were struggling against their former Governments? Why not to Greece? But this resolution does not even do this, and when compared with the length we went on the South American question, it fell almost an interminable distance behind it. When we sent to Spain, did Russia, did Austria, draw the sword? Was our commerce interdicted? Were our agents insulted? Did any of those formidable dangers result, which have now been set in such awful review before the House? It must be remembered in the case of Spain (and he insisted on this case because it was a strong one, and had an immediate bearing on the main question of the policy of the measure,) that it was the Holy Alliance that urged France to crush the attempt at revolution under the Cortes; and that, in that case, we did not pass a bare resolution expressive of our good wishes, but we acknowledged the Cortes, and sent a Minister. That, so decided was the part of that Alliance against that Government, that they not merely expressed their sentiments, but embarked a force to back them; yet no rupture took place with us, or any thing that bore the semblance of one. But, in the case of Greece, the Holy Alliance embarked no force against her—nay, at one time, seemed rather in her favor; and yet here we do not propose to recognise—we do not propose to send a Minister. Gentlemen seem to think that Turkey has her eye upon us, and will watch our movements with jealousy. On that subject he had a fact for gentlemen: when our first frigate, but a few years since, entered the Dardanelles, it surpassed the wisdom of the whole Divan to tell where the country was from which she came. So much for their acquaintance with the policy of this Government.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

The gentleman from New Hampshire says that the Greeks have been for four hundred years slaves to the Ottoman Porte, are the subjects of that Government by prescriptive right, and that they are now in rebellion against their own Government. Is that the case? And does the gentleman found an argument on this ground? Sir, it proves, if any thing, too much; if it is good for any thing, it proves that we are not only not now, but not at any future time, to recognise the Greeks, if they get ever so free and ever so powerful; for they will always be viewed by the Porte as rebels; the prescriptive right to domineer over them will never be surrendered; by the European code of policy a subject can never change his allegiance; and so, no new Government that succeeds in resisting tyranny must ever be acknowledged by the United States. Sir, how would this redoubted argument have borne on our own Revolution? who would have been allowed to acknowledge us, Mr. Chairman?

The President tells you the Greeks are gone, forever gone, out of the hand of the Turk; may we not even notice them?

The measure has been well advocated as a means of gaining authentic intelligence. Our information respecting this interesting people is exceedingly imperfect—it consists of little more than casual floating rumors from the Mediterranean—(there are there no mails, as in the United States.) It is a maritime country, and it is important to our commercial interests that we should have some certain intelligence.

He believed that, with the exception of Patras, Coron, and Modon, the whole Peninsula is free—thus are insignificant specks on the map of Greece to be made the ground of denying that the Greeks have won the sovereignty of their own soil.

But it is asked, what rule are we to follow? are we to go abroad seeking adventures? No, sir; we are to follow the same rule we have followed all along. No doubt Spain will soon be trying to recover her colonies; are we to abstain from acknowledging or keeping up our intercourse with them for fear of the Holy Alliance? Sir, I assert, without fear of being proved a false prophet, that you will see England acknowledge the independence of those Governments, and establish commercial relations with them. When gentlemen tell us that we may not send an agent to a country in a state of revolution, they mistake our conforming to the effect of a rebellion, and furnishing a motive to rebellion. We are not sending an agent to Greece, to excite her to begin a rebellion against the Turk; that is begun already, and more than half finished too, sir. For one, I believe they are able to maintain their independence, and will maintain it; they will not forget their ancestors. And, as a confirmation of this opinion, I pray you, sir, to look at the last news from there. The coincidence of their modern and their ancient spirit is striking indeed. Sir, the self-same act has now been performed in Attica, that was done two thousand five hundred years ago—the inhabitants of Athens have all migrated to Salamis, to avoid subjugation.

For myself, sir, said Mr. F., in conclusion, I cannot perceive any necessity for making, at this time, a bill of rights—as long as the Holy Alliance leave us alope, we need not call them to account for their principles. It will be time enough to do that when they threaten or attack us. If, indeed, they send here, as they sent to Switzerland, a public agent to stop our press; if they make official declarations against the forms or nature of our Government; if they insist that our Presidential term is too short; that our elective franchise is too extensive, or this House too great in number, or too popular in its character, then, sir, it will be the time to make declarations, and set up principles, and act upon them too, sir. If they require us to expel from our shores every foreigner who has been the victim of their persecutions, and if force is brought to maintain the wrong, then, sir, will be the time to collect our strength, to call up our courage, to array our armies—to send forth our navies; and, if we prove too weak for the struggle, then, sir, will be the time to die, with the words of the old Roman in our mouths, victrix placuit causa divi, sed victa Catoni.

Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, said, he was pleased when he heard the gentleman from Massachusetts declare, that he should support his resolution upon the grounds of reason and argument, and not by mere appeals to the feelings. The individual who conducts his private affairs according to the dictates of passion, always conducts them erroneously; and so, in regard to public and political business, the ebullitions of passion were calculated to involve the concerns of a nation in ruin. Gentlemen who feel such a strong sentiment in favor of assisting the Greeks, might go to the post office, and satisfy their sympathy, in remitting their dollars and cents for that purpose.

The gentleman had declared, that the principle contained in his resolution was opposed to the policy of the Holy Alliance; and that society had arrived at that point, when the power of public opinion was predominant over every other power. Mr. R. said, he had searched this subject to find, if he could, what effect it would have in favor of the Greeks. It is merely a cold and calculating proposition. It provides, that when the President should think fit to send an agent among the Greeks, the money shall be appropriated for the purpose. Is there any thing in this, expressive of an opinion in support of the Greeks, and adverse to the principles laid down by the Holy Alliance? But, admitting it goes so far—is it contended that it will have the effect to induce that Alliance to abandon one of its principles of action? Could they ever be induced to surrender those principles? Would the shipwrecked mariner ever quit his hold upon the plank which kept him from sinking? When the Holy Alliance was first established, the principles of liberty were fast pervading the people of Europe—and it was established to prop their tottering thrones. They cannot abandon those measures by which they retain their existence. Let us see what effect this proposition will have upon the Greeks. If they have determined to maintain themselves free, and to apply their whole force to this purpose, this measure, which is proposed to the House, will do them no good. And is it not probable that it may lead the other Powers to crush the Greeks at once; while we are not near enough to render them any assistance? And will the arbitrary Power of Turkey understand the difference between a simple agent, and a Minister? They may consider it as amounting to a declaration of war; and the individual who is sent out, as the agent, might fall into their hands, and be assassinated—and every American citizen who comes within their reach may suffer the same fate. From the want of discrimination, in respect to the character of our agent, on the part of the Turks, the utmost distress may come upon our commerce, in that part of the world; and we are asked to involve ourselves in these difficulties, for the sake of a measure, which will, in reality, do the Greeks no good. It would be a departure, too, from the policy of all nations. So soon as they were believed to be independent, it would be proper to send an agent; and when their independence was known to be established, it might be recognised. Until then, no act should be done, on the part of our Government; otherwise, the utmost anarchy might be introduced into our national concerns. The present resolution was in opposition to what had hitherto been the policy of the Government. With South America, whose situation was much more important to us than that of Greece, we had pursued a different course. When the South American States were understood, from other sources, to have achieved their independence, the President despatched messengers to ascertain the fact; and when their success was well established, their independence was acknowledged; and no other course ought to be pursued in this case. We should obtain our information without the hazard of a war. Are we to adopt a course, in relation to the European Governments, which we should not suffer them to pursue towards us? We surely ought not to interfere in their concerns, when we forbid their interference with ours.

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

The field which gentlemen had opened, in the course of this discussion, was unlimited; it would lead us into difficulties with half the inhabitants of the world. If we were to engage in wars against all the infidels upon earth, where power was held by them, we should always be engaged in crusades for the protection of holy land. Europe had been involved in the most ludicrous projects by this spirit of crusading. If we are bound to interfere always when the Greek Christian is in distress, why should we not render assistance to those who are suffering, not only the slavery of body, but of mind also? Our policy has always been, not to interfere in such cases. We should suffer Christianity to be disseminated by the power of its own mild and beneficent principles; it is not necessary to wage war in its behalf. If the expression of the opinion of this House is worth any thing, it should carry with it an irresistible weight. If the resolution should pass, only by a bare majority, would it be taken for a general public expression? It appeared evident, Mr. R. said, that it could not now pass unanimously; we have the opportunity of expressing our own private feelings of charity and of sympathy in the cause of the Greeks. The people have availed themselves of this opportunity in a proper manner; they have pursued an honorable course; they have furnished supplies in money, arms, and ammunition; and these contributions would have their influence in due time.

Mr. R. said, he had endeavored to show that this measure would be injurious to the Greeks, as it would turn the attention of the European Powers, to repress their attempts for freedom; that it would be injurious to ourselves, because it was stepping out of our common course of policy, and would involve us in difficulties; and that it was not necessary, until the Greeks should have obtained their independence. For these reasons he was opposed to the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, or the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina. Mr. R. thought the President competent to take such measures as circumstances might require. He hoped some course would be adopted, to avoid a direct decision on the question at the present time, as he believed such a decision would not produce any good. If it should involve the country in a war, how would members justify themselves to their constituents? What language would they address to the people? The people would say, that they alone had a right to act upon the subject, and they have exercised that right, in the best possible manner. With these views, he should oppose the resolution.

Mr. Houston was aware that he might be trespassing upon the patience of the House, in protracting this debate, as it was not the first or the second day of the discussion; but still he felt so deeply impressed with the importance of the subject, that he hoped every member, who wished it, would be allowed time to express his opinion. If he could see the evil consequences which gentlemen had anticipated from the adoption of this resolution, he certainly would not have risen to advocate it. But, as he did not perceive that such difficulties could result from it, and as he did not see its incompatibility with the policy of this or other nations, he was disposed to give his feeble aid to the subject. Some gentlemen seem to think, that, if we recognise the Greeks in the manner proposed by this resolution, it would have a tendency to stimulate the European Powers to hostility against them. He could not believe that, so far as this proposition goes, it could have any such effect. If it were the policy of the European nations to aid the Ottoman Power, they will pursue that course without reference to us. And can it be supposed that the passage of this resolution will bare another Turkish scimitar against the Greeks? No. The Greeks are struggling for their liberty, and the Turk is determined to exert all his power to prevent it, all the force of his empire is at his disposal, and it will all be turned to the subjection of the Greeks. All his resources will be directed against that devoted people. They have determined to stand up manfully, and perish before they submit. Let us, then, as far as we can, consistently with our relations with foreign nations, hail them as brethren, and cheer them in their struggle. The screams of this agonized and suffering people have reached us, and penetrated from one end of the continent to the other. So far as our policy will allow, let us encourage them. What sentiment has the President expressed upon this subject? Does he say that we should not interest ourselves for the Greeks? Does he not, rather, express the deepest solicitude concerning their affairs? Is there not a spontaneous feeling in their behalf among the people? And shall this House, which represents the people, be silent on the subject? and for fear of offending the crowned heads of Europe, shall we not act? We should not be disposed to regard them much. If they have determined to crush the Greeks, will they not do it in defiance of us? And we have little need to care for the Porte. Has he ever paid any regard to us? Has he ever rendered us any service as a nation? Does our flag protect our property upon the Bosphorus? Has not our commerce rather been protected by the Greeks? Will he, who has totally disregarded the laws of nations, care for any policy but his own? We can expect no justice from that quarter, but what we acquire from their fear.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

Mr. H. said if he could believe that this resolution would bring war upon the country, he would be the last member to support it. No one could deprecate the horrors of war more than he did. He did not wish to provoke war with the Ottoman Power, nor with the crowned heads of Europe. If it was the policy of the other nations to oppose or support the power of the Porte, they would do it. The Allied Powers have sufficiently proved that they are not very solicitous to preserve the rights of other nations. The Chesapeake proclaimed to us that one of them was not more careful of those rights even than the Ottoman.

Are we to expect any advantage from not expressing our opinion? But it is declared that we should not enter into an alliance with the Greeks. Nor do we wish to do it; we wish to preserve our regard for the rights of other nations. It is said that this measure will be of no advantage to the Greeks. Mr. H. said he differed from this conclusion. It would be an advantage to show them that they are not an isolated people. It will be telling them that America, the freest and happiest country in the world, has heard of Greece, and sympathizes with her, in the midst of her misfortunes. It will be encouraging them to stand like freemen, and to fall, if they must fall, like men. And there is yet Grecian blood left to thrill with joy and quicken its circulation at this cheering reflection. Hearts that have bled for years, under oppression, will be touched with sympathy. It will tell to Greece, that, while the Holy Alliance is standing, with hands off, and the Porte is butchering her armies, her venerable sires, borne down by the weight of years, her matrons, her unviolated virgins, and helpless infants, it will tell her, by the declaration of Congress, that we regard her situation; and that, although our own policy interdicts us from acting in her behalf, yet we recognise her among the nations of the earth. Were we not the first to acknowledge the independence of South America? Did we wait till the Holy Alliance had authorized us to do that? Or did we extend a helping hand, like men, towards those States? Why may we not pursue the same policy now? The principle is the same. Principles remain unchanged and eternal. The distance of the people from us does not alter the principle.

If this resolution is adopted, the President will be left free to exercise his sound discretion on the subject. He will be able to compare and analyze the business, and to act as circumstances may require. The House is not about to say to him that he must despatch an agent to the Greeks to-morrow; but that he must use his judgment on the subject. If the resolution is rejected, it will seem like a want of confidence in the Executive. By his long experience he is amply entitled to this confidence; and we may rest assured that he will not exercise it inconsiderately, nor do any thing to involve the country in a war.

Then, if there is nothing hostile in the resolution, we may venture to give this authority to the President. Mr. H. said he entertained a high regard for the Greeks, and felt as much zeal in their cause as was consistent with the purposes of legislation. He wished that she should know that the American nation felt for her. He would not that this Government should send her munitions of war, for that would amount to an open act of aggression; but no such construction, he thought, could be put upon this resolution. The people of Greece had expressed a wish to alter their Government, and according to the fundamental principles of our institutions, they have a right to do it. If they rise, in their majesty, and determine to be free, will an American Congress say that they must wait for our acknowledgment of her independence until the Allied Powers have seen fit to acknowledge it? They will not be disposed to do it soon. It is this very dissemination of freedom that is planting thorns in their pillows. We can pursue principles of justice, independent of all their alliances.

We have been told that we should have a care how we look for glory—that glory is the death-watch of liberty. Mr. H. said he did not know how this remark was meant to be applied. If he understood what was the true meaning of glory, it was that noble attribute of man that appealed to the whole community to give force to heroism and patriotism. If that were the death-watch of liberty, he wished to hear it resound through the country. It was false glory that bade a man seek self-aggrandizement; and this description of glory was indeed to be dreaded.

Mr. H. apprehended no danger from the crowned heads of Europe, on the subject before the House. He considered it a very important expression of sympathy in favor of a people that held the strongest claims upon us. After the principle we had adopted, in regard to South America, he thought we could not be regardless of the cause of Greece. He did not expect an unanimous expression of

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

JANUARY, 1824.

this opinion ; but, as it could be productive of no evil consequences, he hoped the resolution would pass the House.

The Committee then rose, on the motion of Mr. CUTHBERT, who made the motion that he might deliver his sentiments to-morrow, with the deliberation which the subject calls for.

FRIDAY, January 22.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year 1824 ; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE, from the same committee, reported a bill making appropriations for the military service of the United States for the year 1824 ; [pay of the Army] which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill making appropriations for the support of Government.

Mr. RICH, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of Charles Humphrey, accompanied by a bill for his relief ; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NEWTON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to allow a salary to the collector of the port of entry for the district of Pensacola, and to abolish the office of surveyor ; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NEWTON, from the same committee, reported a bill to abolish the office of Measurer ; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made an unfavorable report on the memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, on behalf of a company of rangers in the late war, under the command of Captain James Biggar ; which report was ordered to lie on the table.

Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the consideration of the memorial of the officers engaged in the late war against the Seminole Indians, as, also, of the resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, on behalf of the said officers ; and that the said memorial and resolutions be committed to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill from the Senate explanatory of the act of the 14th of May, 1822, for the relief of the officers and volunteers engaged in the late campaign against the Seminole Indians.

On motion of Mr. TOMLINSON, the Committee of Commerce were instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing so much of "An act establishing Navy Hospitals," as separates the Navy Hospital Fund from the Marine Hospital Fund ; and of providing that the amount which shall hereafter be deducted, by the Secretary of the Navy, from the pay of the officers, seamen, and marines, of the Navy of the United States, by virtue of "An act in addition to 'An act for the relief of sick and disabled seamen,' shall be paid quarterly to the Secretary of the Treasury ; and expended for the relief of sick and disabled seamen, in pursuance of the several acts making provision for sick seamen.

On motion of Mr. CONDUCT, it was,
Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire how far it may comport with the public good, to change the mode of compensation to navy officers, substituting a gross sum per annum, in lieu of all allowances now made.

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire how far it may be expedient and proper to change the mode of payment to army officers, substituting a gross sum per annum, in lieu of such pay and emoluments as are now allowed.

Mr. CONDUCT in supporting these resolutions observed that, as the officers of the Army and Navy are now compensated, their support consists partly of monthly pay, and partly of rations and other allowances. It was somewhat difficult, as things now stood, to ascertain exactly what each officer actually received ; and, from information he had received on the subject, he was led to believe that, in some cases, they received more, while in others, they got less than was proper ; and, also, that the compensation was not duly proportioned to the services rendered ; as one striking instance of which, he said that, if he was correctly informed, a surgeon in our Navy, when at sea, in the full discharge of his duties, and exposed to all their dangers, received a compensation of eight hundred dollars, while the same officer, when on shore, and off duty, received, in salary and perquisites, about one thousand two hundred dollars. It was certainly worthy of inquiry, whether this mode of compensation had not better be changed to a gross sum by the year.

On motion of Mr. CONWAY, the Committee on Indian Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the President of the United States to purchase of the Indian tribes west of the State of Missouri and Territories of Arkansas and Michigan, as much territory as will be sufficient to give room for those tribes of Indians, within the present States and Territories, who may wish to migrate westwardly.

On motion of Mr. CONWAY, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of reviving the law of the 25th of March, 1816, relating to settlers on the lands of the United States.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications, viz :

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement showing the expenditure of the money appropriated for the contingent expenses of the Military Establishment, for the year 1823 ; which was ordered to lie on the table ;

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a statement showing the amount of money remaining to be paid by the purchasers of public lands prior to 1st July, 1820, designating

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

the amount due for lands purchased in each State, made in obedience to a resolution of the 30th December ultimo; which was referred to the Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill to provide for the speedy extinguishment of the debt due by purchasers of public lands prior to the 1st of July, 1820;

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting information in relation to a robbery of the land office at Vandalia, in the State of Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

THE GREEK CAUSE.

The House then again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resumed the consideration of Mr. WEBSTER'S resolution, for sending an agent to Greece, and the amendment thereto proposed by Mr. POINSETT, which proposes to limit the resolve to the expression of a sentiment decisively favorable to the Greek cause.

Mr. CUTHBERT, (who had, by the custom of the House, the right to the floor, having last evening moved that the Committee rise,) in introducing his remarks, observed something in relation to his state of bodily health, which we did not distinctly hear; but he said that, even if he could have supposed that any observations of his would have any weight with the House, he had the less reason to regret his state, either of body or mind, after the eloquent speech delivered by the gentleman from New Hampshire, (Mr. BARTLETT.) He believed there were few gentlemen present, yesterday, whose minds had not received a strong impression from that speech; he felt certain that it had a sensible influence on the opinion of this House, and, therefore, (being on this question of similar opinions to that gentleman,) he regretted the less any disability of his own.

He believed, in the first place, that it would be conceded by gentlemen on the other side, that this was a measure which had its origin, principally, in feeling. That a very strong popular excitement did exist at this moment on the subject, could not be denied; and how far the feelings of a virtuous, intelligent, and reflecting people, ought to influence their legislators, he should not undertake to determine; he did not, for a moment, suppose that a legislative body was the only assemblage of citizens who were competent to judge and determine a question of this kind. But there was a wide and important distinction between assemblages of the people, gathered together in masses without responsibility, and those who were bound by their office and their oath to deliberate with their calmest judgment, and whose decisions were to be followed with momentous consequences.

The people, gathered in large assemblies, feel a generous pride in expressing their warmest feelings. The noble glow of sympathy catches from heart to heart; the feeling rises with the numbers who partake in it, till each man feels his bosom swell with a big emotion, the result of the congregated feeling. But, sir, while such meetings are held, and such emotions experienced, do the people, sir, expect that you shall be governed, in solemn acts of legislation, by the resolutions they pass? Were you to yield yourselves to such a governance, you would betray the confidence reposed in you. Not that you have more wisdom than they, but that you are intrusted with the administration of their Government. They tell you that they love liberty—that they deplore the calamities and sufferings of the oppressed Greeks—that they rejoice and exult in all their triumphs. Well, sir, what is the conclusion? This: that if sound wisdom shall direct you to engage in any active measures on the subject, you have an ardent and an energetic people to back you. Ought you not to pause, Mr. Chairman, before you commit such a people, noble, gallant, generous, now enjoying unprecedented happiness, and in the full possession of all the blessings of peace, to all the privations, the untried horrors of war? To judge of your duty, select any individual who has been a member of one of these popular meetings, who has been the most enthusiastic of all who were present, and who there passed resolutions, couched in the most glowing language; select him from that meeting, (where he was without responsibility,) place him in the solitude of his chamber, tell him he must now act, and act under the whole responsibility of the happiness or the distress of his country—passion departs—he begins to pause, and to reflect, and he invokes, not passion, but wisdom, for his guide. It is thus that these very people expect and demand of you to act.

What does such a reflection naturally suggest to us? That we should make a comparison between our Government, and those under which this very nation of the Greeks once lived. Shall I be told that it is but the declamation of a school boy to talk of ancient Greece? I answer; that sentiment is worthy only of those enslaved countries where it is the fashion, because it is the interest of their oppressors, to cast every species of ridicule and sneer upon republican governments. Shall we, on this account, deny ourselves the solid benefit of the experience of other republics? Those who live under the monarchical governments of Europe are liable to be misled on this subject, by the cant of their writers—from the humblest journal of the day, to the largest and weightiest tome that engrosses the shelf of their libraries, all hold one language—a regular war is waged with the principles of free government; if we join in the adoption of such anti-republican sentiments, we aid this band of conspirators in the servile design of degrading and debasing the human family. No, sir. We are warranted in appealing for facts to aid us to the history of Greece—it is our duty to look carefully at that history. And what do we find, sir? that the Grecian Republics had all the soul and fire of liberty, but that they wanted intelligence, and a regular plan in its enjoyment and its preservation. Hence, we see them split up into contending factions; and so bitter were their mutual hatred and animosity, and so fierce the rage of their contests, that, in some instances, whole communities were destroyed, wars of annihilation were carried on between neighboring

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

States, and scenes occurred on the Grecian soil, over which freedom and humanity mingle their tears. But how, sir, is the case with us? Under an administration of mild and equal laws, we are at this hour in the enjoyment of the utmost practicable measure of personal liberty. We are blessed with profound peace, and the humblest and most timid man among us is in the full possession of absolute security in person and property.

Sir, this night every weak and shrinking female, every helpless infant in all this land, lies down in peace, and may sink into unbroken slumber, conscious of being safe from harm. Tomorrow, every vigorous man, with robust limb, with active and enterprising mind, will be engaged with ardor in all that can advance his own and his country's prosperity, in all that enlightens and ennobles man. The sustaining energy of a free Government pervades the land, and raises and strengthens the character of all who inhabit it. In such a country, wars can never be waged for glory and empire. The most ambitious leader, who would persuade us into a war, must profess that it is a war for the right; he dare not even breathe the sentiment that it is undertaken only for glory. Surely, this reflection ought to prove to us a warning on an occasion like this; for, be it remembered, that, by all the acts in which it is engaged, this infant nation is stamping its character for future ages.

There is one question I would ask of this Committee—I would ask it emphatically. You owe to Greece a debt which you ought to repay in kind. Is it a debt for physical aid? Is it for any thing she ever did for us by physical force? No, sir; it is for moral aid; for the force of her example; it is for the spirit and sentiments of her writers, which have passed into our mind; it is for the lessons she has taught us in the love and the defence of freedom; it is for the warnings we have received from her misfortunes; for the spirit, in a word, that her works and her words have poured into our souls. What, then, is our proper, our best return? It is to raise her depressed children by the example of our free Government—a Government possessing some excellencies and advantages that hers never had, even in their brightest day. This is the example we are to set them, and not that of foreign wars. We are to show them the blessings of freedom, as reduced to a practical and a permanent form—to show them a people happy, and proud of the lot they enjoy.

How cautious, then, should we be that we do not, by bringing disaster on our hitherto happy experiment, blast the rising cause of freedom (check it, rather, for rise it will) throughout the world. Let us take care that we do not make our case a warning against free governments, instead of the strongest of arguments in their favor. And what, sir, is the process by which you are to spread the influence of your free principles and free institutions? Not by wars, but by a friendly intercourse with Europe, by writings, by personal conversation, and by the speeches of your statesmen. By means like these, the rapid contagion of enlightened principles will spread from land to land.

Men easily imbibe right principles on politics, when once they are suggested to them. The plainest and the humblest peasant can be made to understand that men are born equal, and have equal rights; all he needs is to be convinced that these principles, so true and so plain in themselves, can be carried out into a practical government. The literati of Europe know this, and some of them spread the truth in their writings. Their statesmen know it, too, and some of these, too, recommend it. The honest common people acknowledge the truth, and long for its benefits. They have the demonstration of the truth brought to their very senses: they see and know our seamen, our merchants, and their families, and they know that there does exist a country that fosters in its bosom a free, proud, and energetic people, who know how to protect their rights and their honor. Such a state of things now exists that these people inhale some notions of freedom with the very atmosphere they breathe—and as they breathe it they come to love those rights. Despotism, on the other hand, is founded on the ignorance, prejudice, timidity, and depression of the people: but that ignorance is dissipating—those prejudices are weakening—that fear is dispelling—the people are fast rising in the scale of being. How unwise would it be, nay, how wicked, to abandon all these gradual but powerful effects of our Government and condition, in order to assume another character. What will be the effect of war on this influence? It will counteract it at once, by conjuring up in opposition all the angry and resentful passions. Why should we so effectually advance the dearest interests of despotism? Think you that their monarchs will fail to direct these passions against the cause of freedom? Sir, we can give no physical, no warlike aid to liberty that will not injure her cause.

There is another consideration that calls upon us to pause and reflect, before we take any step that may commit the nation. Monarchy can go to war from policy or ambition, and if they do not find it suits their views they can, with almost equal ease, withdraw from the contest. But it is far otherwise with Republics. In these, before you enter into a war, you must convince the mass of the nation that the war is virtuous and just in its principles, and unavoidable without disgrace. When a free people have become, by reflection, convinced of this, they become reckless of consequences; you rouse a deeper spirit; you concentrate a mightier wrath than a despotic Government can ever know. There is a moral force that mingles with the physical, and propels it with redoubled energy. But, if the war is unreasonable, unjust, unnecessary, when any calamity happens in its prosecution they at once look back to its origin, re-examine its principle; they ask, in a spirit of discontent and indignation, why was it not avoided; and they wreak their vengeance on its authors. You cannot, then, enter with too much caution on steps that have war in their probable or possible results. If you go to war in a proper spirit, and on sufficient and solid grounds, your people will resolve on success or ruin; but if you enter on it lightly, after a while the spirit of the people flags; they abandon you; you have to yield without success; the temper and tone of the nation is lowered, and its character permanently injured. Another question was, what effect such a measure as that now proposed was likely to produce on our relations with the European Powers. Britain seems to have learned from us a salutary lesson of neutrality, and she will observe it as long as she can. You cannot get that Government into a Spanish or a Greek war. At the very moment you would weaken yourselves by entering into this distant contest, that politic and experienced Government is husbanding its resources and accumulating its strength. You cannot doubt that they cherish a deadly hostility against you; that they are jealous of your rising greatness; that they remember well your naval triumphs, and that war will one day be the issue. Shall you, in the meanwhile, enter with levity, (in such a case, I repeat, that levity is wickedness,) and run the hazard of an unnecessary and impolitic war? Surely, you felt, a few years since, enough to warn you into sobriety and caution. You saw the struggle which arose, amidst the heavy embarrassments of the country, between the advocates of economy and those who were determined to support the institutions of the country at every expense. You know, sir, what a painful scene was then exhibited in this House. Shall we renew such scenes? Is this Committee willing to run any risk of their renewal? Can you doubt, if such embarrassments should again recur, that your crafty enemy would seize upon the crisis to attack you? No, sir; let us cherish peace; let us pay our debts; let us accumulate treasure; then your enemy will be less willing to assail you, while you will be the better prepared to meet him.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

All the reasoning that we have heard respecting the Holy Alliance goes evidently on this assumption, that there exists to us some danger of war with those Powers. This has been shown to be the tendency of all their doctrines. Now, sir, if, as gentlemen argue, there is danger of the allies attacking us here on our continent, while we do nothing to disturb them, is there not, on gentlemen's own ground, still more reason to apprehend it if you go to their continent? They threaten us, it seems, because we are republics, though on this side of the Atlantic. Will they not do more, if we cross the Atlantic to place a republic in the very heart of their kingdoms? And will they not say to unhappy Greece, who lies virtually at their mercy, "if you rely on these Western republicans, and call them in to your aid, we will teach you that such interference shall be ruin to any who invite it; and, as a warning and an example on this subject, we will pour down upon you our accumulated vengeance." Yes, sir, as surely as you go to the Old World to set up a fortress of liberty, these despots will raze it to the very earth, if it were only to stop the precedent.

Suppose, sir, that the Turk, ignorant of what your exact intentions towards the Greeks may be, should seize your agent and put him to death; should massacre your seamen and resident citizens, and thus lay you under the immediate necessity of going to war with him. Can you believe that those allies would long remain without a pretext for mingling in the quarrel? Some question of blockade—some search—some implied interference—some excuse for hostilities? Remember your old enemy the Briton. If he gets your little fleet shut up in the Mediterranean, on any quarrel forged, he sweeps it from the ocean. That will at once throw you back a century. Remember, sir, the seed of revenge is there; and as soon as opportunity is furnished, depend upon it, sir, that seed will germinate.

There is another view of this matter. It is not only imprudent to adopt the proposed measure, but it is equally impolitic. The President is already authorized to employ agents of the kind contemplated. By legislating you publish it, and set all who are concerned to prevent your object on their guard—you put your opponents on the alert. You go out of your sphere, and interfere with the President in the duties of his own department, by making the proposed appropriation in a particular case and in none other; you seem to direct the President to send in one case, and not to send in another. But the measure, if done at all, had better be done silently, without inviting notice or resistance.

One word more, Mr. Chairman, and I have done. Have those who oppose the measure no sympathy for the Greeks? Yes, sir, we love their cause; we wish, we long, we yearn to witness its success. When they triumph, we exult at it; when they are unfortunate, we grieve over it. But because these are the feelings of our hearts, must we be indiscreet? We are intrusted with a nation that is proud of its sympathies with the oppressed on every foot of earth's surface—a people not selfish and narrow minded, but full of the finest and the sublimest sensibilities; but, surely, sir, the happiness and the dignity of such a people are not vainly to be put at hazard. Their souls are softened by their own happy privileges, and they long to impart them to the wretched; but shall we, therefore, precipitate them into difficulty and plunge them in sufferings and dangers? Sir, I am satisfied the measure proposed to us will do the Greeks no good—may do them much harm. That it hazards every thing in relation to ourselves, and in endangering us endangers the best hopes of the rest of the world; for so signal, so sublime, is the station now given us by Heaven, that with us is identified the bliss or the misery of a large portion of our species.

Mr. CLAY then rose, and commenced his speech by distinctly stating the original resolution, as moved by Mr. WEBSTER, and the amendment proposed by Mr. POINSETT. The resolution proposed providing the means to defray the expense of a mission, whenever the President, who knows, or ought to know, the dispositions of all the European Powers, Turkish or Christian, shall deem it proper to send one. The amendment goes to withhold any appropriation, and to make a public

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

declaration of our sympathy with the Greeks, and our good wishes for their cause. And how, sir, (asked Mr. C.,) has this simple, modest, unpretending, this harmless proposition been treated? It has been argued, as if it proposed aid to the Greeks; as if it proposed the recognition of their Government; as an act of unjustifiable interference; as a measure of war. And those who thus argue the question, while they themselves give unbounded range to their imagination, in conceiving and setting in array the monstrous consequences which are to grow out of so simple a proposal, impute to us who are its advocates, Quixotism! Quixotism! While they are taking the most extravagant and unlimited range, and arguing any thing and every thing but the question before the House, they accuse us of enthusiasm, of giving the reins to feeling, of being carried away by our imagination. No, sir, the proposition on your table is no proposition for aid, nor for recognition, nor for interference, nor for war.

I know that at least some of the objections to the original proposal are occasioned by the source from which it has proceeded. There are individuals in this House, who look at the mover of this resolution, as if its value or importance was to be measured by inquiring who brought it forward. Sir, I have long had the pleasure of knowing the honorable gentleman who originated this resolution—I have sometimes had the pleasure of acting with him; and I would suggest to those to whom I have alluded, that, if they seek to be regarded as the sentinels of freedom, they must disregard the source from which any measure favorable to its interest may happen to have proceeded, and must take it up on its own intrinsic merits. If a gentleman who happens to belong to a different party, in political sentiment, shall bring forward a proposition fraught with liberal principles and noble sentiments, is it to be rejected for his sake? If this is the case, we cease to be Republicans, and those who act on principles the reverse of ours, will be the men who truly deserve that name; and, sir, if all Republicans must oppose this doctrine and all Federalists advocate it, I for one, should cease to be a Republican, and would become a Federalist.

Mr. Chairman, is it not extraordinary that, for now, these two years, the President of the United States should have been allowed, not only without censure, but with universal applause, to express all the feelings which either the resolution or the amendment on your table go to sanction or to declare? So far is this from having met the disapprobation of the American people, that, from Maine to Georgia, and from the Atlantic to the Gulf of Mexico, the sentiment of approbation has blazed with the rapidity of electricity! That it is felt with the deepest intensity, that it is expressed in almost every possible form, and that it increases with every new day and passing hour. And, sir, are we alone to be insulated from the common moral atmosphere of the whole land? Shall we shut ourselves up in apathy, and separate ourselves from our country? from our constituents? from our Chief Magistrate?

The measure, sir, has been unwarrantably magnified. Gentlemen speak of the watchful jealousy of the Turks, and seem to think that the lightest movements in this body will be matter of speculation at Constantinople. He could assure the gentlemen that the European Powers attached no such vast importance to our acts and deliberations as some seemed to suppose. The Turk will in all probability never hear of the gentlemen's names who either advocate or oppose the resolution. The resolution is certainly not without its value, but that value is wholly a moral value; it throws our little tribute into the vast stream of public opinion, which, sooner or later, must regulate the physical action upon the great interests of the civilized world. But, sir, rely upon it the Turk is not about to declare war because this unoffending proposition has been offered by my honorable friend from Massachusetts, of whom, however eminent in our own country, the Sublime Porte has never yet heard. The Allied Powers are not going to be thrown into a state of alarm by a resolution appropriating two or three thousand dollars to send an agent to Greece.

The question has been argued as if the Greeks were likely to be exposed to increased sufferings in consequence of such a measure; as if the Turkish scimeter would be sharpened by its influence, and dyed deeper and yet deeper in Christian blood. Sir, if such is to be the effect of the declaration of our sympathy, it must have happened already. That expression is very fully and distinctly given, in the Message of the President to both Houses of Congress, not only this year, but last. And I would again remind the gentleman, that it is the President's Message, and not any record of our debates, that goes the rounds of the European Cabinets. This document is translated into their several languages, and is read by the Ministers of State, and possibly by some of the Sovereigns themselves: possibly by the Divan; but our resolutions are all for domestic use—for home consumption; they never will meet either royal or imperial eyes. In that Message, the President, after a most eloquent and touching representation of the feelings excited by the Greek insurrection, tells you, that the dominion of the Turk over that people is gone forever, and that the most sanguine hope is entertained that they will succeed in establishing their independence. Well, sir, if this is the fact, if their independence is almost achieved, if the Allied Powers themselves, possibly before we shall again meet in this Hall, may acknowledge that independence, is it not fit to make provision that our President may be among the foremost in that acknowledgment—or, at least, not among the last?

But, sir, so far from this resolution being likely, if passed, to produce injury to the Greeks, it is likely to have a directly opposite effect. Sir, the Turk, with all his power, and in all the elevation of his despotic throne, is at last but man; he is made as we are, of flesh, of muscle, of bones, and sinews; he can feel; and, sir, he has felt the uncalculating valor of American freedom in some of his dominions; and when he is made to understand, that not only the Executive of this Government, but that this nation—that our entire political fabric, base, column, and entablature, rulers and people, with heart, soul, mind, and strength, are all on the side of the nation he is crushing, he will be more likely to restrain, than to increase his atrocities upon suffering and bleeding Greece.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

The gentleman from New Hampshire has made, on this subject, a very ingenious, sensible, and ironical speech, an admirable debut for a young member, and such as I hope we shall often have repeated on this floor. But, sir, permit me to advise my young friend to remember that declaration, “sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof,” and when the resolution which I have had the honor of laying on the table shall come to be discussed, I hope he will not think it sufficient to say, as he has now done, that the measure, or the argument in its support, is “a very extraordinary one,” but that he will then let us hear an argumentative speech to prove that it is our duty to lay prostrate every fortress of human hope, and to see with complacency the last outwork of liberty taken. This, however, is foreign to the question now before the House.

It has been said, that the proposed measure will be a departure from our uniform policy with respect to foreign nations—that it will provoke the ire of the Holy Alliance—and will, in effect, be a repetition of their own offence, by an unwarrantable interference with the domestic concerns of other Powers. No, sir; not even if it proposed, which it does not, an immediate recognition of Grecian independence. What has been the uniform policy and practice of this Government, from the days of Washington to this moment? In the case of France, President Washington and his successors received Genet, Fauchet, and all who followed them, whether sent from King, Convention, Anarchy, or Emperor. Sir, the rule we have followed has ever been this: to look at the state of the fact, and to recognise that Government, be it what it might, which was in actual possession of sovereign power. When one of these Governments was overthrown, and a new one established on its ruins, without embarrassing ourselves with any principles involved in the contest, we have ever acknowledged the new and actual Government as soon as it had positive existence. Our simple inquiry has been, which is the Government de facto? An example has recently been furnished in relation to the Government of Spain. When the foreign Ministers were driven or retired from Madrid, and refused to accompany Ferdinand to Cadiz, our Minister sought at that port to present himself to the Constitutional Ferdinand—why? This Government held Ferdinand to be the actual King. Did this produce any declaration of war? Were any diplomatic notes ever received complaining of this proceeding? Nothing like it, sir. The lines are so plainly marked in which we are to go, that there is no mistaking them. We are to engage in no interference with their disputes, no contests for either party, no entangling alliances, but to maintain our diplomatic intercourse with existing Sovereignities. It has been admitted by all that there is impending over this country a threatening storm, which is likely to call into action all our vigor, courage, and resources. Is it a wise way of preparing for this awful event, to talk to this nation of its incompetency to resist European aggression, to lower its spirit, to weaken its moral force, and do what we can to prepare it for base submission and easy conquest? If, sir, there be any reality in this menacing danger, I would rather adjure the nation to remember that it contains a million of freemen capable of bearing arms, and ready to exhaust their last drop of blood and their last cent, in defending their country, its institutions, and its liberty. Sir, are these to be conquered by all Europe united? But I am quite sure that that danger, so far at least as this resolution is concerned, is perfectly ideal and imaginary. But, if it were otherwise, any danger is best guarded against by invigorating our minds to meet it—by teaching our heads to think, our hearts to conceive, and our arms to execute the high and noble deeds which belong to the character and glory of our country. Sir, the experience of the world may instruct us that conquests are achieved when they are boldly and firmly determined on; and that men become slaves as soon as they have ceased to resolve to live freemen. If we wish to cover ourselves with the best of all armor against perils, let us not discourage our people, let us stimulate their ardor, let us sustain their resolution, let us show them that we feel as they feel, and that we are prepared to live or die like freemen. Surely, sir, we need no long or learned lectures about the influence of property or of rank; let us rather remember that we can bring into the field a million of bayonets; let us remember that we are placed over a nation capable of doing and of suffering all things for its liberty. I can never forget what was once said to me by a most illustrious female, the first of the age, if not of her sex, on this subject. “Mr. Clay, (said that enlightened lady,) a nation never yet was conquered.” No, sir—no united nation can be, that has the spirit to resolve not to be conquered; such a nation is ever invincible. And, sir, has it come to this? Are we so humbled, so low, so despicable, that we dare not express our sympathy for suffering Greece, lest, peradventure, we might offend some one or more of their imperial and royal Majesties? If gentlemen are afraid to act rashly on such a subject, suppose, Mr. Chairman, that we draw an humble petition addressed to their Majesties, asking them that of their condescension they would allow us to express something on the subject. How, sir, shall it begin? “We, the Representatives of the free people of the United States of America, humbly approach the Thrones of your Imperial and Royal Majesties, and supplicate that of your Imperial and Royal clemency”—I will not go through the disgusting recital; my lips have not yet learned the sycophantic language of a degraded slave. Are we so low, so base, so despicable, that we may not express our horror, articulate our detestation, of the most brutal and atrocious war that ever stained earth, or shocked high Heaven, with the ferocious deeds of a brutal soldiery, set on by the clergy and followers of a fanatical and inimical religion, and rioting in excesses of blood and butchery, at the mere details of which the breast sickens?

If the great mass of Christendom can look coolly and calmly on, while all this is perpetrated on a Christian people in their own vicinity, in their very presence, let us, at least, show that, in this distant extremity, there is still some sensibility and sympathy for Christian wrongs and sufferings, that there are still feelings which can kindle into indignation at the oppression of a people endeared to us by every ancient recollection, and every modern tie.

Sir, the House has been attempted to be alarmed by the dangers to our commerce, and a miserable invoice of figs and opium have been presented to us to repress our sensibilities, and to eradicate our humanity. Ah, sir, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" or what shall it profit a nation to save the whole of a wretched commerce, and lose its liberties?

As to the question of American interests, hitherto, it has not been necessary to depart from the rule of our foreign relations laid down in regard to Europe. Whether it shall become us to do so or not, will be discussed when we take up another resolution that lies upon your table. But we may not only pass this resolution; we may go further; we may recognise the government in the Morea, and yet it will not be any cause of war, nor will it be war, nor even aid. Besides, sir, what is Greece to the Allies? A part of their own dominions? By no means. Suppose the people in one of the Philippine Isles, or in any other spot still more insulated and remote, in Asia or Africa, were to resist their former rulers, and set up and establish a new government; are we not to recognise them for fear of the Holy Alliance? If they are going to interfere on the principle of example, here is the spot where they must strike. This Government, you, Mr. Chairman, and the body over which you preside, are the living reproach to allied despotism. If they attack us at all, they will do it here. They will assail us in our own happy land. They will attack us because you, sir, sit beneath that canopy, and we sit freely debating and deliberating upon the great interests of freemen. They will strike because we pass one of those bills on your table. The passing of the least of them by our authority is as galling to despotic Powers as will be the passage of this so much dreaded resolution.

Pass the resolution, and what, sir, do you do? You exercise an act of indisputable sovereignty, for which you are responsible to none of them. You do the same act as when you pass a bill—no more. If the Allies object, let them forbid us to take a vote in this House—let them disperse us—let them strip us of every attribute of sovereignty.

Do gentlemen attempt to maintain that, on the principles of the laws of nations, these Powers have cause of war? Sir, if there is any principle settled for ages, any which is founded in the very nature of things, it is, that every sovereign Power has the right to judge as to the fact of the existence of other sovereign Powers. I admit there may be a state of inchoate, inactive sovereignty, in which a new government is struggling into being, and may not be said, yet, perfectly to exist; but the premature recognition of such a new Government can give offence justly to no other than its ancient sovereign. The right to recognise comprehends the right to be informed; and the means of information must depend upon the sound discretion of the party seeking it. You may send out a commission of inquiry, and charge it with a provident attention to your own interests and your own people. If you adopt it, no act necessarily follows. You merely grant the means by which the Executive may act when he thinks proper. What does he tell you in his Message? That Greece is struggling for freedom—that all sympathize with her, and that no Power has declared against her. You pass this resolution, and what does it say to the President? "You have sent us grateful intelligence: we feel for Greece, and we grant you money, that, when you think it proper, when the interests of this nation shall not be jeopardized, you may depute a commissioner, a public functionary, to Greece." This is all it says; and the whole responsibility is left with the Executive, where the Constitution puts it. But, sir, it is not first and chiefly for Greece that I wish to see this measure adopted. It will give them but little aid, and that aid purely of a moral kind. It is, indeed, soothing and solacing in distress, to hear the accents of a friendly voice, (we know this as a people.) But, sir, it is principally and mainly for America herself, for the credit and character of our common country, that I hope to see this resolution pass: it is for our own unsullied name that I feel.

What appearance on the page of history would a record like this make, Mr. Chairman, "In the month of January, in the year of our Lord and Saviour, 1824, while all European Christendom beheld with cold and unfeeling apathy, the unexampled wrongs and inexpressible misery of the Christians in Greece, a proposition was made in the Congress of the United States, almost the sole, the last, the greatest depository of human hope and of human freedom, the representatives of a nation capable of bringing into the field a million of bayonets, while the freemen of that nation were spontaneously expressing its deep-toned feeling, its fervent prayer for Grecian success, while the whole continent was raising, by one simultaneous emotion, solemnly and anxiously supplicating and invoking the aid of heaven to spare Greece and to invigorate her arms, while temples and senate houses were all resounding with one burst of generous feeling—(gentlemen may call it enthusiastic declamation if they please; would to God we could hear such declamation, and the utterance of such feeling from them)—in the year of our Lord and Saviour, that Saviour alike of Christian Greece and of us—a proposition was offered, in the American Congress, to send a messenger to

JANUARY, 1824.

Rules and Orders.

H. OF R.

Greece, to inquire into her state and condition, with an expression of our good wishes and our sympathies—and it was rejected.” Go home, if you dare; go home, if you can, to your constituents, and tell them that you voted it down—meet, if you dare, the appalling countenances of those who sent you here, (he meant no defiance,) and tell them that you shrank from the declaration of your own sentiments—that you cannot tell how, but that some unknown dread, some indescribable apprehension, some indefinable danger, affrighted you—that the spectres of scimitars, and crowns, and crescents, gleamed before you, and alarmed you; and that you suppressed all the noble feelings prompted by religion, by liberty, by national independence, and by humanity. He could not bring himself to believe, Mr. C. said, that such would be the feeling of a majority of this House. But, for himself, though every friend of the measure should desert it, and he be left to stand alone, with the gentleman from Massachusetts, he would give to the resolution the poor sanction of his unqualified approbation.

Mr. RANDOLPH moved, that the Committee rise, and signified that he should consider their doing so at this time, a great accommodation to him.

Mr. CUTHBERT begged him to suspend his motion for a few moments, to which he consented: When Mr. C. expressed a wish, that the honorable Speaker would explain the meaning of some parts of his speech a little more clearly; as he understood them, they seemed to contain reflections and insinuations, respecting those who opposed the resolution, which were of an unpleasant kind; if its opponents had in them the spirit of freemen, they were not to be terrified from their posts by menaces. He could not believe the gentleman meant all his words seemed to convey—if he did, he would say that he, for one, defied the insinuations, and scorned the denunciation.

Mr. CLAY explained. He had no intention to disturb the gentleman; he should take back nothing of what he had said; but he could assure the gentleman, that he had no personal allusion to him, or to any other gentleman on that floor; far from it—his feelings on the subject were strong, and he might have expressed them strongly. The advocates of the motion had been called Don Quixotes; and he had meant to repel imputations of that kind.

Mr. CUTHBERT then requested to be more clearly informed whether the Speaker had intended to support the original resolution or the amendment; for such was his zeal, that it was not always easy to understand his precise intention. At one time, he tells us, with that sneer he so well knows how to employ, (for the honorable gentleman commands the whole armory of the orator,) that the European monarchs do not read our resolutions; at another, he says, they are jealous of our Government. He speaks of our readiness for war; but where? will he abandon this continent for a war in Europe? The honorable Speaker finds it difficult to conceive how Greece is to suffer from the measure, if adopted. The gentleman has been abroad. He has honorably fulfilled a distinguished foreign service for this Government. Does he not know that the Emperor of Russia, without one hostile word being publicly uttered, has only to withdraw his troops from certain points they now occupy, to bring down immediate ruin on the Greek cause? Is it our arms that are to support their cause? or is it not our love of liberty and protection of domestic bliss? This is that virtue which goes forth and revivifies man, which nerves his body, which animates his soul, and teaches him to wield with a mighty force all his physical means.

Mr. CLAY said, in reply, that it appeared he had been very unfortunate in the speech he had delivered, since the gentleman felt obliged to make the present inquiry; but he must have been more unfortunate than ever he had been before, if the gentleman was, indeed, ignorant that it was the original motion, he meant to support. He was, indeed in favor of both, and he should like to see them incorporated together.

Mr. RANDOLPH renewed his motion, and the Committee rose, and having obtained leave to sit again, the House adjourned to to-morrow.

SATURDAY, January 24.

On motion of Mr. WHITTLESEY, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, for dividing the State of Ohio into two districts, in a manner the best calculated to promote the interest and convenience of the people of said State; and to direct that the circuit and district courts of the United States, for the seventh circuit of the district of Ohio, be held in each of said districts, alternately, once in each year.

Mr. FLOYD laid on the table the following, for consideration on Monday next:

“Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be laid before this House an estimate of the expense which would be incurred by transporting the troops now at the Council Bluffs to the mouth of the Columbia, or Oregon river.”

RULES AND ORDERS.

Mr. RICH submitted the following proposition of amendment to the standing rules and orders of the House, viz:

Resolved, That the 69th section of the rules of this House be expunged, and that the following be inserted, under the head “Of Committees of the whole House,” and immediately preceding the 74th section; that is to say;

Exclusive of the “Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union,” there shall be three Committees of the whole House, to wit: One on bills, and other subjects of a public or general nature; one on private or local bills; and one on subjects of a private or local nature, on which a committee shall have made an unfavorable report.

When a subject shall have been referred to a Committee of the Whole, it shall be assigned to the appropriate committee by the Speaker; and, unless otherwise ordered, be entered on the calendar for the next succeeding day.

Each of the said committees shall elect its chair-

H. OF R.

Election of President, &c.

JANUARY, 1824.

man, who, if present, shall preside at its sittings; but, if absent, his place, for the time being, shall be filled by a member, to be designated by the Speaker.

The House having resolved itself into either of the said Committees of the Whole, the several subjects shall be announced for consideration in the order in which they stand on the calendar, but shall not be considered, except on the motion of a member, seconded by a majority of the Committee: Provided, that the House may specially resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, on any subject which the Committee shall previously have refused to consider.

Leave of the House shall in no case be necessary to authorize a committee to repeat its sessions, on subjects not definitively acted on.

Mr. RICH, in offering this resolution, observed that among the opinions which he had for many years held, there was none in the correctness of which he had greater confidence, than that the mode of transacting business in this House, was, in one respect, susceptible of material improvement; he referred to that part of it which relates to the appointment of a great number of Committees of the whole House to follow in succession, in the order in which the various subjects were brought up and stood on the docket. A few years after he had first had the honor of a seat in this House, a general Committee of the Whole was appointed, to whom any number of subjects, however diverse, might be successively referred. The consequence of this practice soon grew to be, that, towards the close of each session, as business became accumulated in the House, every thing was referred to this Committee of the Whole, and through the great pressure of its multifarious objects of attention, numbers of them were every session passed by without being acted on. A rule was subsequently adopted, restraining the number of subjects to be referred to any Committee of the Whole to three, and those of an analogous kind. This was certainly a great improvement from the previous state of things. But much inconvenience is still experienced from the practice as it now stands, and the consequent anxiety, in the friends of different bills and resolutions, to get them early upon the docket. He believed a remedy would be found in the method proposed in his resolution.

The proposition was received, and referred to a select committee; and Mr. RICH, Mr. P. P. BARBOUR, Mr. COBB, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. LATHROP, Mr. CAMPBELL of Ohio, and Mr. TOMLINSON, were appointed the said committee.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT, &c.

Mr. LIVINGSTON submitted the following, which he proposes, when the subject shall come up, to offer as an amendment to the proposed amendment of the Constitution of the United States:

That the following amendment of the Constitution of the United States, he proposed to the Legislatures of the several States; which, when ratified by three-fourths thereof, shall be a part of the said Constitution:

That, for the purpose of electing a President and Vice President of the United States, each State shall be divided, by the Legislature thereof, into a number of districts, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which such State may be entitled in the Congress of the United States. Each district shall be composed, as nearly as may be, of contiguous territory, and shall contain a number of persons entitled to vote, as nearly equal as circumstances will permit.

And on such days as Congress shall determine, which days shall be the same throughout the United States, the citizens of each State, who shall be qualified to vote for a Representative to Congress, shall meet at such places, within their respective districts, as the Legislature of each State shall appoint, and, in such manner as such Legislature shall direct, shall vote for one person to be President, and for another person to be Vice President, and also for one other to be an Elector.

All the votes so given, in each district, shall be canvassed and counted by such persons, and in such manner, and at such place, as the Legislature of the State may direct. And the votes given for each candidate shall be added together, and the persons having severally the greatest number of votes as President, Vice President, and Elector, shall be considered as entitled to the vote of such district, for the said offices, respectively; but if two or more persons have an equal number of votes for the same office, then the persons appointed to count and canvass the said votes, or the major part of such persons, shall decide which of the persons having such equality of votes shall be entitled to the office, and shall certify the same accordingly. Triplicate receipts of the whole number of votes given for each candidate, shall be made out and transmitted, in such manner as Congress shall direct, to the Seat of the Government of the United States, addressed to the President of the Senate.

The President of the Senate, in the presence of the House of Representatives, shall open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted, each district being entitled to one vote, and the person having the greatest number of such votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electoral districts within the United States; and if no person have such majority, then the President of the Senate shall, by proclamation, declare such to be the fact; and shall also declare the names of the two persons having the greatest number of votes for President, and shall order the Electors, chosen as aforesaid, in each State, to assemble in such State at a time not less than thirty-five, nor more than forty-five days, after the publication of such proclamation. And the said Electors shall on such day meet at such place, in each State, as shall have been previously designated by the Legislature of such State; and shall then, by ballot, choose one of the two persons having the greatest number of district votes to be President; and they shall make three lists of the ballots so given, which lists they shall certify and sign, and shall transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate; and the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted; and the one of the two persons mentioned in the proclamation of the President of the Senate as having the greatest number of votes of the Electoral districts, who shall have the greatest number of votes of the Electors so returned, shall be President; but if the said two persons have an equal number of votes of the Electors,

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

then the one of the two who had the greatest number of votes of the Electoral districts shall be President. 2. The person having the greatest number of votes of the Electoral districts for Vice President, shall be Vice President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electoral district votes; and, if no person have a majority, then, from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators; and a majority of such quorum shall be sufficient to make a choice.

No person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President, shall be eligible to that of Vice President of the United States. And if any person so ineligible shall have a majority of the votes of the Electoral districts, or he shall be one of the two highest, if there be no majority, then a new election for Vice President shall be ordered without delay, and the President of the Senate shall exercise the functions of a Vice President until a Vice President shall be chosen.

And all questions relative to the eligibility of the persons voted for as President or Vice President, and every other question arising on the said election, shall be determined by concurrent vote of each House of Congress.

Congress shall pass such laws, fixing the time of holding the election, as will give the necessary time for referring the election to the Electors, in case no person has a majority of votes.

The proposed amendment was received, and ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

THE GREEK CAUSE.

The House then again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the state of the Union, and resumed the consideration of Mr. WEBSTER'S resolution, for sending an agent to Greece, and the amendment thereto proposed by Mr. POINSETT, which proposes to limit the resolve to the expression of a sentiment decisively favorable to the Greek cause.

The depending question having been stated,

Mr. RANDOLPH rose, and said, that it was, to him, a subject of unfeigned regret, that the very few unpremeditated words into which, a few days since, he had been so suddenly and unexpectedly betrayed, should, in the opinion of those for whose judgment he had much greater deference than for his own, have begot a necessity for some further illustration. He could, with most serious and unaffected sincerity, assure the Committee, that, whenever he was so unfortunate as to be under the necessity of trespassing on their attention, the pain which it gave them to listen, was not greater than that which he felt in addressing them; and he hoped that that consideration would secure a respectful attention to the little—the very little, that he had to say.

Sir, said Mr. R., the resolution before you, if we are to take the word of the honorable gentleman that moved it, is, in itself, almost nothing—a speck in the political horizon:—but, sir, no man better knows than the honorable mover, that it is from clouds of that portent in the moral and political as well as in the natural atmosphere, that storms, the most disastrous in their consequences, usually proceed. The resolution, in itself, is nothing, when compared with the consequences which it involves. It appears to me that the bearings and consequences of the measure proposed by this resolution have not yet been traced to their utmost extent; nor, by any means, Mr. R. said, did he intend to undertake the task. But he would give the Committee, as succinctly as he could, some of the views in which it presented itself to him.

It is with serious concern and alarm, said Mr. R., that I have heard doctrines broached in this debate, fraught with consequences more disastrous to the best interests of this people, than any that I ever heard advanced during the five and twenty years since I have been honored with a seat on this floor. They imply, to my apprehension, a total and fundamental change of the policy pursued by this Government, ab urbe condita—from the foundation of the Republic, to the present day. Are we, sir, to go on a crusade, in another hemisphere, for the propagation of two objects as dear and delightful to my heart as to that of any gentleman in this, or in any other assembly—Liberty and Religion—and, in the name of those holy words,—by this powerful spell, is this nation to be conjured and beguiled out of the high way of Heaven—out of its present comparatively happy state, into all the disastrous conflicts arising from the policy of European Powers, with all the consequences which flow from them? Liberty and Religion, sir! Things that are yet dear, in spite of all the mischief that has been perpetrated in their name. I believe that nothing similar to this proposition is to be found in modern history, unless in the famous decree of the French National Assembly, which brought combined Europe against them, with its united strength, and, after repeated struggles, finally effected the downfall of the French power. Sir, I am wrong—there is another example of like doctrine; and you find it among that strange and peculiar people—in that mysterious book, which is of the highest authority with them, (for it is at once their gospel and their law—) the Koran, which enjoins it to be the duty of all good Moslems to propagate its doctrines at the point of the sword; by the edge of the scimitar. The character of that people is a peculiar one; they differ from every other race. It has been said, here, that it is four hundred years since they encamped in Europe. Sir, said Mr. R., they were encamped, where we now find them, before this country was discovered, and their title to the country which they occupy is at least as good as ours. They hold their possessions there by the same title by which all other countries are held—possession obtained, at first, by a successful employment of force, confirmed by time, by usage, by prescription—the best of all possible titles. Their policy, Mr. R. said, had been, not tortuous, like that of other States of Europe, but straight forward; they had invariably appealed to the sword, and they held by the sword. The Russ had, indeed, made great encroachments on their empire, but the ground had been contested inch by inch; and the acquisitions of Russia, on the side of Christian Europe—Livonia, Ingria, Courland—Finland to the Gulf of Bothnia—Poland

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

—had been greater than she had made of the Mahometans. And, in consequence of this straight forward policy to which he had before referred, this peculiar people could boast of being the only one of the Powers of continental Europe, whose capital had never been insulted by the presence of a foreign military force. It was a curious fact, well worthy of attention, that Constantinople was the only capital in continental Europe—for Moscow was the true capital of Russia—that had never been in possession of an enemy. It is, indeed, true, said Mr. R., that the Empress Catharine did inscribe over the gate of one of the cities that she won in the Crimea, (Cherson, I think,) "road to Byzantium;" but, sir, it has proved—perhaps too low a word for the subject—but a stumpy road for Russia. Who, at that day, would have been believed had he foretold to that august (for so she was) and illustrious woman, that her Cossacks of the Ukraine, and of the Don, would have been encamped in Paris before they reached Constantinople? Who would have been believed if he had foretold that a French invading force, such as the world never saw before, and, I trust, will never again see—would lay Moscow itself in ashes? These are considerations worthy of attention before we embark in the project proposed by this resolution, the consequences of which no human eye can divine.

I would respectfully ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, said Mr. R., whether in his very able and masterly argument—and he has said all that I supposed could be said upon the subject, and more than could have been said by any man in favor of his resolution—whether he himself has not furnished an answer to his speech—I had not the happiness myself to hear his speech, but a friend has read it to me—in one of the arguments in that speech? Towards the conclusion, I think, of his speech, the gentleman lays down, from Puffendorff, in reference to the honeyed words and pious professions of the Holy Alliance, that these are all surplusage, because nations are always supposed to be ready to do what justice and national law require. Well, sir, said Mr. R., if this be so, why may not the Greeks presume—why are they not, on this principle, bound to presume that this Government is disposed to do all, in reference to them, that they ought to do, without any formal resolutions to that effect? I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the doctrine of Puffendorff does not apply as strongly to the resolution as to the declaration of the Allies—that is, if the resolution of the gentleman be indeed that almost nothing he would have us suppose—if there be not something behind this nothing which divides this House (not horizontally, as the gentleman has somewhat quaintly said, but vertically,) into two unequal parties, one the advocate of a splendid system of crusades, the other the friends of peace and harmony, the advocates of a fireside policy; for, as had truly been said, as long as all is right at the fireside, there cannot be much wrong elsewhere—whether, he repeated, does not the doctrine of Puffendorff apply as well to the words of the resolution as to the words of the Holy Alliance?

But, sir, we have already done more than this. The President of the United States, the only organ of communication which the people have seen fit to establish between us and foreign Powers, has already expressed all, in reference to Greece, that the resolution goes to express. Actum est—it is done—it is finished—there is an end. Not, Mr. R. said, that he would have the House to infer that he meant to express any opinion as to the policy of such a declaration. The practice of responding to Presidential Addresses and Messages had gone out for now these two or three and twenty years.

Mr. R. then went on to say he had thought if the great master of the political philosophy could arise from the dead, or had his valuable life been spared till now, he would not only have been relieved from all his terrors on the subject of a regicide peace, but also have witnessed a return of the age of chivalry, and the banishment of calculation even from the estimates of statesmen which that great man could never have foreseen; for the proposition now under consideration was that something new under the sun which Solomon himself never dreamed of. Is this all? No, sir, said Mr. R., if that was all, I should not have thrown myself upon your attention. But this is not all. Cases have already been stated, to which the principles of the resolution equally applies as to that of the Greeks. In addition to those already put, I will take the case of Canada, if you will. It is known to every body that discontents have for some time existed in the Canadian Provinces, with the mother country and the measures of its Government. Suppose the people of the British colonies to the North of us undertake to throw off the yoke—I will not put the case of Jamaica, because they, unhappily, are slaveholders. Are you ready to stake the peace, and welfare, and the resources of this nation in support of Canadian independence? Your doctrine goes that length—you cannot stop short of it. Where, in that case, will be the assistance of Great Britain, already referred to in debate as being the only spot in the world in which liberty resides except our own country? After some other observations, Mr. R. adduced another people—in valorous achievement and daring spirit on a footing with these Greeks themselves—and who have achieved their independence from a bondage far heavier than that of the Greeks to the Turks. How is it, sir, said Mr. R., that we have never sent an Envoy to our sister Republic of Hayti? Here is a case that fits—a case beyond dispute. It is not that of a people who have "almost," (ay, sir! almost, but not altogether)—who have almost but perfectly achieved their independence. To attempt to show that these cases are equally within the range of the principle of the resolution, would be to show a disrespect to the intellects of those around me. The man who cannot pursue the inference would not recognise my picture, though, like the Dutchman's painting, were written under it, "This is the man, that the horse."

There was another remark that fell from the gentleman from Massachusetts—of which, Mr. R.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

said, he should speak, as he always should speak, of any thing from that gentleman with all the personal respect which may be consistent with freedom of discussion. Among other cases forcibly put by the gentleman from Massachusetts, why he would embark in this incipient crusade against Mussulmen, he stated this as one—that they hold human beings as property. Ah, sir, said Mr. R., and what says the Constitution of the United States on this point? unless, indeed, that instrument is wholly to be excluded from consideration—unless it is to be regarded as a mere useless parchment, worthy to be burnt, as was once actually proposed. Does not that Constitution give its sanction to the holding of human beings as property? Sir, I am not going to discuss the abstract question of liberty or slavery, or any other abstract question. I go for matters of fact. But I would ask gentlemen in this House, who have the misfortune to reside on the wrong side of a certain mysterious parallel of latitude, to take this question seriously into consideration—whether the Government of the United States is prepared to say, that the act of holding human beings as property is sufficient to place the party so offending under the ban of its high and mighty displeasure?

Sir, the objections to this resolution accumulate as I proceed—vires acquirit eundo. If I should attempt to go through with a statement of them all, and had strength to sustain me, I should do what I promised I would not do—I should worry and exhaust the patience of this Committee.

Sir, what are we now asked to do? To stimulate the Executive to the creation of embassies. And what then? That we, or our friends, may fill them. Sir, the sending ambassadors abroad is one of the great prerogatives, if you will, of our Executive authority; and we are, I repeat, about to stimulate the President to the creation of a new, and, I must be permitted to say, an unnecessary embassy—a diplomatic agency to Greece—that we, or our friends, may profit by it. For, sir, it is a matter of notoriety that all these good things are reserved for men who either have been, or are, de facto, members of this, or of the other, House. No doubt we shall be able to find some learned Theban, or some other Boeotian, willing to undertake this mission—perfectly willing to live upon the resources of the people, rather than his own. But then, said Mr. R., recurs the old-fashioned question, Cui bono? His own, undoubtedly, but surely not that of this nation.

But, it is urged, that we have sent and received Ministers from revolutionary France. True, said Mr. R., we have; but what was revolutionary France? Our own ancient and very good ally; a substantive Power, if any such exist on the continent of Europe, whose independent existence no one could doubt or dispute, unless, indeed, the disciples of Berkeley, who deny that there is any such thing as matter. But, sir, have the United States always received the Ministers that are sent to them from foreign Powers? How long did the person who was appointed diplomatic agent here from Spain (Don Onís) linger in your ante-chambers before he was acknowledged? And is it said that the situation of Greece approaches more nearly to independence than that of Spain when Don Onís came here as her Minister? Sir, let these Greeks send a Minister to us, and then we will deliberate on the question whether we will accredit him or not. If, indeed, there was a Minister of Greece knocking at the door of the President's antechamber for admittance, and that admittance was denied, the question of Grecian independence would be more legitimately before us; but I greatly doubt if even that case would be sufficient to call for the interference of this House.

But, Mr. R. said, there was one aspect of this question which, to him it appeared, ought to be conclusive on the minds of all, viz: That Russia, whose designs on Turkey have been unremittingly prosecuted ever since the days of Peter the Great for more than a century; that Russia, allied to the Greeks in religious faith—identified in that respect; that Russia, unassailable territorially, and dividing with us (according to the gentleman from Massachusetts) the dread and apprehension of the Allied Powers—even Russia, in “juxtaposition” (to use the words of the mover of the resolution) to Turkey—even Russia dare not move. But we, who are separated first by the Atlantic ocean, and then have to traverse the Mediterranean sea to arrive at the seat of conflict—we, at the distance of five thousand miles, are to interfere in this quarrel—to what purpose? To the advantage solely of this very colossal Power which has been held up as the great object of our dread, and of whom it is difficult to say whether it is more to be dreaded for its physical force, or its detestable principle.

Permit me, sir, to ask why, in the selection of an enemy to the doctrines of our Government, and a party to those advanced by the Holy Alliance, we should fix on Turkey? She, at least, forms no party to that alliance; and I venture to say, that, for the last century, her conduct, in reference to her neighbors, has been much more Christian than that of all the “Most Christian,” “Most Catholic,” or “Most Faithful” Majesties of Europe—for she has not interfered, as we propose to do, in the internal affairs of other nations.

But, sir, we have not done. Not satisfied with attempting to support the Greeks, one world, like that of Pyrrhus or Alexander, is not sufficient for us. We have yet another world for exploits: we are to operate in a country distant from us eighty degrees of latitude, and only accessible by a circumnavigation of the globe, and to subdue which we must cover the Pacific with our ships, and the tops of the Andes with our soldiers. Do gentlemen seriously reflect on the work they have cut out for us? Why, sir, these projects of ambition surpass those of Bonaparte himself.

It has once been said, of the dominions of the King of Spain—thank God! it can no longer be said—that the sun never set upon them. Sir, the sun never sets on ambition like this: they who have once felt its scorpion sting are never satisfied with a limit less than a circle, of our planet. I have heard, sir, the late corruscation in the heavens attempted to be accounted for by the return of the lunar cycle, the moon having got back into the same relative position in which she was nineteen years ago. However this may be, I am afraid, sir, that she exerts too potent an influence over our legislation, or will have done so, if we agree to adopt the resolution on your table. I think about once in seven or eight years, for that seems to be the term of our political cycle, we may calculate upon beholding some redoubted champion—like him who prances into Westminster Hall, armed cap-a-pie, like Sir Somebody Dimock, at the coronation of the British King, challenging all who dispute the title of the Sovereign to the Crown—coming into this House, mounted on some magnificent project, such as this. But, sir, I never expected, that, of all places in the world, (except Salem,) a proposition like this should have come from Boston!

H. of R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

Sir, I am afraid, that, along with some most excellent attributes and qualities—the love of liberty, jury trial, the writ of habeas corpus, and all the blessings of free government, that we have derived from our Anglo-Saxon ancestors, we have got not a little of their John Bull, or rather John Bull Dog spirit—their readiness to fight for anybody, and on any occasion. Sir, England has been for centuries the game cock of Europe. It is impossible to specify the wars in which she has been engaged for contrary purposes; and she will, with great pleasure, see us take off her shoulders the labor of preserving the balance of power. We find her fighting, now, for the Queen of Hungary—then, for her inveterate foe, the King of Prussia—now at war for the restoration of the Bourbons—and now on the eve of war with them for the liberties of Spain. These lines on the subject were never more applicable than they have now become—

“Now Europe’s balanced—neither side prevails;
For nothing’s left in either of the scales.”

If we pursue the same policy, we must travel the same road, and endure the same burdens, under which England now groans. But, Mr. R. said, glorious as such a design might be, a President of the United States would, in his apprehension, occupy a prouder place in history, who, when he retires from office, can say to the people who elected him, I leave you without a debt, than if he had fought as many pitched battles as Cæsar, or achieved as many naval victories as Nelson. And what, said Mr. R., is debt? In an individual, it is slavery. It is slavery of the worst sort, surpassing that of the West India islands, for it enslaves the mind as well as it enslaves the body; and the creature who can be abject enough to incur and to submit to it, receives in that condition of his being an adequate punishment. Of course, Mr. R. said, he spoke of debt, with the exception of unavoidable misfortune. He spoke of debt caused by the mismanagement, by unwarrantable generosity, by being generous before being just. Mr. R. knew that this sentiment was ridiculed by Sheridan, whose lamentable end was the best commentary upon its truth. No, sir. Let us abandon these projects. Let us say to those seven millions of Greeks: “We defended ourselves, when we were but three millions, against a Power, in comparison to which the Turk is but as a lamb. Go and do thou likewise.” And, said Mr. R., so with respect to the Governments of South America. If, after having achieved their independence, they have not valor to maintain it, I would not commit the safety and independence of this country in such a cause. I will, in both these cases, pursue the same line of conduct which I have ever pursued, from the day I took a seat in this House in ’99; from which, without boasting, I challenge any gentleman to fix upon me any colorable charge of departure.

The condition of my strength, said Mr. R., or, rather, of my weakness, admonishes me to conclude; but I cannot sit down without remarking, that the state of the world is at this moment unexampled. We are now carrying on a piratical war against the maritime banditti of the West Indies. The buccaneers are revived. At what expense of life, of health, of treasure, that war is carried on, perhaps every member of this Committee knows better than I—but, sir, to what may this resolution lead? To the investing those banditti, and the banditti of all the rest of the world, with formal commissions, which the maritime courts of every country in Europe would be bound to respect—and, said Mr. R., I should not be surprised if some of the renegadoes, whom we have admitted to the privileges of citizens, or the yet more spurious offspring of our own soil, should take those commissions to cruise against our commerce. That such conduct would not be without example, the records of our courts will show.

It is not, then, the mere power of Turkey which you are to encounter, supposing that you stop short with the original resolution. But you do not—you go further—out of the frying pan into the fire—the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina and the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, go still further—by adopting which, you will put the peace of the nation into peril—and for whom? For a people of whom we know almost as little as we do about the Greeks. Can any man in this House, say, what even is the state of society in Buenos Ayres—its moral condition, &c.?

Let us adhere to the policy laid down by the second, as well as the first founder of our Republic—by him who was the Camillus, as well as the Romulus, of the infant state;—to the policy of peace, commerce and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none: for to entangling alliances we must come, if you once embark in projects such as this. And, with all his British predilections, Mr. R. said, he suspected he should, whenever that question should present itself, resist as strongly an alliance with Great Britain as with any other Power. We were sent here, he said, to attend to the preservation of the peace of this country, and not to be ready, on all occasions, to go to war whenever any thing like what in common parlance is termed a turn up takes place in Europe.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

These, sir, said Mr. R., are some of the views which I have taken of the subject. There are other views of it which I might take, but from which I abstain (I may be permitted to say) out of self-respect, as well as from respect for this Committee.

I can, however, assure the Committee, for one, that the public burdens on those whom I represent here, (though they are certainly better off than those to the north and the west of them—that is, till you come to the favored States, where the interest of the public debt is paid, and where almost all the public moneys are disbursed,) are greater than they can bear, because their private engagements are greater than they can discharge; and if this is not a self-evident proposition, I am at a loss to know what can be such. And this universal distress in the country has been the effect of freaks of legislation. I do not deny but there may be some who have drawn great prizes in the lottery, but that is not the case with the great mass of the nation. And what is this scheme but a lottery? If it should end in war, there will be more great prizes to be drawn; but it will be for me, those whom I represent, to pay them. I have been acquainted with my constituents a long time to little purpose, and have greatly mistaken their disposition and present temper of mind, if they are in any such “melting mood.” The freaks of legislation to which I have referred, the vast expenditures which begot the necessities for over-issues of paper money—that system, compared with which all the evils of Pandora’s box are blessings—have brought both England and America to this distress. The two cases are strictly parallel—they run on all fours—and, if this resolution be adopted, not merely similar, but yet more disastrous consequences will ensue.

I shall then, said Mr. R., return to my constituents without the least alarm in regard to this question. Unless, indeed, I, and those who in this case think with me, have reason to fear that our constituents will award us merited censure for not having better supported the cause we advocate. Unless on this account, I cherish not the least doubt that when I, for one, go back to those that sent me here, I shall be greeted with their honest, open countenances, and gratulating hands. There has not been a question, since I have been a member of this House, on which my opinion has been more clear than on this—no, not even in the case of the sedition law.

What, said Mr. R., is our situation? We are absolutely combatting shadows. The gentleman would have us to believe his resolution is all but nothing; yet again it is to prove omnipotent, and fills the whole globe with its influence. Either it is nothing, or it is something. If it is nothing, let us lay it on the table, and have done with it at once; but, if it is that something which it has been on the other hand represented to be, let us beware how we touch it. For my part, I would sooner put the shirt of Nessus on my back, than sanction these doctrines—doctrines such as I never heard from my boyhood till now. They go the whole length. If they prevail, there are no longer any Pyrenees—every bulwark and barrier of the Constitution is broken down; it is become tabula rasa—a carte blanche, for every one to scribble on it what he pleases.

Mr. WEBSTER then rose. He said he had not the least desire to trespass again on the indulgence of the Committee; his object was to ask its attention to a short reply to the objections which had been urged against his proposition. The basis of all fair argument, in all assemblies which wish to conduct their minds to a fair and just result, is to form for themselves a clear understanding of the grounds on which the question rests, and of the true nature of the subject in controversy. He held that as a right to which every public measure, proposed in any public body, was entitled; and it was the last right which he would be disposed to abandon in that House or elsewhere. He was the more earnest to state these objections, and remark upon them singly, because he felt that (not from design, probably, but from some inattention or misapprehension) a character had been attributed to his resolution, which had no more to do with it than any two things which were the most foreign from each other. If the debates on this occasion had gone forth to the world, separate from the resolution itself, it might have been conceived that he had proposed a subsidy, an alliance, or a direct war, in favor of the Greeks. His intention was, now, to call the attention of the Committee back to the real question before it. What that question was, he would, by the blessing of God, now set forth to the Committee and to the country.

The honorable member from New York near me, commenced by saying that the resolution, as its advocates explained it, contained a guarantee of liberty to all the nations of the earth. And where does he derive his authority for such declaration? No such guarantee is to be found upon the face of the resolution. No one that is in favor of its adoption, has said any such thing. When such an assertion is made, the premises upon which it is founded should be clearly stated. What is there in any one word of the resolution that leads to such a charge? If such an inference can, by any means, be drawn from it, let us hear the argument by which it is to be effected; but first to assume such premises, and then to argue from them, is it fair, is it correct? Mr. W. said he knew that, in combatting any proposition, it was a natural effort of debate to exaggerate what is opposed, and to set forth objections in strong terms. He only asked, on the present occasion, that the measure he had proposed should be treated with common candor, and that gentlemen would not ingraft the fictions of their own imagination upon his resolution, and then argue as if it contained a declaration of war, then to go to work most valorously against the man of straw, which themselves had formed. If any gentleman wishes to oppose some resolution which he has formed to his own fancy, with all my heart; but if he speaks to this, let him speak to this.

Mr. W. said, if he understood the gentleman from New York correctly, he had advanced three objections to the resolution. In the first place, he had doubts as to its constitutionality; in the second place, he entertained a pretty deep suspicion that the Greeks would not establish a free government: that they would have some little Emperor of their own, some successor to the Byzantine Kings, to reign over them; and next, the gentleman quotes Grotius, to prove, that sending an agent to revolted colonies, is an act of open hostility against the mother country. I do not recollect any thing else—oh yes! he has also attempted to prove by the patent laws, that we owe nothing to the modern Greeks, for Homer, Hesiod, Thucydides, and other great names of ancient times—and I must do the gentleman the justice to say, that he has very fully established that point from the patent law.

My honorable friend from New Hampshire, who is the last man to whom I would impute any thing unfair, said Mr. W., has indulged himself in somewhat loose statements in his opposition. He has spoken of the resolution as the fulcrum, by means of which the world is to be moved. He has supposed that it was a flaming sword intended to guard the paradise of Greece against the power of the Ottoman. But, sir, who says so? No words like these have fallen from my mouth—nothing to authorize such a supposition is to be found in the resolution. He asks, if it can be supposed that this measure is to work all the wonders which its advocates suggest? Sir, I have not suggested any wonders—I have never presumed that it would perform any miracles. I think it a proper measure, and that it will do some good—but I expect nothing miraculous from it. The honorable member has spoken in the same strain as others, against my proposition. And really, sir, if Cervantes had never lived, there would have been a plentiful lack of topics in this debate. Gentlemen have spoken of running tilts, and of some crusade to be entered into. Really, sir, I have not sufficient perspicacity and penetration, my brain is too dull, to catch all the ten thousand inferences gentlemen choose to draw from my resolution. If there is any thing extravagant in the proposition, let it be shown that there is, by fair argument. The honorable gentleman from New Hampshire imputes to me an intention of “running tilts with windmills.” Sir, there is not much in this remark—and yet, there may be something in it too. It is my duty, I know, to encounter whatever opposition may meet me on this subject; and, sir, if I should happen, in my course, to meet with a wind-mill, why, sir, I must take a tilt with it, whether it be large or small, unless, indeed, I should conclude to have a little patience, and to wait a while, till the motion and the noise shall die of themselves, for a slight puff is generally soon over.

Sir, the gentleman from Virginia has said, if this proposition is not aid it is nothing.

I hold, sir, that there is no aid to Greece proposed by this resolution, either in a pecuniary, subsidiary, or belligerent point of view; and yet there will be something useful in it to their cause. If this is not maintained, I do not, of course, expect that the resolution will be adopted. Sir, it is something more than nothing. I am as little inclined to deal in nonentities as any man. The proposition cannot be what it has been represented to be, or it is one of the most magnificent and terrific nothings upon earth. It proposes, indeed, nothing against the Turks. I defy gentlemen to point to the word in the resolution, that can bear that construction. Nor has any thing fallen from me to authorize it. The gentleman has said, that the Greeks are nothing but a set of poor oppressed slaves—intelligent, if you will, intellectual, refined, and in some cases rich—yet nothing but slaves. Sir, if, with their intelligence, if with their numbers, if with their education, (such as it is,) they were not slaves, they would hold your sympathy much cheaper than they now do. The remarks in opposition tend to make this measure propose what it never did propose, and to make those who support it say what they never have said.

One word to the gentleman from Mississippi. It appears to me, sir, that his argument is not quite consistent. He says that this resolution is too cold an expression against the principles acted upon by the Holy Alliance; and yet he thinks it may bring us into a war with them. Now, sir, both these remarks cannot be well founded.

Mr. RANKIN explained.

Mr. WEBSTER said, it was not his intention to misrepresent the gentleman. But, sir, a gentleman from Georgia, for whom I entertain great respect, in the remarks he made yesterday, seems, in my apprehension, to have taken for granted what is in dispute; he said, that it is conceded that this subject had originated altogether in feeling. And pray, sir, said Mr. W., who conceded this? I say, if not so many as ten persons had uttered a word in favor of the Greeks, and I had entertained the same opinion that I do now entertain, of the principles advanced by the Allies, and their danger to free Governments, I should have deemed it my duty to bring the subject before this House. Even if the people concerned in it had been situated, as the gentleman yesterday put a case, in the Philippine Isles, I should have moved the same resolution, and should have supported it on the same principles.

The general objection which has been urged against it, is, that its scope is dangerous—that it leads to war. But one extreme inference which was yesterday drawn from as extreme a case, sir, made me feel shocked, to trembling, at the consequences of my own measure. The gentleman, after ably and very truly stating the difference of facility in going to war, between a Republic and a Monarchy, was not satisfied with the cry of “bella, horrida bella”—but he stated a case, which almost made me wish myself out of the House of Representatives—and which assuredly would make me wish my proposition out of it. He says, we shall be compelled, in consequence of passing this resolution, to send all our public vessels to the Mediterranean—that we shall next get into a quarrel with Great Britain, and that she will send her fleet, and hermetically seal us up in this Mediterranean bottle, and that then there will be cutting and slashing, running, and taking, and we shall be thrown back a whole century. I mention this to show the effects of a fervid imagination, in perverting a proposition which means only peace and law.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

The honorable gentleman from Virginia, who has spoken this morning, like a skilful and experienced public man, has endeavored to do, (what certainly he has a perfect right to do,) to refute me out of my own mouth. He has said that Puffendorff is against me; that if it is supererogatory to make declarations and stipulations to do only what it is a plain and acknowledged duty to do, and if it is to be presumed that States will always do their duty, why may not the Greeks presume that, when the proper time arrived, we should do our duty towards them? Undoubtedly. They are bound to presume so. They will presume so. And therefore, at this very time, they will presume that we shall do something. But what shall we do, if not some act very like that which is now proposed to the House?

The gentleman says we shall be bound, upon the principle of this resolution, to undertake to aid the Canadians; but this inference goes on the presumption that he has truly stated that principle. If we were, indeed, about to proclaim ourselves guardians of universal liberty, his inference would be a fair and true one; but, I ask him to draw his inferences from no man's commentary, but to let the resolution speak for itself. The gentleman has attributed to me a remark, which I do not recollect to have made, in relation to the Greeks being held by the Turks as their property.

Mr. RANDOLPH rose, and, in explanation, read a passage from Mr. WEBSTER's speech, as reported in the National Intelligencer.

Mr. WEBSTER said that he had not had time, since the commencement of this discussion, to look over the printed report of his remarks on the subject. He probably might have used the expression attributed to him. If he did, he meant no improper allusion by it. He only meant to convey the idea of their servitude; that it had been the policy of their conquerors never to consider them upon terms of equality; never to adopt them as subjects, but to treat them and their children as ransomed captives; that the Greeks were compelled to pay a ransom, from year to year, as a price for the privilege of living. The gentleman cannot suppose, said Mr. W., that I intended to compare them with any property held within the United States; on the contrary, I feel quite sorry to have given the least occasion to suppose that an allusion of that kind was intended.

It has been objected that the resolution is in effect an injunction, or, at least a stimulus, to the Executive, to send a Minister. But the resolution does not say a word of any attempt to hasten the appointment; it leaves that appointment to be made when the President shall consider it proper and expedient; and, as to profitable consequences, I, at least, stand pretty clear. The gentleman from Virginia knows full well, sir, that I can have nothing to do either with the stimulus or with the reward to which he has alluded.

But, sir, I do not wish to take up too much time of the Committee, and will proceed to ask gentlemen to call back their attention to the real question; as no object on earth, in relation to this subject, is so dear to me as to have it fairly understood that at least my own vote may rest on my own resolution and my own principles. As to its ultimate fate, every gentleman will, of course, determine for himself. I shall be satisfied with the result, provided I have an opportunity to make myself clearly understood. What, then, is the question? At the commencement of the session, the President, in his Message to Congress, called our attention somewhat particularly to the struggle in which the Greeks were engaged to maintain their freedom. He had taken a similar notice of that people, in his Message, the year before. He now expresses his opinion very strongly on the subject. He remarks that the sympathy of the whole civilized world is excited in their behalf; and he expresses his strong conviction that the dominion of the Turks over them is lost forever. Now, if it were customary to return an answer to the Message, we surely should not refrain from expressing the opinion of the House on this subject. This brings us, then, to the very pith of the question, which after all is, whether it is fit for this House to express any opinion whatever in the matter. No man can meet me, and prove that the Government is not already committed upon it. The President is the executive organ of the Government; he is charged with the foreign relations of the country; he is the organ of the nation, so far as relates to the safety of its concerns abroad. Many things pass the House, in the shape of resolutions, upon which it would not become the Executive to express an opinion; and the real question is, whether this House has the right to have an opinion, and to express it, on this subject? I submit to the gentleman from Virginia whether it is not proper, whether it is not the good old practice, that the popular branch of the Government should, on certain occasions, express opinions on matters which do not come before them as direct subjects of legislation? Is there a single member who can doubt that, if the House had returned an answer to the President's Message, it would have contained something like this language: "We participate in your sympathy in behalf of the Greeks. You will exercise your discretion as to the propriety of sending an agent to that people; and, if it should be thought proper to send one, we shall make the necessary appropriation when the proper time comes."

We now propose to express this same general opinion by resolution. The only difference, in expressing the opinion by resolution, or by direct reply, is this—that resolutions usually have reference to some measure which is to follow; whereas, in an address or reply, opinions may be expressed in a more abstract manner. I think, sir, this subject is of sufficient importance to warrant an expression of the opinion of this House. Yet it is not merely, or principally, for the sake of the Greeks that I introduced it. The history of Greece, for the last five years, fully shows the application of the principles acted upon by the Allied Powers. This evidence of those principles seems to render it proper that we should express our concurrence with the Executive in the expression he made of principles directly the reverse. The abandonment of Greece is another proof of the change of national policy instituted by the Allies. They have certainly started a new principle, which they hold to be a part of the law of the civilized world. Now, if we hold so too, let us not say a word on the subject. But if we think the operation of their present policy is hostile to the true principles of liberty, and if we consider the opinion of the House of Representatives as worthy of any regard, let us express that opinion.

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Allies have brought their power to bear directly upon the Greek cause. They tell us, in terms, that they would act in her aid on principles of their own national interest; but that the general principle of suppressing all revolutionary movements overcomes all considerations of private interest, and they therefore abstain from all aid. Here, then, is a practical application of their new principle; and it is because of the application of this principle that I have asked the House to express its opinion upon it; and I doubt not, that, in the Courts of the Allied Powers, opinions will be expressed discountenancing this attempt of the Greeks against the Turkish Government. So that the question seems to resolve itself into a proposition to consider whether we will give currency to the doctrines of the Alliance, by our acquiescence in them. This resolution, therefore, cannot be considered as nugatory and idle; it will show our opinion of the operation of those principles upon human happiness. And now I ask, sir, if it is not of some importance, after the President and the Secretary of State have thought proper to express their opinions on the subject, that this House should make a similar expression?

I think the passage of the resolution can have no effect for evil, while it will have much for good. It is said that it will produce war. I ask how? How is it to produce war? No one pretends that there is any just cause of war contained in it. Even the gentleman from New York, who has read Grotius so recently, has not shown any cause for war. But it is said that, whether there is cause or not, offence will be taken by the Allies; that they have one system, and we another; and that they will express an opinion the reverse of that contained in the resolution. And let them, sir, with all my heart; but is this war, sir? Yet still we hear nothing but war, war—“Arma virumque cano.” We must do nothing they dislike, for fear of war. But, sir, if you once let them understand this is to be your rule of proceeding, take my word for it, they will soon tell you of a great many things they do not like; and if you refuse this resolution on that ground, you will have set a precedent from which you cannot consistently escape.

As to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina, I think the Committee will be satisfied that if my proposition has a tendency to excite the anger of the allied Powers, his amendment is, on that score, much more dangerous. There appears to be some incongruity between the gentleman's argument and his resolution. He has told you that it is the duty of the Legislature to be stern and inflexible, and not to yield to feelings of sympathy; and, at the same time, he has proposed a resolution which expresses nothing but sympathy.

Suppose the gentleman from South Carolina were himself a representative of this Government, at the Court of Russia; and, after the adoption of his amendment, he were met by Pozzi Di Borgo, who should say to him, “I perceive by your papers that a string of resolutions have passed in your House of Representative, expressive of their warm sympathy in the cause of the Greeks, and against the principles of national policy laid down by the Holy Alliance. You seem all to be running Greek mad—why, sir, don't you know that those Greeks are nothing but a pack of rebels to their sovereign, who have been throwing a firebrand into the midst of the Ottoman empire? What, pray, have you to do with them, and what will this lead to?” What would be his answer? Deny the charge he could not—there are the very words produced against him. But if my resolution were adopted, his answer would be obvious enough. He would say, “the President had informed us, at the opening of the session of Congress, that a new State was rising up, in the Mediterranean sea—that they had succeeded in throwing off the government of the Turks, and in rendering themselves independent. The House of Representatives felt interested to inquire into the subject, and had merely authorized the President to send an agent, for that purpose, when he should think proper, and that the House would make the necessary appropriation.” Perhaps, sir, it arises from self love, but I had certainly rather, in such circumstances, undertake to defend my proposition, than that offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Does this resolution hasten the exercise of the duties of the President? Will he say that his discretion was hurried and that now he is bound to send an agent, at all events? No, sir. We leave the subject where we found it, in respect to the time, the place, the instructions, and the character of the agent to be sent. He may send a private messenger, if he chooses. It has been said, that, if a public agent is sent, he might possibly meet the Turkish sabre; he may go as a private citizen, and afterwards be accredited when proper. He need not be a public agent. The nature of the agency, and every thing relating to it, is left to the discretion of the President; and there I wish to leave it.

I must insist upon it, sir, that there is no cause whatever for the anti-pacific character that has been attributed to the resolution; and that it does not, in the least, hasten the exercise of power by the Executive. It comes, then, to this question at last, whether it is proper for the House to entertain, and express, an opinion, in relation to the new and dangerous doctrines set up as public law in Europe. I will trouble the Committee no longer. I regret that this case has not fallen into other hands and can only say (and the House will understand to what I allude) that, in the little experience I have had in public life, I have never supposed that my personal influence could affect any man's vote in favor of a cause I advocated, and I certainly have no reason to believe that the support I have given to this proposition will, on this occasion, have the opposite tendency.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. of R.

Mr. FULLER differed from his honorable colleague on this question. I think, said Mr. F., that the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina is a very harmless one, as it amounts to nothing; and it is, therefore, of such a character that the House ought not to be engaged in discussing it; and yet, negative as I view it, I prefer it to the absolute mischief which I believe would result from the original resolution. The gentleman asks how this resolution, which merely provides for the appointment of a commissioner, can produce such events as have been anticipated from it. I will endeavor to demonstrate that these consequences may result from the adoption of this measure, because such evidence is necessary upon the threshold of the argument. If we send an agent, he cannot be an ordinary agent. He will be known as our public agent, in all Europe, and it will be so explained to the Grand Signior; whether you call him minister, ambassador, envoy, or by any other name. He will not be the inoffensive, innocuous agent which has been spoken of. Does not every man know that the President has already the power to send an agent? What necessity is there for the interposition of Congress, and for a week's debate upon the subject? All this would tend to show, and Europe could have no other conviction, than that the United States were sending a minister of the highest grade; not, possibly, with the same salary and outfits, but clothed with full and ample powers. We know well enough that it is considered by all the nations of Europe that, sending a minister to provinces which have set up for themselves, in opposition to the mother country, is a just cause of war. I think I can convince my honorable colleague; who has professed his readiness to reason from the head, rather than the heart, that it will have the appearance of such an offensive act. Are we to expect the Grand Signior to draw any conclusions in our favor, by making nice distinctions in regard to the character of our agent? He will consider him as an authorized minister from the Government, and he will have a right so to consider him.

But, if we are prepared for this measure, this is not the mode in which it should originate. It is admitted, on all sides, that the President is the centre of all information, in regard to the foreign relations of the country; and consequently we require, when it is necessary, that he should give information to Congress upon subjects relating to our foreign affairs. This has always been the course which the business of the Government has taken. The Constitution enjoins him, at all times, to recommend to Congress such subjects as may, in his opinion, require its attention. But has he recommended the measure now before the House? Has he not considered the subject? His Message proves that he has. And why, then, has he not recommended the course which is now proposed to be pursued? He has still an opportunity to do so during the present session. Why should we interfere with the duties of the President? Why step out of our own path into his? Suppose it should happen that gentlemen who oppose this measure are right. Suppose the Turk should let loose upon our commerce the Barbary Powers, over which he exercises his control—suppose they should make an immediate attack upon that trade which the honorable member from Kentucky has called “a miserable invoice of figs and opium.” If this trade is really so inconsiderable, why have we now a squadron engaged in the protection of it? Sir, that trade is highly important. And if the Barbary Powers should threaten its destruction, shall we not find it necessary to repress such an attempt, whatever expense may be incurred? Even if it were to double our present debt, we should be bound to do it.

I think, then, sir, it is our duty to leave the responsibility of this act where the Constitution places it, in the hands of the President. When he makes a communication, suggesting the propriety of such a measure, it will be time enough for Congress to take the business in hand. By this course, we shall stand exculpated to our constituents. Then it cannot be said that the Eighteenth Congress has seen fit to step out of its proper sphere, to interfere with the foreign relations of the country—to tell the President he is too slow in the performance of his duty—that he does not regard the interests of the nation. Some gentlemen have remarked that the opposition to this resolution shows a distrust of the President—because it merely proposes to leave the exercise of this power in his discretion. But will it not be taken to enjoin upon him the appointment of a minister—and will he not incur the reproaches of some, perhaps inconsiderate, men, if he does not make the appointment? Whether he would resist the popular impression, or not, I do not know. But I think it is trusting him with a power which it was never intended should be vested in the Executive—the power of making war. He has the right to recommend war, but not to declare it. What would be thought of Congress if they should authorize the President to issue letters of marque and reprisal, or to do any other act of war after the close of the session, against any nation with which we are at peace? It never could have been intended to trust to the Executive the power of involving the country in war. And this will be the effect of the power to send a minister to the Greek Republic.

But I do my colleague, the mover of the resolution, the justice to believe that he does not think that war will be the consequence of this measure. If it will not, what good consequence can arise, which cannot be obtained without the resolution? Why give us such a forcible description of the detestable conspiracy of the allied Powers, and of the distresses of the Greeks, if no effect is expected to be produced upon either? I know well enough,

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

sir, that my honorable colleague is not in the habit of throwing away his arguments. It is never with him, vox et præterea nihil—I cannot but consider that war will be the consequence of this measure; that Turkey will declare war against us; and we shall be obliged to double our forces in their seas, and great trouble and expense will be incurred by the nation.

I intend to take up but little time, sir, on this subject, for, after the gentleman from Virginia and my colleague have so ably addressed the Committee, I am in the situation of poor King Richard—

“As in a theatre the eyes of men,
After a well graced actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next.”

I will consider, briefly, what will be the fate of the Greeks, if this measure does not pass. Greece, as the President informs us, is already substantially independent. She has achieved her independence, unassisted by any other Power, and is unopposed, but by Turkey. But I fear, sir, that she will never be permitted to establish a free Government. My heart misgives me, when I look beyond her connexion with Turkey. No doubt the Holy Alliance will interpose. The approaching Congress is ominous of such interposition—and the utmost we can expect in her favor, is, that she will not be subject either to the power of Turkey, or of the Autocrat—but that, under the auspices of the sovereigns, she may be permitted to enjoy an intermediate state, between freedom and the iron yoke which she has hitherto borne, provided we do not interfere. My honorable colleague has remarked, that the adventures of the far famed Knight of La Mancha have furnished a large portion of the arguments against his resolution, arising, no doubt, from a strong resemblance of the present enterprise to those ascribed to him; and I cannot forbear reminding him of the poor boy who was released from the scourge of his master by the valorous Knight's interference, but, being compelled to remain with his chastiser was, immediately, on the departure of the Don, subjected to ten-fold vengeance. So, in relation to Greece—if we interfere, we shall only render them more obnoxious than ever to the Holy Alliance. The Greeks do not ask us to send a Minister to them. We have no reason to suppose they are desirous of it. If they were able to anticipate the result, they would certainly not incur the odium of the Holy Alliance, by any contact with a country to them so utterly detestable. Such aid will be extremely pernicious to them. Our sympathy they have already. The voice of millions has ascended, in a general peal, to the skies, in behalf of the Greeks. If they were immediately contiguous to us, and if their danger were ten times greater than it is, it would be doubtful whether it was proper for us to interpose. It is the very course we interdict others from pursuing in reference to ourselves. We adopt a resolution for the relief of the Greeks, and then follow it by passing the resolution proposed by the honorable Speaker, declaring that we will not permit any interference from other Powers, with the concerns of our continent. In foreign wars, our country will be found to be exceedingly weak; although, as I trust, invincible in a war for our own defence.

Mr. F. spoke of our situation fifteen or sixteen years ago, when the continent of Europe was closed against the world; when our independence was in danger from the colossal power of Bonaparte. Many persons at that time recommended an alliance, offensive and defensive, with England—and what did the venerable sage who occupied the office of President do? Did he wish to enter into such an alliance? Did Congress recommend such an alliance? No. And I hope, said Mr. F., that the enlightened statesmen of this country will march on steadily in their course. If we are to engage in any conflict with foreign Powers, let us prepare to meet it, when it approaches us. I hope this Republic will not be propelled in her career by the impatience of the brilliant statesmen in this House; but that she may be permitted to ascend, with calm and dignified step, to the pinnacle of glory—there to remain a beacon to illuminate the benighted nations of the world through all future ages.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, followed Mr. FULLER in a few remarks, replying to Mr. WEBSTER, and vindicating the correctness of the views heretofore presented by him in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. A. SMITH then moved that the Committee rise, but withdrew his motion at the request of

Mr. BARTLETT, who proceeded to say, that however young he might be, either personally, or as a member of that House, he felt it incumbent on him to rise and to repel the charge of personality which had been cast by the honorable Speaker upon the opponents of the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts; were that charge, as stated, indeed applicable, the parties involved in it, would be more worthy of the cells of a criminal penitentiary, than of a seat on this floor. The charge had been made very broadly—and if the loud voice, the menacing look, and sneering gesture, which accompanied it, were intended to apply to him personally, he must send it back as unjust, ungenerous, untrue. With respect to what had fallen from the gentleman from Massachusetts, he could only say that he had from his infancy witnessed with delight the display of his virtues and his powers, and he had too long gazed with admiration upon that display to be surprised at the ability he had now displayed in argument, or at the coruscations of wit, with which it had been enlivened; and though it had been his lot to lie, in some measure, within their range, yet, even to him, they did but present an intellectual treat. He did not advise, but he must say to the honorable Speaker, that it was unwise to throw out the insinuations which had escaped him as to the motives of the opposition; they were as little merited as would be the insinuations of one who should say to that honorable gentleman, “You, sir, have a great personal and political object in view—you perceive that, on this question, the whole country is in a tempest—you feel it to be necessary for you to 'buy golden opinions from all sorts of men'—and you have aimed to 'ride on the whirlwind and direct the storm.' Insinuations of this kind, would be, as to that gentleman, unjust as they would be disgraceful to him who should make them, but not more so than those which had been thrown out against the opponents of the resolution. He had been "seriously advised" by the honorable Speaker, he ought, doubtless, to receive the advice with all due deference; yet, however criminal it might be, he felt inclined to say to him, "I thank you for your advice—more, forasmuch as it was altogether gratuitous and uncalled for; but, however inexperienced I may be, or however young, when I feel any need of lessons on the subject of political integrity, I feel myself of age to select my instructor."

JANUARY, 1824.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

The Committee had at one time been urged to give the Greeks a cheering word from this great nation, (not forty years old,) and yet at another they had been told that if they gave it, nobody would hear of it—it would never go beyond the walls of this House. Somewhat, too, of terror had been resorted to. Gentlemen were asked if they dare go home to their constituents after voting against the resolution. Whether to vote against the resolution, or against the opinion of that honorable gentleman were the more daring, he would not attempt to determine; where he should go when he left this House, he might not be able to say, but if not to his constituents, he certainly should not go to the Grand Seigneur, for he should make a bad slave either at Constantinople or in this House. However obscure he might be, he had no constituents so humble as not to know that he dare do all his duty.

Mr. CLAY rejoined. The gentleman from New Hampshire, he believed, was a new member of this House. If he had ever been here before, he was ignorant of it. He had never, till now, heard of his name, in the House or out of it. In his speech on the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts, this gentleman had gone out of his way to attack a resolution laid on the table by the Speaker, and which was not then under consideration. He had replied to him, he thought—he certainly intended it—with great respect, with great decorum; it was his habit so to treat every member of this House, and particularly a new member, on his trial, for the first time, before this House and this country. He chose to travel out of his track, said Mr. C., to assail my resolution; but I must say he did not more mistake the dimensions of the resolution than he has done his own. And now, after lying on his pillow for twenty-four hours, he comes here with a conned reply. What I now say, I say not for him, but out of respect to this House. If that gentleman had felt himself aggrieved, and had, at the time, requested an explanation, it would, with all readiness, have been furnished; but he has chosen to go on, and to seek it in the manner we have just witnessed, and now let him get it where he can. On this floor he shall never get it from me. The honorable gentleman has further permitted himself to introduce a topic the most unfit that can be brought before this Committee; he has alluded to a relation in which I stand to this country, (which has not been of my seeking,) and he has ventured to insinuate that the ground I have taken in the present discussion has been influenced by motives derived from, or connected with, that relation. [Here the Chairman interposed, and reminded the gentleman now speaking, that the gentleman last up had expressly disclaimed the imputation of such motives, and had said that it would be unjust.] Mr. C. resumed—I know he disclaimed them, and yet he made them, sir—I know the import of words. If a man says a thing is black, and then tells me he meant by that to say that it was white, I know how to understand him; but if he did mean to cast the insinuation upon me, I cast it back with scorn and contempt upon his own shoulders, and there it rests.

Mr. A. SMYTH, of Virginia, then moved that the Committee rise; which was carried, and the Committee rose accordingly—having obtained leave to sit again.

MONDAY, January 26:

Mr. TEN EYCK presented a petition of sundry inhabitants of the State of New York, praying that a lighthouse may be erected at the lower end of Lake Ontario and entrance of the river St. Lawrence.

Mr. KENT presented memorials from sundry inhabitants of the District of Columbia, praying for an alteration in the form of government, as well as in the administration of justice, in said District.

Mr. MERCER presented a memorial of sundry farmers, merchants, and millers, in the State of Virginia, praying that an alteration, which is therein specified, may be made in the laws relative to the inspection of flour in the town of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia.

The said memorials were referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALEXANDER, of Tennessee, presented the report of a committee, accompanied by a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of that State, upon the subject of a deficiency in the quantity of lands ordered by Congress to be reserved for the purposes of education in that State.

The SPEAKER presented a petition of Edwin Lewis, of the State of Alabama, praying that the official conduct of Charles Tait, district judge of the United States for the district of Alabama, may be again inquired into, to the end that the said judge may be impeached and removed from office, for improper and extra judicial conduct.

The said resolution and petition were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, praying that a provision, therein suggested, may be made, so as to extend further relief to certain purchasers of public lands, prior to the 1st of July, 1820.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the expenditure, for the last year, of the annual appropriation, made by the act of the 3d of March, 1819, for the civilization of the Indian tribes adjoining the frontiers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making further appropriations for the military service of the United States for the year 1824, [intercourse with the Indians;] which was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House, to which is committed the bill making appropriations for the military service of the United States for the year 1824.

Mr. McLANE, from the same committee, also reported a bill making appropriations for the support of the Navy of the United States, for the year 1824; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITTLESEY, from the same committee, made a report on the petition of Adelaide Brush, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the representatives of Elijah Brush; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, made a report on the petition of Joseph Marechal, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles: An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Firman Le Sieur; An act for the relief of Celestin Moreau, of Louisiana; and An act rewarding the officers and crews of two gigs, or small boats, under the command of Lieutenant Francis H. Gregory, of the United States Navy; in which bills the Senate ask the concurrence of this House.

The resolution submitted by Mr. FLOYD, on the 24th instant, was taken up, read, modified, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be laid before this House an estimate of the expense which would be incurred by transporting two hundred of the troops now at the Council Bluffs to the mouth of the Columbia or Oregon river.

On motion of Mr. GURLEY, the Committee on the Public Lands were directed to inquire into the expediency of passing a law of prescription, limiting the time in which suits may be instituted for the recovery of lands in the State of Louisiana, claimed under titles derived from the French, British, and Spanish Governments, in all cases where there is adverse possession in the Government of the United States, or in any person or persons claiming the same, from or under said Government.

On motion of Mr. STORRS, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act, entitled "An act supplementary to an act for the better organization of the courts of the United States, within the State of New York," passed March 3d, 1823, that an appeal may be had from any final decree or judgment rendered in the district court of the northern district of said State; before the passage of said act.

On motion of Mr. McKEAN, the bill for the relief of Thomas Williams, reported to this House on the 17th. of January, 1823, but never acted upon, together with the petition and documents upon which the said bill was founded, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MERCER laid the following resolution on the table, for consideration on to-morrow, viz:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House such part as he may not deem inexpedient to divulge, of any correspondence or negotiation which he may have instituted with any foreign Government, since the 28th of February last; in compliance with a request contained in a resolution of the House of Representatives of that date, relative to the denunciation of the African slave trade as piracy.

THE GREEK CAUSE.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on Mr. WEBSTER's and Mr. POINSETT's motions respecting the Greeks; when

Mr. A. SMYTH, of Virginia, addressed the Chair. He said, that, being deeply impressed with the importance of the question before the Committee, he would solicit respectfully the attention of members, while he delivered his observations. [He then read the resolution offered by Mr. WEBSTER, "That provision ought to be made, by law, for defraying the expense incident to the appointment of an agent or commissioner to Greece, whenever the President shall deem it expedient to make such appointment."] Before he proceeded, he would, he said, declare, in consequence of some remarks which had been made in this debate, that his feelings towards the honorable mover of this resolution, were those of respect, as well for his head as his heart.

Mr. Chairman: What are we called on to do? To acknowledge a new Power; to introduce a new nation into the great family of nations. It has been said, that this resolution is perfectly harmless; that it leaves the acknowledgment to be made by the President of the United States, to whom it belongs. I cannot agree that the resolution is harmless, or that it leaves the acknowledgment to be made by the President. It declares that provision ought to be made, by law, for defraying the expenses of a mission to Greece. Is not this an acknowledgment of the independence of Greece? Yes, sir; this is an immediate acknowledgment, and one of the most solemn kind. An embassy to Greece, sent by the President, with the consent of the Senate, would be a less solemn recognition of the independence of the Greeks; for, by this resolution, a law is to be passed by Congress, declaring Greece an independent Power. It will not only be an acknowledgment of a new Power, by Congress, but by the President himself, if he should approve the act, and yet the initiative, in making the acknowledgment, will have been taken from him. Should such a law pass, the acknowledge of Greece, as an independent nation, is complete. The mischief, if it is a mischief, will have been done; and no subsequent prudence, on the part of the President, can avert the consequences, whatever they are to be. The nation must then be responsible.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

Let us consider what will be the probable consequences of this acknowledgment. We must look into the history of nations. We are not to conclude, from the forbearance of Spain when we acknowledged the independence of her American provinces, that all other nations would be equally passive on a similar occasion. It is always a question of policy and discretion whether a government, which may deem itself injured by such an acknowledgment, shall, or shall not, resort to war. The cases from which we derive the most aid, in deciding what is the Law of all Nations in this particular, are the cases of the United Provinces of the Netherlands, when they revolted against Spain, and the case of these United States, during our Revolution. According to these cases, the acknowledgment of a new Power, during the civil war which follows the revolt of provinces against the mother country, by a third Power, is, to the mother country, cause of war. It will be recollected that, during the war of our Revolution, England made war on France and other European Powers for favoring us. [Here Mr. SMYTH read, from Marten's Law of Nations, the following passages: "Suppose that the interior troubles of a State come to an open rupture between the sovereign and his subjects, and that the whole nation, or a part of it, should wish to drive him from the throne; or suppose that a province, or territory subjected to another State, refuses obedience to it, and endeavors to render itself independent . With respect to the first of these, a foreign nation, not under any obligation to interfere, does not appear to violate its perfect obligations, nor to deviate from the principles of neutrality, if, in adhering to the possession, (without examining into its legality,) it treats as sovereign him who is actually on the throne; and as an independent nation, people who have declared, and still maintain themselves independent. In fact, whether we speak of the passive conduct observed in such circumstances, or of the succors furnished by foreign Powers, it is State policy that generally decides whether he who feels himself offended shall dissemble, or, at most, complain of the injury, or whether he shall seek retaliation by violent means.* The conduct that Great Britain observed, particularly towards France, Spain, and the Pope, after the Revolution of 1688, and that which she observed towards several other Powers, after the colonies of North America declared themselves independent, may seem to illustrate this subject."] Thus we see that England several times declared war against nations for interfering between her and her former provinces, while she continued to make war, with a view to resubject them to her authority.

When a people have declared, and also maintained, their independence, they may be acknowledged as an independent Power without giving just cause of war to their former sovereign. Can that be affirmed with regard to the Greeks? By no means. They have not yet achieved, much less maintained, their independence. They possess the Morea, a small part of continental Greece; but the latest accounts inform us that they have been driven from Athens to take refuge in one of the islands. It might have been timely affirmed of some of the Spanish provinces, when their independence was acknowledged by us, that they had maintained it.

The honorable Speaker has observed, that we received from revolutionary France, ministers sent by kings, conventions, anarchy, and emperors, and therefore we may send a minister to revolutionary Greece. But Genet, Fauchet, and Adet, were ministers from undivided France; from the whole nation: from the Government de facto of an independent nation, at war with all Europe. They were not ministers from a revolted province, but from the nation whose governments were lawful, on our principles, as they were instituted by the nation. But no minister was received from either party while a civil war for the throne divided Spain.

It having been shown that the acknowledgment of a revolted province as an independent nation, by a third Power, while the mother country still carries on a war for the purpose of asserting a right to such province, would be considered a cause of war by the most civilized nations, can we doubt that it would be deemed cause of war by the Government of Turkey, the most violent and lawless of all Governments? The honorable member from Kentucky supposes that the resolutions of this body may remain unknown to the Turkish Divan. But it is not at all probable that a measure of this kind would remain long unknown to them. Some Power would immediately communicate our proceedings to the Turk, and explain to him, that, by them, we had violated the usages of nations. When we proposed confidentially, to the British Government, to acknowledge the independence of the Spanish American provinces, that Court, then less friendly, perhaps, to us, than at this time, immediately communicated our proposition to the Spanish Government, with a view, no doubt, to embroil us with Spain.

This proceeding would be a violation of our declared principles. The President has declared to the Allies, that "We should consider any attempt, on their part, to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere, as dangerous to our peace and safety." With the existing colonies or dependencies (meaning Greece) of any European Power, (meaning Turkey,) we have not interfered, and shall not interfere. But with the Governments who have declared their independence, and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration, and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling, in any other manner, their destiny, by any European Power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition towards the United States. * * * * Our policy in regard to Europe, which was adopted at the early stage of the wars which have so long agitated that quarter of the globe, nevertheless remains the same, which is not to interfere in the internal concerns of any of its Powers. * * * * It is impossible that the Allied Powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent, without endangering our peace and happiness. * * * * It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition, in any form, with indifference." Such, sir, are the principles declared by the President in the name of the nation. We say to the Allies, that any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere, we shall consider as dangerous to our peace and safety. And is not the extension of our system to their hemisphere equally dangerous to their peace and safety? We say that, with the existing colonies or dependencies of any European Power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere. How can we then interfere with the Morea, a province of Turkey, without a violation of our solemn declaration? Sir, by this proceeding, you will make the declaration of the President, as to the future course of policy to be observed by this Government, a falsehood. We acknowledge the Greek republic; and what are the reasons which we assign for doing so? Why, because the allied sovereigns have said that the Greeks have thrown a firebrand into the Ottoman empire, and have declared that they would put down revolution in Europe. Is not this going out of our way to beard the Allies; to seek a quarrel with them respecting the affairs of Europe; and to propagate our system on the other side of the Atlantic? [Here Mr. WEBSTER explained.] Mr. S. read from a newspaper the following passages from the speech of Mr. W. "Let us direct the force, the vast moral force of this engine, to the aid of others. Public opinion is the great enemy of the Holy Alliance. * * * * Sir, I am not of those who are for withholding aid when it is most urgently needed, and, when the distress is past, and the aid no longer necessary, overwhelming the sufferers with caresses. I will not stand by and see my fellow man drowning, without stretching out a hand to help him, till he has, by his own efforts and presence of mind, reached the shore in safety, and then encumber him with aid." [Mr. WEBSTER again explained, and disclaimed saying that we should attack the Allies, because they said that Greece had thrown a firebrand into the Ottoman empire. Mr. S. replied. The gentleman did not exactly say so, but he stated certain facts which, as I understood him, afforded reasons why we should acknowledge the independence of Greece. He, Mr. S., had no wish to impute to the gentleman any argument that he did not use. The Committee would doubtless understand the gentleman according to his explanation.]

H. OF R.

The Greek Cause.

JANUARY, 1824.

Another weighty objection to the resolution, Mr. S. said, was, that it was an interference with the Executive power. The people of the United States have separated the powers granted by them between the several branches of the Government. This proposition goes to blend those powers; and every attempt unreasonably to extend the powers of the Government, or to blend the powers of the several departments, tends to the destruction of the Constitution. This is an attempt to dictate to the Executive the performance of an act which the Constitution has confided to the discretion and information of the President. I need not, said Mr. S., read clauses from the Constitution, which has been laid on every gentleman's table. The President is authorized to receive embassies; this is one mode of acknowledging a foreign Power; he is also authorized to send embassies, by the consent of the Senate; this is another mode of recognising a foreign Power; he also, by the same consent, ratifies treaties. With all this the House of Representatives have nothing to do. If you have nothing to do with a treaty, why should you prescribe when, or to whom, an embassy shall be sent? The powers granted to you are purely legislative, with the exception of the power to declare war, which is elsewhere intrusted to the Executive authority. The foreign relations of the nation are confided by the people to the President and Senate, in whose superior information and discretion reliance is placed. If you interfere with the power to send and receive embassies, you may come into collision with the President, and you will blend powers which the people intended should be kept distinct. As the authority to send embassies belongs to the President and Senate, we should not invade their authority or originate a measure which, unless they will give up a part of their exclusive authority, they must reject. Your law is not necessary to enable the President to send an embassy; he is possessed of the authority already. If you pass the bill proposed, the President will not be left at liberty to decide freely. He must acknowledge the independence of Greece, or reject your bill. You place him in a painful dilemma; and, perhaps, compel him to use a prerogative seldom exerted. But suppose that, believing the measure to be improper, he puts his veto on the bill; still, two-thirds of both Houses may pass it into a law, and thus acknowledge the republic of Greece, against the opinion of the President, in whose discretion the people particularly confide, and thus defeat the provisions of the Constitution—a popular assembly, carried away by eloquence and a love of liberty, deciding, instead of the cool, deliberate caution of the President. If you can pass a law to send a mission when the President pleases, you can pass a law to send a mission next month. In either case, it would be the law that would make the acknowledgment. Your act being the supreme law of the land, the flag of Greece would be respected in our courts as the flag of an independent Power, whether the embassy was ever sent or not. We acknowledge the independence of Powers with whom we have no ambassadors.

The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. CLAY) declares that he is for leaving the whole responsibility with the President, where the Constitution placed it; yet, he advocates a measure which, so far as respects the act of acknowledgment, leaves nothing to the discretion or responsibility of the President, but takes from him the one and relieves him from the other. The act of Congress will be the acknowledgment, and not the embassy.

JANUARY, 1824.

The Greek Cause.

H. OF R.

The Constitution has confided this matter to the President. If we take the first step, we take the honor, if it shall prove fortunate. Shall we consider him as responsible, if the measure shall be productive of evil, and yet assume to ourselves the honor of it, if it shall be productive of good? No. Leave the President to act for the nation, upon his own judgment and his own responsibility; and, if the measure deserves honor, let it be his. Let me notice a consequence of this irregular mode of proceeding. It is natural that a new Power should feel gratitude to the nation by which it is first acknowledged as an independent Power; but, by this course of proceeding, the individual who first brings forward the resolution for acknowledgment, though prematurely, takes the gratitude of the new people rather than the Government, which deliberates and defers the acknowledgment until the present time. But it is the nation, deciding by its Government, that is entitled to this gratitude; therefore, every attempt irregularly to divert the gratitude of a new Power, whether in South America or Greece, to an individual, instead of the Government, should be frowned upon in this House.

It may be useful to recollect what was done concerning the recognition of the Spanish American provinces. There it was attempted to take the initiative from the President. A proposition for their acknowledgment was made in this House years before the President thought proper to acknowledge their independence. Objections were made to the measure, founded on the Constitution and the law of nations; and the attempt was successfully resisted. The President, left to act on his own discretion and responsibility, made the acknowledgment in due time. Did not the President give satisfaction to the whole nation by his selection of the time for the acknowledgment of these new Powers? Yes; and it was much more clear, when the acknowledgment was made by the President, that new nations had maintained their independence, than it was when the acknowledgment was first proposed in this House. There seems to be no reason for attempting to take from the President a discretion which has been so well exercised. When attempts have been made to extend, without limit, the powers of this Government, it was hoped, that at least the division of power among the several branches thereof would be preserved; but it seems the partitions are to be broken down, and this House is to be the fountain of all power.

We are sitting in judgment on the Russian and the Turk. But what right have we to judge of their acts, unless they affect us? And we are about to take measures on our own behalf. What right have we to judge between the Turk and his revolted subjects, unless our own interest or safety is concerned? We should not take it well that our proceedings should be denounced by foreign Governments. We do not take it well that the Russian Minister, at the Court of Spain, denounces the United States as the source of all the evils which have disturbed the nations and sovereigns of Europe; and we should take it worse were the like denunciations made by his master. What have we to do with the oppressions of the Government of China, India, Turkey, or France, unless we are about to relieve the oppressed? We have nothing to do with the wrongs committed by other Governments against those whom they govern, but to avoid their example.

You profess to interfere on behalf of the Greeks for liberty and religion. What have you to do with the liberty of any people, except the people you govern, unless the subjection of a neighboring foreign people endangers your safety? You have nothing to do with religion, even here, and why should you meddle with it elsewhere? In a treaty made with one of those Turkish nations, during the Administration of Mr. Adams, it was explicitly and truly declared that the Government of the United States is in no respect founded on religion. The Turk may become a citizen of the United States, and have his mosque in our country, as well as the Jew his synagogue. You interfere for Grecian liberty, for the liberty of the descendants of the ancient Greeks, to whom you owe a debt of gratitude; but the modern Greeks cannot be identified with the people who produced Aristides and Socrates. Greece has been often conquered, and foreign people have planted themselves there. The modern Greeks are a religious sect, professors of the Greek Church. What entitles the inhabitants of Moldavia and Wallachia to the name of Greeks? They are so called from their religion, as the Emperor of Russia is styled Emperor of the Greeks. These people are descended from inhabitants of the Greek empire, and it is religion that separates them from the Turks. You interfere for the most degraded of the people of Europe, and the least fit for self-government.

Justice is not done to the Turk in this debate; but the author of evil himself is entitled to justice. It has been said that "the massacre of Scio is a scene without parallel in the history of fallen man." Atrocious as it was, there are many cases in ancient and modern times, of massacres far exceeding in atrocity the massacre of Scio. Far be it from me to offer any apology for acts that I abhor, but error should be corrected. To enable us to make a just comparison between the Turks and their neighbors, I will direct your attention to some massacres of the Russians in modern times. On the capture of Ismael, in 1790, thirty thousand Turks were massacred in cold blood, and the city given up to brutality. On the taking of Warsaw, in 1794, nine hours after the place was taken, it was set on fire, and nine thousand unarmed persons, women and infants, perished in the flames. These exploits were performed during the reign of the august lady who has been mentioned in this debate; and by Suwarrow, who afterwards became so great a favorite in this country that several articles of dress, some of them belonging to the fair sex, were called after him. A massacre in Cyprus has been mentioned; this reminds me of the massacre in the same island by the Jews of two hundred and forty thousand Greeks, many of whom perished by tortures. When the Christian Ostrogoths took Milan, they massacred all the males, and sent three hundred thousand females to their allies, the Burgundians. We have been carried on a crusade to Jerusalem, to recover the holy sepulchre. It may be well to consider the achievements of the former crusaders. When they took Jerusalem, seventy thousand Moslems were put to the sword, and the Jews were shut up in their synagogues, and burned! Sir, uncivilized men, of whatever faith, are the same. It is civilization, and not superstition, that makes man humane and merciful. The Turks are equally good, and equally bad, with Jews and Christians who are equally uncivilized.

In religion, the Turks are more tolerant than their Christian neighbors. It has been said in this debate, that seven millions of Christians, of the Greek church, are found in the Turkish empire. This proves that the Mahometan is more tolerant than the Holy Catholic Church. Where will you find seven millions of dissenters in a Catholic country? Go to Portugal, to Spain, to Italy, to Austria, even to France, you will not find that the same toleration has been allowed as in Turkey. The Mahometan conquerors offered a double alternative, the Koran, the tribute, or the sword. It was not so in Catholic countries. Remember the extirpation of the Albigenses—the persecution of the Netherlands, under the Duke of Alva—the expulsion of the Huguenots from France—the expulsion of the Moors from Spain—the Inquisition—and it will be obvious that a comparison between the tolerance of the Turks and the Catholics, is altogether in favor of the Turks.

Sir, the present is a time of imminent danger, and, therefore, a time for caution. Remember the words of WASHINGTON: "Why quit your own, to stand on foreign ground?" Meddle not with Greece. I tell you, that Greece cannot exist as a Republic; and if allowed to become a separate nation, under a prince of her own, it must be under the control of Russia. From the position of Greece, between Russia, Austria, and Turkey, it cannot maintain itself as an independent nation. The revolt of Greece would not have been allowed to continue until this time, but that Austria and Russia cannot agree what shall become of that country, which each of them desires to possess. Can it be supposed that the allies, who are not disposed to allow the independence of South America, who scarcely tolerate us, will permit two or three millions of half civilized people, in their vicinity, to form a Republic? It is not to be expected. The most that can be done for the advantage of the Greeks, is to assist them to obtain favorable terms from the Turks. Our interference may furnish a pretext to men of blood—to come upon us; and, whatever may be said of the strength of the United States, I am not for exposing it to trial, in a contest with the allies.

The extensive and enlightened view of the policy pursued by the Allied Powers, taken by the honorable member from Massachusetts, (Mr. WEBSTER,) authorizes a few remarks upon the same subject. It seems to me that our policy is to give no reasonable cause of offence, and to stand on our guard. It belongs to England to interfere with Greece, or the Allies; and if she is involved in a war with the Allies, for the independence of nations, we ought to give her assurance that we will not be neutral, but will give her faithful and honorable support. If we are to be engaged in war with all the Powers of Europe, it may be better to begin while we can have allies in the Spanish American nations; for, it will be obvious, if the Allies attack them, that nothing is intended for us, but the favor of being the last destroyed.

The cause of freedom, the hope of mankind, depends on the ultimate success of the hitherto successful experiment in the science of government, making in the United States. When we consider the importance of the interests confided to us, it must appear unpardonable wantonly to hazard the success of that experiment. If there be a mode of destroying civil liberty, it is by leading this Government into unnecessary wars. There can be no increase of the happiness of this people. Individuals may experience wants; but, as a nation, we have nothing more to ask of Heaven. All we have to ask of other nations is, friendship and "let us alone." What shall we deserve if, without necessity, we plunge this happy people into war and distress? Whatever may be said of the valor of our people, and the glory of the nation, I should be very unwilling to engage in a war with Europe. We might defend ourselves. I think we should successfully defend ourselves. I am no prophet of evil. We do not act on our own responsibility; we act for an immortal people. This people are to be immortal; but whether in freedom or abject subjection, is uncertain. This people are to be responsible for our acts, with their treasure and their blood. I am not disposed to bring upon them a trial, such as Spain passed through, in the war waged against that nation, for the purpose of placing Joseph Bonaparte on the Throne.

England and the United States seem to me to have a common interest to resist these unholy Allies. There are now only two Powers in Europe—England and the Allies. If Greece can become an independent nation, let one of them take the first step in the recognition. The Allies are ruled by Russia. England holds the fate of the world. Calculating on her policy, I think she will, she must, make a stand against Russia. As England cannot become the head of the Alliance, her pride secures us. She might become one hand of the Alliance, allowing France is to be the other, and Russia the head; but that situation would not gratify her pride. England will make a stand against the Allies, and we should support her. But she will not strike for Greece; she will pursue another course of policy, and with good reason. It is the interest of England to prevent the extension of Russian power. To prevent this extension, it is necessary that the Turkish Empire should be maintained one and indivisible. England may strike for Turkey, because, with English aid, Turkey may stand against Russia. England will, if necessary, strike for the independence of the new nations of Spanish America. She will not suffer the Allies to add them to their confederacy, or Spain to blot them from the map of the world. My enmity to England has been very steady for many years, but it shall cease if England takes up arms for the independence of nations. England and the United States can secure the independence of nations. Whether the United States, without England, could, must be proved by time.

JANUARY, 1824.

Proceedings.

H. OF R.

Let us leave the fate of Greece and of Turkey to England. If it is the interest of England that the Turkish Empire shall remain undivided, it is ours. If it is the interest of England that Turkey and Persia should be at peace, because their wars endanger the religion of Islam, it is ours. England and the United States have now a common cause and a common interest. Russia is now the great enemy of the independence of nations and of free institutions. England will not acknowledge the independence of Greece, for that would divide and weaken the Turkish Empire; and what will then stop the progress of Russia? Neither Persia nor India. Russia will establish an empire greater than the Roman, in the zenith of its power; from the authority of which, it will be in vain for man to attempt to escape. Sir, our course, I think, is plain. Let us be moderate and just. Let us offer no aggression; throw out no menaces, and give the Allies no pretext to quarrel with us.

When Mr. SMYTH had concluded—

Mr. RICH, of Vermont, said such were the arguments which had been employed, both for and against the resolution, and such the feelings with which they had been urged, that, although nothing was proposed but a small appropriation, to be expended in the discretion of the Executive, it was impossible that it should be considered in any other light than a kind of protest against the doctrine attempted to be established by the Sovereigns of Europe. If, said Mr. R., gentlemen are disposed to bring forward a distinct proposition for such a protest, he at present saw no cause for an objection. But it appeared to him to be now too late to make it in reference to an isolated case—be the oppression on the one hand, and the effort for liberty on the other, what it might.

A few years since, said Mr. R., we saw these new doctrines extended to France, and her ruler expelled his country. We saw the same ruler expelled a second time, after an exhibition of the most triumphant proof, that, in all France, "legitimacy" had not a single bayonet willingly devoted to its cause. We saw, in the final exile of Napoleon, an indignity offered to the whole civilized world, of which the annals of oppression furnish no example; and, more recently, we have witnessed an unholy triumph of the "Holy Alliance" over Spain; and yet our protest has been withheld. But, he added, if gentlemen think proper to adopt a protest, let them bring it forward as a distinct proposition, which cannot be misunderstood. Should the question, said Mr. R., be pressed to a decision, whether that decision be for or against the resolution, such is the state of public feeling that it will be a subject of universal regret if the majority shall be but small. Mr. R. concluded his remarks with saying that he would respectfully suggest to the Committee, whether, considering the diversity of opinion which was known to exist, it would not be advisable to rise without taking the question, either on the amendment offered by the member from South Carolina, or the original resolution. And with an understanding that, unless in the course of the session, something should occur to create greater unanimity, the subject should not be further pressed upon their attention. In order to obtain the sense of the members on this point, Mr. R. said he would move that the Committee rise, and he submitted that motion.

Mr. WRIGHT requested the member from Vermont to waive his motion till he could submit an amendment to the amendment of the member from South Carolina.

To this Mr. RICH assented, saying he presumed, when the amendment should have been offered, the floor would be yielded him to renew his motion for the Committee to rise.

Mr. WRIGHT then moved the following amendment to the amendment of Mr. POINSETT, viz: Strike out all after the words "Resolved that," and insert the following: "Provision ought to be made by law for defraying the expense incident to the appointment of an agent to Greece, whenever, in the opinion of the President, such an appointment shall be deemed proper and expedient, consistent with the neutral character and pacific relations of the United States."

Before any question was taken on this amendment,

Mr. RICH renewed his motion for the Committee's rising, which was carried—ayes 131.

The Committee then rose, and the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 27.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill, more effectually to provide for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VINTON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill to provide for repaying to Bazaleel Wells a certain sum of money, by him erroneously paid into the Treasury; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The resolution yesterday offered by Mr. MER-

H. OF R.

Report of the Postmaster General.

JANUARY, 1824.

CER, calling on the President for certain information touching the suppression of the slave trade, was called up, and agreed to.

Bills from the Senate, of the following titles, to wit:

1st. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Firman Le Sieur;

2d. An act for the relief of Celestin Moreau, of Louisiana;

3d. An act rewarding the officers and crews of two gigs, or small boats, under the command of Lieutenant Francis H. Gregory, of the United States Navy; were severally read the first and second times, and referred; the 1st, to the Committee on the Public Lands;

2d, to the Committee on Private Land Claims;

3d, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion of Mr. OWEN, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire into the expediency of passing a law, expressing the consent of the General Government to the revocation of so much of the ordinance adopted by the Convention of the State of Alabama, as relates to the navigable rivers within said State, or to such a modification thereof as will enable said State to effect the improvement of its navigable waters: And further, to grant the consent of the General Government to the provisions of two acts passed at the last session of the Legislature of Alabama, one entitled "An act to improve the navigation of the Coosa river, and to aid in its connexion with the Tennessee waters," and the other, "An act to improve the navigation of the Tennessee river."

On motion of Mr. LIVINGSTON, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were directed to report on the propriety of establishing a more direct communication between the Seat of Government and the city of New Orleans.

On motion of Mr. McARTHUR, the Committee on Military Affairs were instructed to inquire what further improvements, if any, ought to be made in the rifles, muskets, and other public arms, manufactured at the different armories of the United States.

On motion of Mr. TEST, the Committee on the Public Lands were instructed to inquire into the expediency of passing an act, authorizing a patent to issue in favor of William Conner, in severalty, for six hundred and forty acres of land, lying on or near White river, in the State of Indiana, at a place called the Delaware towns, and entered by the said William Conner in the land office at Brookville; which land was granted to him by Congress, for his aid and assistance in effecting the several treaties with the Indian tribes, for the extinguishment of their titles to lands in the States of Ohio and Indiana, concluded at St. Mary's, in the State of Ohio, in the Fall of the year 1818.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for the relief of John Michael; and, after several amendments, it was reported, and ordered to a third reading.

The House went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill to authorize the sale of lands conveyed to the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes; which, after some discussion, was reported with an amendment; on the question for its passing to a third reading, Mr. FOOT, wishing for further consideration, moved that it lie on the table; which was agreed to.

REPORT OF POSTMASTER GENERAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report of the Postmaster General, of such "further measures as are necessary to provide for a more equitable compensation to deputy postmasters, according to the duties and services rendered by them," prepared in obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted at the last session of Congress; which report was read, and laid on the table. It is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, Jan. 24, 1824.

SIR: In obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the United States, at their last session, which "directed the Postmaster General to report, at an early period of the next session of Congress, what further measures are necessary to provide for a more equitable compensation to deputy postmasters, according to the duties and services rendered by them," I have the honor to report, that the present mode of compensating deputy postmasters, by giving them a graduated per cent. upon moneys received by them, is believed to be, in most cases, the most equitable that can be adopted. So far as this compensation extends, it is generally proportioned to the labor required, and the responsibility incurred.

Deputy postmasters, with a few exceptions, receive less for their services than any other officers of the General Government. But, as competent persons to discharge the duties of postmasters have been found willing to serve, in every part of the country, and as the present embarrassment of this Department requires the utmost economy in its expenditures, it is believed that the public interest would not, at this time, be promoted, by a general increase of their compensation. A small addition of pay to each postmaster would afford but little benefit to the individual, whilst it would take from the receipts of the Department an amount so considerable, as to render an appropriation from the Treasury indispensable. There are, however, some post offices, where the labor is great, and the perquisites so small, that, unless some additional compensation be given, it is feared competent persons cannot long be found to discharge the duties.

I have endeavored, though unsuccessfully, to fix upon some rule, which would give additional compensation, where it seems to be indispensable, without extending the provision so far as to render the amount objectionable. It is believed that no provision can be made, embracing a class of cases, so as to give an increase of pay, in the just proportion which the services require.

There are several hundred offices at which packages are distributed, for which no additional compensation is given. In some cases this duty is very laborious, whilst the perquisites of the offices are very small. An increased per cent. upon the moneys received by each, would not graduate the pay in proportion to the service required, as, at some offices, which receive not more than one hundred and fifty dollars, this service is as laborious as at others, where more than a thousand dollars are received. If, in such cases, an increase of ten per cent. were given, the compensation to some would be more than six times greater than to others.

More than seventy offices distribute packages after

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

ten o'clock at night, and before five in the morning. Postmasters who discharge this duty, are entitled to consideration, not only on account of the labor which they perform, but the unseasonable hours in which they are required to perform it. But, in these cases, an additional per cent. on the moneys received, would not do equal justice, as the disproportion for compensation, for similar services, would be as great as above stated.

A specific sum, given to each postmaster for this service, would not compensate in proportion to the labor performed, as the labor at some offices is ten times greater than at others.

If the means of the Department would authorize the measure, an increase of pay to postmasters who separate packages, and to some others, would be neither unjust nor impolitic; but, at present, it seems to be necessary to confine any provision for an increase within very narrow limits.

On a full consideration of the subject, it is believed that a special provision, in each case where an increase of pay shall be deemed indispensable, can be made with more justice to the postmaster, and less injury to the revenue of the Department, than any other mode which can be adopted.

Which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN McLEAN.

Hon. HENRY CLAY,

Speaker House of Representatives.

SURVEYS FOR ROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to postpone the order of the day to take up the bill for obtaining the necessary survey, &c., on roads and canals. The motion was carried—ayes 105.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, addressed the Chair as follows:

If the gentleman on whose motion the Committee last rose, and who, for that reason, had been expected to renew the debate, were now in his seat, I should certainly not interfere with his right; but, in his absence, I beg leave to offer a few considerations, in support of the power of the General Government to lend its aid to the making of roads and canals.

The bill, now under consideration, proposes merely an appropriation of money for certain surveys, to be made under the direction of the President of the United States, and might, therefore, be sustained upon grounds which the most sceptical would scarcely controvert; but, as it has been met by the general Constitutional objection, and, as I am willing to treat it as a step in the progress of internal improvement, I feel no inclination to shrink from the topic thus presented. Besides, the expediency of incurring expense in procuring surveys of the country without the power of afterwards using the information thus acquired, might well be questioned.

In entering upon this discussion, every one must be sensible of the disposition, existing in many sections of the Union, to narrow the powers of the General Government as much as possible: and it cannot be disguised, that it has never been permitted to adopt any measure, not forced upon it by the most urgent and imperious necessity, even to the creation of a corporation, without a long and labored investigation into its Constitutional functions. Under a spirit of jealousy, so keen and vigilant, no serious usurpation need be apprehended; and if there be any danger in all this, I rather think it lies in a different direction.

I am not disposed to complain of this temper, however; but, on the contrary, would cherish it. I have great confidence in the sober good sense of the people of the United States, and, so far as our frequent discussions here are calculated to explain to them the different views which are entertained of the nature of our Government, they will learn to think and investigate for themselves, and be finally conducted to a true interpretation of its principles. If our powers be found too narrow for the public exigencies, they will enlarge them; if we exceed our bounds, they will bring us back to our proper sphere. We should bring with us, however, into all these deliberations, a disposition to ascertain what the Constitution really is, rather than a determination to make it what we desire it to be.

Upon this, as on every other like occasion, the advocates of the power of the Government have been compelled to discuss and establish all its elementary principles—nothing is taken as settled: precedents go for nothing; and all previous acts are founded in usurpation. We are reminded that the Government is a limited one; that we have no powers that are not expressly granted; that all others are reserved to the States and the people; and that, as the power to make roads and canals is not expressed, it does not exist. Some of these propositions no reasonable man would question; but one would suppose it was too late in the day to contend that this Government may not exercise any, and very important powers, that are not expressly given; and yet this is asserted, and must be disproved.

The true question must always be, what powers are fairly deducible from a reasonable interpretation of the instrument by which they are defined; and I am free to say, that the nature of the system, the diversity of objects and interests for which it is provided, and the variety of circumstances through which it must pass, demand a liberal interpretation. The observation has already become stale, that the principal objects only, for which this Government was created, could be expressly defined, and that the great mass of powers, be they large or small, which are to be employed as the means necessary to accomplish those objects, could not be enumerated or expressed, but were necessarily to depend upon circumstances, as they should arise.

I concede to gentlemen, that ours is a limited Government; limited as to the objects confided to its administration; but as to objects clearly within the sphere of its jurisdiction, its authority is supreme, and unlimited, as to means necessary for their accomplishment, as the government of any State in the Union, or of any nation in the world; unless, in some particular instances, in which the means are expressly restricted. Need I refer to examples in proof of this position? Let gentlemen advert to the power, in Congress, to coin money—what means may this Government not employ, in executing this power, which any other nation may use, as necessary to the attainment of the end? On our power to punish the counterfeiting of the money of the United States, where is the restriction? Do we not define the crime, graduate its enormity, and carry home the punishment, even to the life of the offender, according to a discretion as unlimited as can be exercised by any other power? I ask gentlemen to consider the war power of this Government, and to tell me, wherein we are limited, either as to the propriety of beginning, or the means proper to carry on, hostilities, after they are commenced? What may we not do, in the exercise of this power, which the exigency of the occasion requires at our hands? Excepting the power to raise armies, and build a navy, scarcely any other incident to the war power is specified in the Constitution; and yet there is nothing which any nation ought to do, to make their warlike attitude effectual, and promote the safety and honor of the country, that it would not be our duty to perform.

But the gentleman from Virginia, who opened this debate with so much of his usual ability, (Mr. BARBOUR,) does not deny to us the use of means, but assumes a distinction between national and municipal jurisdiction, on which, if I understood him, he placed his chief reliance. The gentleman says, the General Government can exercise no municipal powers, that are not expressly given.

So far as the distinction applies to the principal objects of the Government, I admit it to be true, but I apprehend that, as it regards the means by which those objects are to be effected, it will be found to be altogether gratuitous. It is a distinction, no where recognised in the Constitution, which, on the contrary, expressly confers the power of passing all laws which may be necessary and proper to carry into effect the defined powers of the Government. The character of the means must correspond with the nature of the object to be effected, and may be municipal or otherwise, as the occasion requires. The powers of this Government are of two classes, national and municipal; the first having reference to the foreign relations, and the other to the domestic concerns of the country. All the powers of internal police, which are not a few, are necessarily municipal in the proper and strict meaning of the term.

In regard to some of the objects I have already adverted to, our power is strictly municipal, and cannot be executed without municipal legislation, and to these may be added, the power of taxation, which, if it be not a municipal power throughout, I would thank any gentleman to tell me what it really is. If these be municipal powers in the States, by what metamorphosis do they take a different character, when exercised by Congress, whose power, emanating from the same source, differs only in the extent of its jurisdiction? I put the question to the honorable gentleman from Virginia, if, in the pursuit of a given object, municip-pal authority be indispensably necessary, can it be denied? If, in executing the high duties committed to its trust, this Government cannot act without municipal means, must it, because they are such, discard their employment, and be stayed in its progress, for the want of the most ordinary power? If, in regulating the coin, we cannot get on without municipal authority, are we to leave it without any regulation? And if we can exercise such authority, in any one case, where is the limit? The distinction, to be good for any thing, must avail throughout. If it fail in any case, its existence is imaginary, and we may employ all the means, which may be necessary and proper, for the attainment of the object. The fallacy of this distinction, so much relied upon, will be yet more apparent, when we come to consider the particular clauses in the Constitution, which confer the power in question.

Various parts of this instrument have been relied upon, as furnishing the power over roads and canals; and though I am not called upon to admit or deny the propriety of all the deductions, I can well suppose that the authority may be necessarily incident to more than one power of the same Government. I do not design to consider all the sources from which this authority may be derived; it will be sufficient for my argument, if I can satisfactorily trace it to one, and I have no strength to waste in any unnecessary display. I must beg leave, however, to disclaim all reliance upon the preamble to the Constitution, as conferring any power; and I am also free to concede, that the clause authorizing the raising of revenue, to provide for the common defence and general welfare, does not, in my opinion, afford it. It is true, we are authorized to provide for the common defence and general welfare, but we are to do this by a wise and faithful exercise of the powers granted us by the Constitution; and unless the power to make roads and canals be elsewhere given, or necessarily results from some other power, we cannot assume it, by appropriating money to objects not confided to us.

From the best consideration I have been able to give this subject, I think the power over roads and canals is incident to, and faithfully results from, the commercial power of the Government.

The Constitution provides that "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes."

Whatever diversity of opinion may exist as to the range of the powers here delegated, it cannot be denied that they are paramount and supreme over the objects embraced by the clause, and may be exercised by Congress whenever it shall think proper, to the exclusion of all local authority. It is equally clear that the commercial power is the most important in its creation, and the most minute and extensive in its operation, which can belong to any Government. It regards the enterprise, industry, occupations, and property, of every man, and constitutes one of the principal objects of civil government. Who does not perceive, too, that the power here given over the internal commerce of the United States, is peculiarly of a municipal character? The power of directing their daily intercourse, regulating their industry, and connecting itself with all their pursuits!

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. of R.

Let me then ask the honorable gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. BARBOUR,) what becomes of his municipal limitation? Here is a municipal power expressly granted, and for municipal purposes. If the principal power be, in its nature, municipal, may it not, nay, must it not, be executed by municipal means? How can the Government act upon the objects of this power, but by municipal legislation? No one denies us the right of passing laws of inspection, in regard to the domestic commerce—and what is this but municipal legislation? May we not define and punish violations of our regulations, and do not the definition and punishment of crime constitute one of the highest attributes of municipal and sovereign jurisdiction? It is manifest, therefore, that in relation to the power delegated by this clause, the distinction utterly fails. Congress may employ municipal means subject to no other limit than that prescribed by a judicious discretion. Sir, I contend that this power was confided to the General Government for great and wise purposes; to cherish the resources and promote the industry of a growing and extensive empire, and must be exercised by the ordinary means, for the attainment of those purposes.

The question then is, Mr. Chairman, what is the extent of the power granted to Congress by this clause of the Constitution?

I will not detain the Committee in any philological examination of the phraseology of this clause. The subject soars above any such disquisition. I contend, that, from the nature of the subject, and the structure of the Government, it confers to Congress the whole commercial power over the trade among the States, which could have been previously exercised by the States themselves, in relation to this subject. Less power than this would be insufficient for the attainment of the objects of the Government.

The plain import of the term "regulate" is, to afford reasonable facilities. It implies a complete control over the subject; the power of securing to the people of one part of the Union the right of carrying on commercial intercourse with any and every other part, and of affording and preserving the means of intercourse, independent of all interference by any local authority. It intended to extract the commercial power previously distributed among the component States of the Union, and concentrate it in one arm, to be employed with united efforts for a common and general end. It meant to make the commercial intercourse of the thirteen separate States, that of one nation, subject to one and the same Government, and when it transferred the subject itself from all these States, it accompanied it with the same means which those States, combined, might have employed to regulate it, among themselves. If it did not mean to do this, I think it will be evident, from a consideration of all the parts of the Constitution, that the commercial intercourse among the States of this Union, is less protected, and in a worse situation now, than it was before.

It has been insisted, however, that the power to regulate commerce confers merely a fiscal authority, and was designed to prevent preferences in behalf of the trade of one State, through the medium of discriminations, to the prejudice of another. I will not deny that this was one object of the power; but it would be unworthy of the subject to say that it was the only one. The power to regulate commerce would undoubtedly imply an authority to encumber it with duties and burdens, and it would be strange if it could encumber, and yet not facilitate. But this branch of the power to regulate commerce, which would otherwise have resulted, is taken away by another part of the Constitution, which forbids Congress to levy any imposition upon the exports of a State, and on the imports into one State from another. We can give no preferences—and the States are also prohibited, by an express clause, from exercising similar powers. To ascribe to this clause, therefore, no other object than a mere fiscal authority, would be to make it entirely supererogatory; it would be worse—it would be a mere passive, dormant authority—an instrument taken from the States and transferred to the General Government, to be used by neither. But the States did not mean to abandon their commercial industry to the mercy of chance; on the contrary, they intended to remove it from the superintendence of disjointed councils, and place it under the auspices of a united and efficient government. The terms "to regulate," imply a vigilant and active power, to be exerted according to the exigency of the occasion. Not a power merely to ward off injuries from others, but also to afford facilities ourselves, whenever the wants and condition of the country require them at our hands. The power of doing, by the exertion of the national will and resources, that which could only have been accomplished, anterior to the Union, by the concurrence of two or more of the State sovereignties.

Without meaning to violate my promise not to engage in verbal criticism, but to illustrate the extent of the power in Congress, in relation to commerce among the States, let me, Mr. Chairman, refer gentlemen to the power exercised under this word "regulate," in regard to the commerce with foreign nations. It must have the same meaning in both instances, and must confer the same degree of power in one case as in the other.

Of commerce with foreign nations, a fiscal authority is not only a legitimate regulation, but is an ordinary source of revenue, and would, therefore, from the reason of the case and the necessities of the Government, naturally fall within the clause; but no one ever dreamed that the power of Congress was confined to this limit.

In virtue of our power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, we lay an embargo and prohibit the intercourse altogether, as well of vessels as merchandise. We erect lighthouses, and provide beacons and buoys to conduct the mariner into our rivers, and lead him in safety over the shoals and obstructions which lie in his path. If we do not make him a way over the ocean, we guard that way with fleets and convoys, and shield him from the depredation of enemies and rivals. Under the same power, we establish ports of entry and for unloading; we erect public custom and warehouses; we may provide a system of quarantine laws, and we have enacted laws for the saving and preservation of wrecks and property stranded upon our shores.

In short, we have, throughout our system of legislation, exercised a complete authority over the whole subject, and have never failed to afford it all necessary facilities in every part. By what rule of construction, give me leave to ask, can the same power, which is admitted to be unlimited in regard to our foreign commerce, be restricted to a mere imaginary superintendence, in relation to the trade among the several States? Lights and beacons offer a guide and facilities only to that portion of our commerce which passes over the waters of the United States; but what is to become of that class of merchants who are obliged to plod their way over the almost impassable mires and mountains of the interior?

If, therefore, the power to regulate commerce gives to Congress the whole commercial authority over the commerce among the States, it includes the power of affording all necessary facilities to the intercourse. This includes the right of way—of transit—the right of passing over and through the territories of one or more of the States to any part of the Union. In this is involved the whole power contended for. If the right of carrying on commerce includes the right of way, the power over commerce necessarily involves a control over the right of passage—the power of preserving, of regulating, of providing it. Suppose this passage to be denied, or the way to be obstructed, may we not open the passage and remove the obstruction? If there be no way, and the local authority refuse, or be unable to afford it, may we not provide one? All admit that no one State can impose duties or burdens upon merchandise, on its passage through its territories; but, if it cannot embarrass its transit by duties, it would be absurd to suppose it could exercise the higher power of absolutely shutting out the intercourse. And why is the exercise of such an authority denied to the States, but because they have surrendered their power over the commercial intercourse of the country, and transferred it to the General Government? Can gentlemen doubt the control of this Government over the right of way, for commercial purposes? Let me state an instance in which the power of Congress would apply; and, because I am more familiar with it than any other, I beg leave to refer to the river Delaware. It is known that this river passes through the territories of Delaware, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey, and that each of these States claims a certain jurisdiction over it. It is a highway for the commerce not only of these, but of other States, North and South, whose citizens may desire to push their enterprise in that direction. Will any gentleman pretend that either Pennsylvania, New Jersey, or Delaware, can deny to the commerce of any part of the Union a passage over this river to any point of destination? Suppose, however, its navigation to be obstructed, or otherwise so hazardous as to prevent all intercourse through this channel, and the States claiming the jurisdiction decline, or are unable to obviate the difficulty—why may not Congress interpose and afford the facilities necessary for the commercial intercourse of all the States who desire to engage in it?

The case here supposed is a fair illustration of the power of Congress over this subject, and should quiet the apprehensions of gentlemen of any encroachment upon State rights. It is not an interference with the internal police of any one State, nor is it the power of regulating the local commerce between different points of a State, by its own citizens; it steers clear of all these concerns, which, for the purposes of the argument, may be left under the undisturbed control of the State government. But it is the higher and more extensive power of facilitating the commercial intercourse "among the several States," and between the various and different sections of one great empire; a power, let it be remembered, which the States are under no obligation to exercise, and which would require the concurrence of more than one to execute.

The power of regulating the internal commerce of any one State with the different parts of its own territories may be vested in its local Legislature, but the power of regulating the commercial intercourse throughout the Union, of obliterating geographical distinctions in relation to this intercourse, and of affording it facilities in each and every direction, exists nowhere, unless it be in Congress. It is a power which could have been exercised antecedent to this Government only by treaty between two or more of the States, and as, by the present Constitution, the States are prohibited from entering into treaties, unless the power be now in the General Government, it is utterly extinct. Besides, sir, how can it be expected of those States, intervening between the Eastern and Western or Northern and Southern extremities of this great nation, to furnish the facilities of intercourse with each of these extremes? Certainly, they are under no obligation to provide them, and if their immediate interests do not require it, it is no cause of complaint if they fail to do so. Sir, it was to obviate such difficulties as these that the control over the general commerce of the country was vested in the United States for general rather than local purposes. As this power resided in no individual State, prior to the Constitution, it is emphatically an attribute of the General Government; it is a creature of the Union, sprung up with its existence, and must be co-extensive with its territorial jurisdiction. It results from the new formation of the powers of the Government, and is necessary to the faithful discharge of its duties. Can it be maintained that the General Government shall be dependent, for the execution of so essential a power, upon the prejudice or parsimony of any local authority, or was this high power confided to us for empty purposes, to lie inactive in our hands—a great colossal statue, bestriding the States of the Union, a monument of its own insignificance?

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

The honorable gentleman from Virginia, in attempting to limit our commercial power to mere fiscal regulations, has supported his position by a reference to the commentary by the writers of the "Federalist," recommending the Constitution to the adoption of the American people; and, with this view, read that part of their commentary relating to this clause. I should be the last to undervalue the merit of this work, or the worth of its illustrious authors; but surely no gentleman will seriously contend that this Government can exercise no other powers than such as are specified in those numbers. It should be recollected that these writings were designed to recommend the instrument to the people, and therefore pressed upon their attention such arguments only as would be most likely to secure their approbation, rather than unfold all the consequences which would follow from its provisions. They might not choose to express all that would be fairly involved, or, what is more likely, they did not foresee the full extent of the grant. Wise and great as were the framers of the American Constitution, and the authors of the Federalist, they were incompetent to such a task. No man can suppose that it was within the reach of human sagacity to enumerate or foresee all the powers which it might be necessary and proper for this Government to exercise in the progress of events; and, if it could do no other act than such as may have been in the contemplation of those by whom it was established, it would be the weakest of human institutions. It could neither accommodate itself to circumstances, profit by the wisdom of experience, or keep pace with the progress of the nation. The framers of the American Constitution designed only to mark the general limits of a vast system of government, which they hoped would be perpetuated to endless ages, and pass through all the variety incident to national existence. They did not pretend to delineate all the details of its action; they gave it in the best language they could employ, and left us to infer their meaning according to the known and established rules of interpretation, according to the exigencies of the times. But, sir, it will be found, upon examination, that the commentary referred to by the gentleman from Virginia is not less comprehensive than I have supposed our powers to be. It is true, that, in the paper read by the gentleman, it is said, "a very material object of this power was the relief of the States which import and export through other States, from the improper contributions levied on them by the latter;" and this, no doubt, is so; but it by no means follows that this single material object was the only one to be effected, and which, from other clauses in the instrument, would have followed without this provision. In the same number, quoted by the gentleman, the extent of this clause I am now considering is more fully explained; and it is there said, "the necessity of a superintending authority over the reciprocal trade of confederated States has been illustrated by other examples as well as our own. In Switzerland, where the union is so very slight, each canton is obliged to allow to merchandises a passage through its jurisdiction into other cantons, without an augmentation of the tolls." It is therefore manifest, that a power of enforcing the right of passage was evidently embraced by this clause, and it is equally manifest, as I have already shown, as I hope, that this right comprehends the whole argument.

But, Mr. Chairman, if we are to depart from the plain import of the words used in the Constitution to search for its meaning, a much more legitimate rule of interpretation would lead us to inquire into the evils existing anterior to its adoption, and which it was designed to obviate. We all know that considerations connected with the commercial interests were the most powerful inducements to the present form of Government. A divided empire over the commercial intercourse "among the several States," and the imbecility of the old Confederation over the same subject, were the principal defects of that system, which ultimately led to its dissolution and the erection of the present Constitution upon its ruins. The great object was, to take from the several States the whole commercial power over this branch of commerce, and confide it to a single Government. In the sixth number of the Federalist, the object is emphatically stated to be to divest the States of this power to prevent the evils of "rivalships and competitions of commerce between commercial nations;" and every one must perceive that these rivalships would be as likely to interrupt the intercourse by actual obstructions as by the less effectual expedients of discriminating impositions. In the eleventh number of the same commentary, the utility of the commercial power in Congress is thus explained: "An unrestrained intercourse between the States themselves will advance the trade of each, by an interchange of their respective productions. The views of commerce in every part will be replenished, and will acquire additional motion and vigor from a free circulation of the commodities of every part. It may, perhaps, be replied to this, that whether the States are united or disunited, there would still be an intimate intercourse between them, which would answer the same end. But this intercourse would be fettered, interrupted, and narrowed by a multiplicity of causes." Is it not evident from all this, that intercourse among the States, free from all restraints and interruptions, in whatever manner they should be interposed, was the object of the power. And how can this be effected, without authority in Congress to prevent interruption and provide the means of intercourse? If, without this clause, the States had the power of interrupting the intercourse in future commercial sovereignty, they had the power also of providing the means of carrying it on; and if they have been deprived of the former, and have parted with their control over the subject, by what process of reasoning can it be maintained that they have retained the latter?

I assume it to be proved, then, Mr. Chairman, that the whole power over the commerce "among the several States," is vested in Congress, and that we are bound to employ all the means which are necessary and proper to make it effectual, and to conduce to a free and easy intercourse.

I admit, that the means to be employed must have a natural, an appropriate, and even a necessary relation to the end proposed to be attained. They should naturally and directly promote, and be immediately subservient to, the great object in view. But I deny, as has been contended, that they must be absolutely indispensable, or the only means which could be employed in relation to the object. Such never could have been the intention of the Constitution, which, upon such principles would leave the Government without discretion or responsibility. If this doctrine were true, instead of composing Congress, as we now endeavor at least to do, with the virtue and intelligence of the nation, by men distinguished for their knowledge and sagacity, we should select such as are ignorant, and of narrow views, the instruments of a blind impulse, and to be moved only by some stern irresistible necessity. Under such a doctrine no act of legislation would be safe; for though at the time, it might be supposed to be absolutely necessary, yet, if subsequent experience should prove it otherwise, the acts would, for that reason, be unconstitutional. Sir, according to the true spirit of our Government, we must exercise a judicious discretion over all these subjects, and use our powers, as far as we know how, to promote the happiness of the people. Discretion implies the power of selection, and in adopting measures for the performance of the high duties confided to us, we must take those which, according to the circumstances, will most certainly attain the end. In all this our responsibility is to the people, who, if we err, will not fail to apply the remedy.

In executing the powers of this Government, we cannot, and should not discard the lessons of experience, and we are always safe in adopting those measures which are, in themselves, immediately relative to the object, and which all other governments employ as the means for the attainment of similar objects. I insist that this is the safe and reasonable criterion, and I contend that roads and canals are the natural and appropriate means of executing the commercial power with all nations, and are considered by every government, of which we have any knowledge, as falling properly within the range of its commercial regulations. It is here the mistake of gentlemen on the opposite side consists, in blending the objects of Government with the means ordinarily employed for their attainment, and in treating roads and canals as distinct from the commercial power, when in fact they result, of necessity, from its exercise. The general objects of a government are few, and easily defined, and the power of executing these includes all other powers which are necessary to their execution.

The great objects of good government consist, principally, in procuring the happiness of the nation—in providing for its necessities, and in fortifying it against hostile attacks.

In the first class may be comprehended all regulations regarding education, the arts, and sciences, religion, and the whole field of justice and polity. Over these the State and General Governments exercise, in some measure, a divided dominion, but with equal means for the attainment of their respective objects.

In the second class are included the agricultural and commercial, and in the third the military power.

The military power is exclusively in the General Government, and, in virtue of this authority, we employ all the means which are ordinarily employed by other nations for the same object.

Under this power, and as naturally incidental to it, we build forts and arsenals, and erect fortifications, ad libitum, whenever we deem them necessary for the defence of the nation. Will any gentleman say that forts and arsenals are more necessary for the purposes of defence, than roads and canals for those of commerce? A country may well be defended without either forts or arsenals, which do not always afford the best protection, but no one would hazard the opinion, that commerce can exist without either roads or canals. The honorable gentleman from Virginia has said, however, that our authority to provide forts and arsenals, is derived from that clause in the Constitution which authorizes Congress to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over property which may be purchased for these purposes, with the consent of a State, and that, therefore, we cannot erect such works without such purchase and consent. Sir, this is manifestly a mistaken interpretation. The object of this clause, as is apparent from its general character and phraseology, is plainly, not to confer the right to purchase land and erect fortifications, but to authorize exclusive jurisdiction over the soil which may be purchased with the consent of a State. The power to erect military works is incidental, or there can be none of that description; and if we have the power to erect those works, it would be absurd to deny us the right to purchase the land whereon to erect them, unless, indeed, we might be supposed to build castles in the air. The right to purchase land, to become the proprietor of soil, without jurisdiction, is one of the most simple kind; and to deny it, would be to deny this Government a right enjoyed by every petty corporation, nay, by the humblest individual in the community. But the right of purchasing and acquiring fee simple title to land, does not necessarily transfer jurisdiction, which is no part of the soil, but resides in the local government.

It is desirable in many cases, however, that the Government should possess such a jurisdiction over its forts and public works, for their better police and management; and such a jurisdiction residing in the State cannot be obtained without its consent; and for this reason, therefore, this clause provides for such an acquisition.

The gentleman is equally mistaken in supposing that jurisdiction is at all necessary to the purchase of property. If the jurisdiction were not transferred to the United States, it would remain in the local Government, whose laws and authority would, in most instances, be adequate to all the purposes of protection and security. Sir, all the custom-houses which have been built by the General Government, and sites on which they are erected, are precisely in this situation, and no jurisdiction has ever been required by the United States, or ceded by the States in which they are located.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Besides, sir, the fifth amendment to the Constitution provides that we shall not take private property for public use, without making just compensation. The implication here is clear, that we have the authority to apply private property to public use, making just compensation; for such a provision would have been entirely useless, if we could only purchase with the consent of a State, who would be at liberty to stipulate its own terms.

If, then, sir, we may erect forts and other works for defence, and purchase land for this purpose, as ordinarily and naturally incident to the military power of the Government, why may we not acquire land for the purpose of making roads and canals, if they be ordinarily and naturally incident to some other general power? Suppose us to acquire land by purchase, for this purpose, where is the interference with the State authority? The owner of the soil may make a road over his own premises, without permission of the local government; and so may a company of individuals, if they please to forego the advantages for which acts of incorporation are usually desired. But, suppose us to acquire property for a similar purpose in any other way: we should not absolutely require the jurisdiction. Our acquisition and property would be equally protected by the local municipality, which, I insist, however, could never interfere with our conservative power.

In the agricultural power similar incidents result; and, in the execution of this duty, every good Government not only exerts its means to provide and regulate the labor with which it is carried on, but may, if it think proper, provide public stores, and granaries, and a multitude of other facilities necessary to its good management.

This power I admit to be exclusively with the States; but the commercial power "among the States" is as certainly in the General Government—and I ask why we may not employ the ordinary means for its regulation?

I have said that roads and canals are among the ordinary and natural facilities of commercial intercourse. I now contend, sir, that they are uniformly treated and employed as such by every Government in the exercise of its commercial power. There is no writer upon political economy and the duties of nations who does not consider them so. Adam Smith treats them as the ordinary instruments of commercial regulation; and Vattel, in his exposition of the duties of a Government to itself, in the execution of its commercial power, remarks: "the use of highways, bridges, canals, and, in a word, of all safe and commodious ways of communication, cannot be doubted. They facilitate the trade between one place and another, and render the conveyance of merchandise less expensive as well as more sure and easy. France and Holland have daily found the truth of this by happy experience. One of the principal things that ought to employ the attention of the Government with respect to the welfare of the public in general, and of trade in particular, must, then, relate to the highways, canals, &c., in which nothing ought to be neglected to render them safe and commodious. The whole nation ought, doubtless, to contribute to such useful undertakings.

Can it be doubted, then, sir, that roads and canals are not independent objects of Government, but are among the natural means of effectuating the commercial power? For what purpose are such improvements made by any nation but to facilitate commercial intercourse? Can it be carried on without them? What nation makes roads for pastime, or as monuments of useless expenditure, or digs canals for no other purposes than to mingle the waters of distant streams? For what purpose does any single State in this Union make roads and canals between different parts of its territory, but to afford facilities to its commerce? And, if an individual State can make a State or county road, for the purpose of its own internal commerce, and as a necessary means of its wise regulation, may not this Government make a United States road, as the means of regulating the commerce of this extensive Union? Is this Government to be clothed with greater powers, but less means of executing them? Has this great nation been organized with the dimensions of a giant to handle the instruments of a pigmy? Sir, are we not to suppose that, when the framers of our Constitution vested us with the commercial power, they knew and understood the means which every other Government ordinarily employed in its execution? And, if they did, must we not conclude they designed that we should exert them? I will not press this part of the subject further, sir. I leave it to the reflection of the Committee and the nation, and shall be content with their judgment.

I intended, Mr. Chairman, said Mr. McLANE, when I rose to address the Committee, to have offered some considerations as to the propriety of our exercising the power now claimed; but the state of my own strength admonishes me that I have already trespassed too long upon the patience of others, and I will therefore pass over this part of the subject, with a very few general observations.

I feel no inclination rashly or lightly to resort to the exercise of this power, or to exercise it in any case in which the wants and necessities of the community do not imperiously require it. The present bill proposes merely to procure information; the use we shall make of it will be the subject of future deliberation.

I am free to say, that, in general, the objects of this power will be better accomplished by allowing individual enterprise, under the auspices of the State governments, to take the lead, and I should be disposed, on all occasions, to confine the interference of the General Government to objects of a purely national character, and such as would be necessary to open and facilitate the intercourse between different States, or various sections of the Union. It must be admitted, however, that the United States presents many objects of this description, and which cannot be attained without the aid of the national resources. No one will deny, that the commerce of any country must be badly regulated, in which the cost of transportation amounts to more than the value of the commodity; such, however, is the fact in many parts of this country, and it is equally true, that the communication between different sections of this Union consumes as much time in its performance, and is exposed to equal perils, as a voyage to many parts of Europe. No one can be insensible to the necessity of providing and facilitating the intercourse between the Western and Atlantic sections of the country, and between the Northern and Southern points of the latter; an intercourse at present interrupted and obstructed by natural impediments, insurmountable without our aid, and amounting, in a period of war especially, to an almost absolute interdiction.

H. OF R.

Proceedings.

JANUARY, 1824.

I will take leave also, sir, before I conclude, to suggest one other mode, by which the aid of the General Government may be given to internal improvements, which is, it appears to me, entirely unsusceptible of any objection on the score of power or right; and that is, by a loan of money on interest, or by the purchase of stock in companies incorporated under the authority of one or more States. We have certainly the right of managing our own funds, in a financial point of view, in any manner we may think best, and it surely cannot be unwise so to manage them, as most effectually to contribute to the happiness and prosperity of the people. No one can deny our power to purchase and hold stock; we have purchased bank stock, and at this moment hold it to a large amount. If we can purchase bank stock, there is nothing to prevent a purchase of canal or road stock. And if the value of such stock should not at all times be equal to that of the bank, the deficiency would be more than made up by the advantages, which, in other respects, would be produced by the investment.

It might be contended with great propriety, that this would be the most wise and prudent application of the national resources to the internal improvements of the country. I am, myself, of the opinion, it would be the most economical. If such should become the policy of the Government, it would soon be aided by individual enterprise, and the local governments. I may already point gentlemen to one of the greatest national objects which can be presented to the notice of this Government; I mean the Chesapeake and Delaware canal, which passes, in part, through my own State, and to which, therefore, I may feel some partiality. This canal, destined to unite the waters of the Delaware and Chesapeake bays, is the principal link in that great chain of internal communication between the extreme points of our Atlantic frontier, so essential to all the commercial and military operations of the country. A company for the accomplishment of this work has already been incorporated, by the States of Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland. The purchase of stock by the United States to a reasonable amount, would insure the completion of the work, after which the interest of the Government might readily be disposed of at little if any loss, and the proceeds employed in the same way, to the aid of some other enterprise of great national interest. There would be no State rights invaded by such an operation, but, on the contrary, the great interests of this community would be essentially promoted, and the national resources augmented beyond the power of calculation.

When Mr. McLANE had concluded—

At the request of Mr. ARCHER, of Virginia, the Committee then rose, reported progress, and had leave to sit again.

WEDNESDAY, January 28.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made an unfavorable report on the claims of the State of Georgia, for services of militia in the years 1792, 1793, 1794; which report was committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of Joseph C. Boyd," reported the same without amendment, and the bill was committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The resolution submitted by Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, on the 12th instant, was taken up, read, considered, modified, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill appropriating twenty thousand dollars, to be expended in laying out and opening a road from Detroit, in the Territory of Michigan, to the Ohio State Line, where the road from Detroit to Fort Meigs crosses the same.

An engrossed bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the legal representatives of John Michael, deceased," was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENRY, it was

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Eddyville, Kentucky, by Waidesboro, to Paris, in Tennessee.

Upon presenting this resolution, Mr. HENRY remarked that he would not disguise the fact that it was accompanied by a petition from sundry respectable inhabitants of Callaway County, Kentucky; but, through mistake, it was addressed to the Postmaster General, and not to Congress. The object of the petition was to establish a new post route. And, as the Postmaster General had no power which reached the case, he had taken the liberty of introducing the subject to the House in the shape of a resolution. He further remarked that this was the first time the people from whom the petition came, had ever had a voice upon this floor; and he hoped the House would be inclined to greet them with the kindest consideration.

A message from the Senate informed the House

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act to alter the times of holding the District Court at Mobile, in the District of Alabama;" also, the "Resolution in relation to an intended visit of the Marquis De Lafayette to the United States," with an amendment to each. The Senate have also passed a bill for the final adjustment of land claims in the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas, derived from the Governments of France and Spain; in which amendments and last mentioned bill they ask the concurrence of this House.

SURVEYS FOR ROADS AND CANALS.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. FOOT in the Chair,) on the bill to procure the necessary plans, estimates, &c., respecting roads and canals.

Mr. ARCHER commenced by remarking that the vote taken in the House would have prevented his offering any observations on the bill, but for the impression authorized by the recommitment that a farther discussion of the important principle it presented was desired. It would be injustice to gentlemen to doubt their readiness to sacrifice the pride of consistency to duty, and especially in relation to a subject of Constitutional construction. He should proceed, therefore, to submit his views of the question, in confidence that, if he could succeed in producing a doubt of the Constitutional competency to adopt the system of legislation which was contemplated, he should have the concurrence of the Committee in the rejection of the bill, which was the incipient measure of this system of legislation.

Adverting to the argument derived from the importance of works of internal improvement to national prosperity, Mr. A. went on to say that he forbore any objection to its relevancy or fairness, though an array of topics of seduction could not be considered as either relevant or fair in a Constitutional inquiry, because he had an objection of still more decisive character to state to it. As respected the importance of these improvements, indeed, there existed, in point of fact, no diversity of opinion, the adversaries of the bill entertaining as just an appreciation of their value, and as earnest a desire to witness their advancement in all modes not liable to insuperable objection, as its advocates could do. But Mr. A. denied that the effect of the recognition of a power in this Government over the subject would be to subserve, but maintained, on the contrary, that it would obstruct the advance of these improvements. The only advantage would relate to the acceleration of the accomplishment of some of the more important objects of improvement. But what would be the countervailing effect, the price of this advantage? Gentlemen could not be blind either to its reality or importance. It was the entire suspension of the faculties of the State governments in this respect. The promise of the system in the hands of this Government, it was to be remembered, was general. It would be found, indeed, susceptible of only a very partial realization. But the expectation authorized was indefinite. Every step, too, in the advance of the system must add to the number and the force of the claims to its extension. What, in these circumstances, was to be the policy of the State governments? Were they to go on in what might prove gratuitous expense on works of internal improvement, or to wait the course of the dispensation of the advantages of the system in the hands of the General Government? Both the promises of the system and the claim resulting from participation in its expense, must determine them to the adoption of the latter of these alternatives. The motives, if not the reasons, to this course, were too forcible to be resisted. Then the question became, said Mr. A., not one of the concurrent or auxiliary jurisdiction of this Government over the subject of internal improvements, but of its preference to the jurisdiction of the State governments. In reference to practical effect, and a view of the expediency connected with the subject, it was a question of the propriety of the transfer of the jurisdiction from the State authorities to the general authority. And would there be a real expediency in this, or would injury result from it? The General Government was said to possess the advantage of superior resources. But was this advantage real? If the resources of the General Government were larger, was not the disparity of its occasions of expense, and of the probability of future demand on these resources, in the full proportion of the disparity of their amount? The occasions discovered for expense had been said to keep pace with the extension of resources in the progress of all Governments. It was not to be expected that their history would exhibit a more favorable character in this respect in future. But did not the inference from this remark apply with peculiar force where political functions were distributed between a General and State governments to that to which the charge of external interests and relations was confided? The amount of public debt continued little short of an hundred millions of dollars. Was not the process of its extinction to be regarded as a sufficient claim on the national resources, till the occurrence of future demands in the progress of national vicissitude?

But admitting the advantages of the superior resources of the General Government, did not each of the respective governments derive its resources for all objects of expense from a common fund of some form of direct or indirect taxation of the people? The taxation then required for the attainment of an object in the hands of the General Government had only to be remitted if the object were best confided to the State governments, and the advantage of superior resources on the part of the General Government disappeared. There were advantages, moreover, of no unimportant character as related to the subject of discussion, which would result from the transfer of the office of taxation to the State governments. Each quarter of the country would contribute to the object in the proportion of its interest. There would be no taxation for objects, in the interests of which there was no participation. There would be no inequitable application of general funds to purposes of local and particular advantage. A farther advantage would result from the subject being confided to the State governments. There would be no gross mistakes as respected the selection of objects of improvement. The knowledge derived from contiguity of residence and interest—the fear of expense, disproportioned to the value of objects—would be a sufficient safeguard in this respect. This distant government, remote from the sources of knowledge, and occupied with a mass of engrossing and unrelated concerns, could neither have opportunities of adequate information, nor be subject to the influence of competent restraint, as respected the application of its expenditures. The State governments, with better means of judging of the practicability, the advantage and the expense of projects of improvement, were under a more direct check, as respected the application of money for their accomplishment.

These Governments were liable, under all circumstances, to a more direct influence of this kind, from the nearer and more obvious relation to the sensibility, as well as to the observation of the people, of the methods by which their money was derived. It was, besides, a proposition founded in undoubted principles of reason, that a local authority was better fitted for the conduct of operations requiring a minute exertion of supervision and care in their execution, than a more distant and general authority could be. There was a less liability, necessarily, to error, and to abuses and profusion, as respected the expenditure of money. Public authority was little fitted for the management of such operations at best, and the more remote the seat, and general the character of the authority, the stronger was the application of the remark. The State governments would, in a far greater degree, be less liable than the General Government to embark in projects of improvement, which would afford inadequate returns on the capital invested; and this was after all the test of the general, as it was of the particular advantage of undertakings of this description. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, indeed, who brought in the bill, (Mr. HEMPHILL,) had pushed his argument to the extent of a denial of the general application of this test. For his own part, Mr. A. knew of none which could be better substituted for it; and he was in favor of retaining over the subject of internal improvement the jurisdiction of that authority by which the test was most likely to be applied and respected. The State governments were not only best qualified, from the considerations which had been stated, for the exercise of the jurisdiction, but the General Government labored under absolute disqualification for it. How was it possible for this Government, in remote extremities of the Union, in Missouri or Louisiana, to discriminate, advantageously, the objects and sites of works of internal improvement, or to exert a safe and economical superintendence over the various and complicated subjects of their execution, administration, and preservation? Nor did the inevitable insufficiency and unskilfulness of its exercise form the most decisive objection to this function in the Government of the Union. It was easy to perceive, that, in the absence of adequate knowledge and sympathy with the interests to be effected, considerations of very different character would usurp their place and determine the character of the exercise of the function. It was easy to perceive that all the evil influences which belonged to free, and those which were peculiar to Federal Government, temporary excitements, party feelings, local interests, views derived from relation to the probable results of elections for the Presidency, would have an unrestricted scope for operation. Authority, then, on the part of the General Government, over the subject of internal improvement, was neither conducive to the advancement of its interests, nor in any view desirable.

But, was the authority confided? This was the inquiry properly engaging attention in the discussion, and to which Mr. A. proceeded to address himself. The first remark which it suggested arose from the fact of the omission of all allusion to the subject of the power in the discussions of equally large and various character which introduced the Constitution. There were the strongest motives to this allusion, if the existence of the power had been contemplated on the part both of the friends and the adversaries of the adoption of the Constitution. The advocates would have found a topic of eulogy in the supposed beneficial character of the operation of the power; and their adversaries a subject not less fruitful of reproach in its encroachment on the reserve of municipal authority to the States. Yet, as far as Mr. A. was advised, neither zeal nor jealousy, nor the sagacity of the largest speculative discussion, had indulged any surmise of the concession of such a power. The inference, from omission of a character so peculiar, was too decisive to be resisted. For the source of the omission, indeed, it was easy to account. It was to be found in the want of affinity of the power to the character of the Government. To the character of a league of association like the old Confederation, a power like this, acting by a distributive mode of operation, on the particular and several interests of the parties to the association, was not uncongenial. But the principal design of the change to a more social character of the Government, was to supersede this mode of the operation of its authority, by one which, in form as well as object, should be national; that is to say, adapted to the character of an integral community. In the existing form of the national authority, there remained no warrant for its exertion in any other mode. The sources of this authority, and the modes of its organization, continued to be principally Federal, but its operation was relative, exclusively, to the Union, as a distinct, independent, integral community. A power over the subject of internal improvement, exerted by the General Government, could not sustain this test of national operation. No work of improvement, answering to the description of internal, affected the interests of the Union in its integral, artificial capacity as a political community. The beneficial effects, even of the most important works of improvement, purely internal, were confined to parts and quarters of the Union. It was true, indeed, from the inseparable connexion of general with particular prosperity, that works of this description, in conducing to the prosperity of the parts severally, must exert, indirectly, a favorable influence on the interests of the Union. But a similar influence was exerted by works of this character in foreign States, with which we had commercial intercourse, the promotion of which, with equal reason, might be brought within the operation of the national authority. It was only a direct relation, however, to national interest which could be attended with this effect, and internal improvements could not pretend to a relation of this character.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

But the power in question was not only condemned by its want of affinity to the character of the Government, but, by an inference equally decisive, from the unpropitious tendency of its influence. A power, which could not be exerted without an impairment of the harmonious operation of the Government, could, with no propriety, be attributed to a federal authority, dependent in a peculiar manner upon the accord of its members for stability. But a power over internal improvement, in the General Government, was of this character. The capacities of the different quarters of the Union for improvement being unequal, their respective interests, in the exercise of the power, would partake of this character of inequality. There were even instances and conditions of circumstances, in which these interests presented a character of conflict. The opposition of the various routes proposed for the connexion of the Eastern and Western waters, afforded an example. Could a jurisdiction over subjects of interest so incongruous and jarring, fail in the provocation of jealousy and discord? Political communities, in association, were known to be prone, in a peculiar manner, to the indulgence of a spirit of jealousy, as respected the operation of the common authority. The sources of this spirit were not material. The reality of its influence was attested by the history of all associations of the character alluded to, and of our own, among the number. Which were the operations of administration to which this jealousy was principally directed?—Those which had relation to the raising and disbursement of money. It was to the arrangements, therefore, connected with these operations, that precaution was to be applied in a wise organization of a federal form of Government. Had it been neglected in our form? The wisdom of its framers excluded the supposition. What, then, was the provision of precaution in this respect? It was as adequate as was to have been anticipated from the source from which it sprung. Taxation was confined by rules of a just relation to population; of the exclusion of all preferences, commercial or fiscal; of invariable adherence to a standard of uniformity. "No capitation, or other direct tax shall be laid, except in proportion to the census," &c. "No tax shall be laid on articles exported," &c. "No preferences shall be given by any regulations of commerce or revenue," &c. "All duties, imposts, &c., shall be uniform throughout the United States," &c. Such were the precautions against inequality of taxation. But of what value would be these precautions, if similar restraint were not provided in relation to the power of expenditure? The confinement of taxation to a rule of justice were vain, if this and every other rule, but of caprice, might be transcended in the disbursement of its fruits! What then was the safeguard in this respect? The exercise of no power could transcend the objects of the Government. This was a rule of reason applicable to every trust of power. Here, then, was one restraint on the appropriating power. A restriction of explicit character was added. The power of taxation, from the indefinite character of public exigencies, was necessarily one of the largest. The power of appropriation, which was subsidiary, would pass with it in the same extent without the necessity of expression. Its conveyance to this extent, however, might prove a source of inconvenience, because an appropriating power was not subject to the restraint which attached to a taxing power, from the invidious and apparent character of its operation. In what manner, then, was precaution to be applied? Of what form of restraint was a power of appropriation susceptible, without impairment of its efficiency? There was one form only of designation of the objects to which it should be confined. This is the form of the restraint which has been applied. Congress might apply money, not to all objects of political authority, indifferently, or to any at discretion, but to purposes connected with the "common defence and general welfare" only. And what were the objects embraced by this provision? Their criterion had been already indicated. Such as were of national character, relating to the whole Union as a distinct nation or community. To this class of objects it had appeared that Internal Improvements did not belong. The jurisdiction of them was not embraced, therefore, by the scope of the national authority.

An examination of the power under consideration, had demonstrated its want of affinity to the character of the Government, the unpropitious tendency of its influence as respected the highest interests of the Union, and its inconsistency with restrictions established by essential provisions of the Constitution. The presumption from this concurrence of objections, was to be considered as very forcible against the validity of the power. Was the claim to it sustained by fair construction of the language of the Constitution? Before proceeding to this inquiry, two difficulties were to be removed. It had been supposed that the question was concluded by the authority of preceding decisions. But it was to be remembered, that the authority of precedent was not applicable to a legislative jurisdiction. Courts were bound by precedent, because the ends of their jurisdiction required uniformity of decision. But the end of a legislative jurisdiction required that its decisions should be varied as occasion might demand, till correctness were attained. Neither did precedent exert an operation on questions of the validity of the exercise of power. These were submitted to the authority of conviction only. The subjects submitted to precedent, related to the exercise of opinion or judgment; but questions involving an application of moral principle, like that of the just fulfilment or abuse of a trust of power, though they did not exclude advice, refused a submission to positive authority.

It had also been supposed, that the consent of the States in which works of internal improvement were to be executed, might supply any defect of the authority of the General Government. But it was to be remembered, that the concurrence of all the States had been requisite to give form to the federal compact. A power, then, could not be admitted in single States, to vary arrangements to which the concurrence of all had been necessary, and in which the interest was common. The abuses liable to flow from such a doctrine were obvious. There was no limit to the enlargement of jurisdiction it might involve, or the purposes to which this enlargement was susceptible of employment.

There could be no other source, then, of the power, than just exposition of the parts of the Constitution which were supposed to have relation to the grant of it. These, Mr. A. proceeded to examine. The first clause to which attention had been attracted, (by the Speaker,) was that conveying authority "to establish post offices and post roads." Mr. A. thought that, in relation to this part of the subject, the Speaker had failed, (not from any intention, certainly,) in treating fairly the argument of his colleague, (Mr. BARBOUR,) who opened the debate on the present motion. He (the Speaker) had supposed (incorrectly) that his colleague had interpreted the word "establish" in the sense of the word adopt; and the remark was perfectly just, that this interpretation was neither warranted by the proper import, nor would stand the test of application to other parts of the Constitution in which the expression was employed. It was both nearer to the true import, however, and better fitted to stand the test of this application than the import which the Speaker had suggested, which was the sense of the word "build" or "construct." It would be found, on examination, that the word never had any signification of this kind; and how would it bear application in this sense to other parts of the Constitution? Were we at liberty to read, in the preamble, that the people of the United States, "in order to construct justice," had "ordained and constructed" this Constitution for the United States? Would it be a proper employment of language to say, that Congress had power to "construct" a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy, &c.? The explanation of the whole difficulty in relation to this word "establish," was afforded by the fact that it presented in different modes of its employment an apparent variety of import, derived from the different character of the subjects of its application. The real diversity, however, would be found to refer not to the import, but to the application. The word would be found to have a signification which was invariable, and which was always abstract, as respected the idea which it conveyed. It was never expressive of a form of physical action, even in cases in which it had a proper application to subjects of a physical description. It never had, therefore, the sense of "build," or "construct." Its proper import was that expressed by the word institute. It meant, always, as had been supposed, (by the Speaker,) creation, but the creation of an abstract immaterial subject, or attribute, never of a form or character of physical existence. Thus, in the preamble of the Constitution, "to establish justice," referred to the institution of an abstract character of stability, as respected civil regulations for the enforcement of justice. To "establish this Constitution," in the same place, referred not to the institution of the physical form or preparation of the Constitution, but of its abstract character of uniformity in relation to the subjects of naturalization and bankruptcy. In the application of the word to physical subjects, it retained the same character of presenting an abstract conception, as well as the same creative import. It continued to imply creation, or institution, but of an incorporeal quality, character, or attribute, communicated to the subject of its application, and not of any material change or form operated on the physical substance of this subject. Thus, though it would not be proper to speak of establishing a House, in the sense of physical construction, it was proper to use this expression in the sense of communicating to the House a particular quality, function, or character. It was proper to speak of establishing a house of public entertainment, a store, an office, a manufactory. When the word establish was employed in reference to a road, it would be found that relation was uniformly had to the exertion of public authority, the legislative, or other act by which the road was directed, and not the act of its physical execution. A road was opened, made, or constructed, subsequently to, and in virtue of, the act of authority by which it was established. This explanation of the term, rendered entirely intelligible its employment in the clause under review. Congress had authority to establish post offices and post roads, that is to say, to institute or authorize a particular artificial function, which had no necessary relation to houses, but might be exerted, independently of their use or existence, in relation to the distribution of intelligence; and to institute, in relation to such of the roads of the country as might be selected for the purpose, the character of serving as the routes of the transportation of this intelligence. What was the nature of the right, and of the incidental jurisdiction involved by reasonable construction in the grant of such a power? Manifestly a right of usufruct or way, only, with its ordinary incidents. And what were these? Did they comprehend any control or authority to intermeddle, even for the purposes of repair, with the soil, to which the right attached? Mr. A.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

appealed to every lawyer for the separable character of the right, from any authority of this kind, in ordinary legal acceptance. What, then, it might be inquired, was the remedy for obstruction of it? The answer was, removal of the obstruction, or action for the injury. And the only difference between the Government and an individual enjoying a right of this description, in this respect, resulted from the circumstance of the Government having in its own hand the application of the remedy. Penal legislation might, indeed, be superadded in either case. And to the sufficiency of this guarantee no objection could be made, as it was that on which public authority had to rely in all its operations.

The construction which had been stated, in relation to this clause of the Constitution, derived the strongest confirmation from the inference suggested by the clause, conveying an exclusive authority over the sites purchased, with consent of the States, for the erection of forts, dock yards, and other needful buildings, &c. There could be no question that authority to execute these constructions, passed, without expression, in virtue of the military and commercial powers of the Government. A power to make and maintain war, must carry with it a power to erect forts, &c., as a power over commerce must that of constructing dock yards, &c. Yet an express grant had been thought necessary, to authorize the purchase of the sites of these constructions, and the exclusive jurisdiction of them. How, then, could it be conceived that a capacity of purchase and jurisdiction had been intended, in relation to the post roads of the country, extending already to eighty thousand miles, and susceptible of a further extension which was illimitable? Mr. A. could not perceive how the inference from this source was to be resisted.

But, let the language in relation to the power of establishing post offices and post roads, be conceded to be doubtful—the next resort, in construction, was, to the objects of the Constitution. Was the execution of a system of internal improvement in the number of these objects? Was it an object of proper federal character? All objects of political authority were not appropriate to a federal form. If they were, there was no distinction between this form and any other. Which, then, did belong to it? Such only as could not be as effectually attained, independently of the institution. Which were these? They could not be any of a class relative to interior administration and police. These were supervised most effectually by local authority. They must be relative, then, to interests of external character. It was not meant to be contended that there was no municipal authority appropriate to this Government. There were powers of this class in the express grant of the Constitution, those which had been referred to by the Speaker. The expression of these, proved that they would not have passed without expression. There were powers of this class, however, of constructive character. Every form of authority must be enabled to operate for the attainment of its proper ends. Such exercises, therefore, of an incidental jurisdiction, as were essential to this purpose, must be conceded to belong to it. But, to warrant the exercise of power in this mode, the end must be admitted, and the relation to it be essential. It was not sufficient that the jurisdiction had a general relation to expediency. But no one would contend that a jurisdiction over objects of internal improvement, had any relation of more intimate character than one of expediency, as respected the social condition of the Union. Their execution had not been made an object of express jurisdiction, though other objects belonging to the same municipal character, and not more obvious to remark in their relation to general prosperity, had been made the subjects of this express jurisdiction. The jurisdiction over the subjects of naturalization and bankruptcies, the coining of money, the progress of science and useful arts, were examples. Works of internal improvement conducted to national prosperity. Be it so. But the Government could pursue, without their aid, with uncontested effect, its march to its admitted ends. Then, a jurisdiction, on this subject, was not to be admitted, or it could only be achieved by the application of an instrument of construction, to the force of which no control could be applied. The objects of the Government afford the test of doubtful jurisdiction; but, objects of proper federal character excluded, it had appeared, interference with concerns of inferior police. The relation, however, of internal improvements, to this class of concerns, could not be contested. The relation appeared from the mere name. It was at the point of termination of the province of this description of objects, that the region commenced, which afforded the proper scope of the exercise of the general authority. As respected any relation which improvements, of analogous character to roads and canals, from their connexion with external interests, might have with the question, the consideration of them would fall under the succeeding branch of the discussion.

And this consideration brought Mr. A. to the examination of the second source which had been assigned to the power, the authority of Congress to "regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States," &c. The want of any proper relation between the regulation of commerce and the construction of its physical channels, had been insisted on by his colleague who opened the debate. But, let it be admitted that a full power of legislation was intended. Still, the power could not have an extent wider than its subject. And what was the subject? Not all commerce, as his friend from Delaware (Mr. McLANE) had assumed. [Mr. McL. explained.] Mr. A. received with pleasure from his friend explanations which might lead to union of their opinions. In the present instance, however, it did not avail to that effect. The power conceded was over foreign commerce only, and that between the States, &c.—that is to say, over the commerce only, which was external to the proper jurisdiction of the States. The facilities, therefore, which there could be competency to introduce, must relate exclusively to this description of commerce. But the improvements contemplated, roads and canals, were facilities appropriate to internal not external commerce. A control over them, then, did not pass.

The relation being to external commerce, facilities having real relation to this character of commerce, were embraced by the power. The cases which, as supposed to create the greatest difficulty, had been referred to with the most triumph, were embraced. The constructions on the great estuaries and the ocean, were embraced. The objects of improvement, which, as falling without the jurisdiction of the States, had been said to require compacts among States for their accomplishment, if there were any such, would be embraced. Facilities of the character referred to, would, moreover, be exempt from the objection incident to the improvements proposed, of wanting a character of nationality. They would exhibit a proper correspondence to the test of connexion with the interests of the Union, as a separate community. As related to the interrogatory (of the Speaker,) whether our power to dispense the form of advantage in question, was confined to the sea, and excluded from the land, the answer was, that the jurisdiction proper to the land in this respect, was confided to a different, and in reference to this particular subject, a more competent authority.

Supposing he had been successful in disposing of the authorities in relation to post roads and commerce, Mr. A. approached the power which created the only difficulty in his mind as to military power. He admitted this power to invest with authority to construct roads to a certain extent. It was not necessary, in this discussion, however, that he should employ any portion of his failing strength in defining this extent. The necessity of an essential relation between means and ends, between the exercise of subsidiary and the objects of principal powers, was not disputed, and had been admitted (by the Speaker in particular.) But what constituted this relation? He was not going into nice disquisitions on the subject; all that he maintained was, that essential relation required the operation of the subsidiary power in good faith, and reality, for the ends of the principal power. But no man contended for this relation of internal improvements to the military power. It could not, therefore, be relied upon as authority for them.

One other source had been relied upon for this jurisdiction, fraught, as it appeared to Mr. A., with greater objection and danger than any which had been assigned. He alluded to the appropriating power. It was with pleasure he had heard the disclaimer (by the Speaker) of this source of the authority. He united most heartily in the expression of reprobation. What did this claim of authority import? The "common defence and general welfare" were construed to comprehend all ends of political authority, and an unrestricted discretion to attain those ends was claimed, as far as respected the application of money; that is to say, by a mean which was equivalent to every other. If an authority of this kind did not make an unlimited Government, what did? The Russian Autocracy, the Ottoman Porte, had no occasion to arrogate a larger authority. No man maintained, in terms, the unrestricted character of the Government, yet doctrine was maintained which operated a defeasance of all restriction on it. If the doctrine was just, the wisdom of the framers of the Constitution had been unavailing, and futile their guardian solicitude to make it a rampart against despotism. The whole grant of power was admitted to rest on specification, yet a single clause of the instrument of compact was admitted to supersede this specification. A single clause! said Mr. A. Was that all? No: it was not to a single clause, nor even to the positive and enacting portion of this clause, but to a mere explanatory member of it, that was attributed this detestable sweep of operation. The language was not, that Congress should have power to provide for the common defence and general welfare, but power to lay and collect taxes, &c., to provide for these objects. The object of the grant was a taxing power, and not the enunciation of an unrestricted scope of a power of appropriation. It was not denied, that the taxing power was limited by the specification of the Constitution; yet, for the power of appropriation, which was strictly subaltern, and accessory to it, an operation was arrogated, libertine as the winds. Integrity renounced the odious discretion, to effect, by procurement, objects denied directly to its control. Yet this was the character of the assumption of authority in question. Roads and canals were admitted to be beyond the competency of the Government, as respected their actual construction, yet the procurement of this construction, by money, was not beyond its competency. In the recognition of such a doctrine, it was manifest that the Government was let loose from all control, but of an unrestricted discretion.

Mr. A. said, that he admitted the authority of this Government to provide for the general welfare, according to the just intendment and import of this expression in the Constitution. But what was this import? To set up a faculty of unbridled appropriation in the Government? Exactly the reverse—to confine this faculty by just and expedient restraint. The clause was analogous, as respected both operation and the motives of its insertion, to another, containing the general grant of incidental power, which had given occasion to even larger discussion. He referred to the clause authorizing the passage of all "laws necessary and proper" for carrying the granted powers into effect. Authority to this extent passed without expression. In the grant of the substantive objects of power, necessary and proper incidental power was involved. Was the clause, then, inserted merely from abundant caution, to ascertain this grant of incidental power? It was inserted from a motive of much higher caution, to confine this grant, by a character of essential relation, to the enumerated powers. All incidental power might have been construed to pass, and the design was to prevent the implication of any which should not have the character of being necessary and proper, in reference to its ends. The provision was not one of liberality, but jealousy and restriction. A similar policy dictated the provision under review, authorizing appropriation to objects of "common defence and general welfare." The taxing power, which was one of the largest, would draw with it a power of appropriation of commensurate extent. It was consistent with the design of the Government, and prudent, to guard this power by a restriction to objects of national concern. This was done in the words, "to provide for the common defence and general welfare." It was not to be inferred, however, from the union in the clause, of common with general objects of interest, that they were conceived as belonging to a common class. If this had been the case, the two expressions would not have been employed in connexion; for there was no word in the Constitution which had not an appropriate office, as well as signification. The expression would have been, to provide for the common defence and welfare—or, the general defence and welfare—and not for the common defence and general welfare—if a discrimination between common and general objects had not been designed. And what was this distinction? Had the words "common" and "general" an identical signification? Common was "that of which several partook." Common interests were those in which the States partook, severally. General, imported an "abstraction from particulars." The interests abstracted from such as were particular, and several, were those which attached to the Union, in a corporate, artificial capacity; as a distinct political community. Common, or several interests, were not objects of proper Federal character. They were not confided, therefore, to the Federal authority in mass. One only—"defence"—was so confided. The reasons for this concession were peculiar. But, as respected general or corporate interests, which were appropriate to the general authority, exclusively, the power of attainment had no limitation. It was only necessary to ascertain whether an object belonged to a common or corporate character, related to the several interests of the States, or the general interest of the Union, to determine whether it belonged to Federal jurisdiction. As respected objects of internal improvement, it would not be disputed that they belonged to the class of several, and not of corporate or general interests. They were not, therefore, appropriate to this jurisdiction.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

He had now, Mr. A. said, reviewed the several clauses assigned as the sources of the power, and it did not appear to be sustained by a faithful exposition of either of them. Inference from the objects of the Constitution led to the same result. Every oracle of just interpretation, when interrogated, responded in negation of the power. The Speaker had represented as a species of treachery, the refusal to exercise granted power. Without contesting the correctness of this proposition, which was undoubtedly laid down, however, with too little limitation, it was treachery, of a much higher order, to exercise ungranted power, or even that of which the concession might fairly be considered doubtful. The power, in the present instance, must be admitted to be at least of doubtful character, and the rule of public and of private morality was the same, to forbear action, the lawfulness of which was questionable. It was to be remembered, too, with a character of what peculiar danger the exercise of doubtful power was fraught, in relation to this Government. The Union could only be considered safe, in the due observance of the peculiar and delicate distribution of power, prescribed by our wise, but complicated frame of polity. The States would fly off from their orbits of relation, in the event of the law of their attraction being disturbed. Union was the guarantee of interests of the highest order, and the Constitution was the fortress of union. But this fortress, Mr. A. said, would be abandoned, if its defences were permitted to be dismantled by construction, so as no longer to present a barrier to discretionary power.

Mr. A. concluded, by saying that he was sensible he had presented, inadequately, the views of the question he had to offer. He would not, however, forego the claim of zeal in a discussion, the principle of which was of inexpressible importance.

When Mr. A. had taken his seat—

Mr. STEWART rose, and said, he concurred with the honorable gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. ARCHER,) who had just resumed his seat, in attributing to this subject a more than usual degree of importance.

The object of the bill under consideration was, to lay the foundation of a general system of internal improvement, co-extensive with the Republic, and dispensing its benefits and its blessings to every portion of the Union. It was not, however, he said, a new subject; it had frequently been introduced and discussed on this floor. As early as the year 1809, the most able report ever written on the subject had been communicated, he said, to the Senate, by the Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Gallatin;) and had the views of that distinguished and enlightened statesman been carried into effect, this country, at this time, would have presented a very different aspect; our national strength and our national resources would have been fully developed, and the North and the South, the East and the West, enjoying every commercial facility, would have been united, and bound together by the strongest ties of interest and intercourse.

This subject, said Mr. S., presents two distinct questions:

1st. Have we, by the Constitution, a right to pass this bill.

2d. If so, is it expedient to exercise it?

It is the duty, said he, of the friends of this measure, to sustain the affirmative of both these propositions. If they fail in either, the bill must be abandoned. As his views of the Constitutional power of Congress over the subject, were, in some degree, different from those taken by other gentlemen who had spoken on the same side, he would, he said, in the first place, with great deference, present them to the Committee, as concisely and as distinctly as he could, and then notice some of the arguments urged by gentlemen in opposition to the bill.

He was free to admit, for his own part, that he did not derive this power from the preamble to the Constitution; nor from the power "to provide for the general welfare," as some had contended. Nor yet did he claim it, with the President, from the right, "to appropriate money," or from the "consent of the States." While he admitted the force of these considerations, he did not think it necessary to resort to any doubtful source, for the power in question. But, in his opinion, it evidently resulted from four of the great and expressly granted powers.

The Constitution declares, that Congress shall have power,

- 1st. "To establish post offices and post roads;"
- 2d. "To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the States, and with the Indian tribes;"
- 3d. "To raise and support armies," and "provide for the common defence;" and
- 4th. "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers."

This last power would, no doubt, have followed as a matter of course; for, every grant of power necessarily carries with it the means of its own execution. However, to remove all difficulty, and all doubt, the power of selecting the means of "carrying into execution," the great objects and ends of Government, was expressly granted.

The object, then, said Mr. S., of the first grant, is, the transportation of the mail; the second, the regulation of "commerce among the States;" the third, the defence of the country; and the fourth gave the power to provide the means "necessary and proper" for the attainment of these ends. Then, the true and only questions for our consideration are these:

- 1st. Are post roads "necessary and proper" for the transportation of the mail?
- 2d. Are commercial roads and canals "necessary and proper" for the regulation of commerce among the States?
- 3d. Are military roads and canals "necessary and proper" for the defence of the country?

If the answer to these questions be in the affirmative, and he thought no other could be given; if roads and canals were "necessary and proper" for any, or all of these purposes, then, we have, expressly the power to make them, and there is an end to the argument.

It was thus, Mr. S. said, he derived the power over the subject of internal improvements. Post roads belonged to the transportation of the mail—commercial roads and canals, to the power of regulating "commerce among the States," and military roads and canals appertained to "the defence of the country." Thus, each power carries with it its own appropriate means of execution, and, without which, they would be nugatory and ineffectual.

Having premised thus much, Mr. S. said, he would now notice some of the arguments which had been urged against the bill under consideration, and especially by the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. ARCHER,) who had just resumed his seat. In the first place, we are told, that not a word is said, in the Constitution, about roads and canals, and that the power is, therefore, not granted. This, he said, was a non sequitur. It was impossible that the framers of the Constitution could foresee, and point out all the means for "carrying into execution" the powers granted. This would have been to have formed a code of laws, and not a Constitution. Had they done so, there would have been no use for a Legislative branch of Government. But, said Mr. S., according to this principle, we are violating the Constitution every day. Look at the great heads of legislation, in your statute book. You have passed, and are passing whole codes of laws, on the subject of pensions, fisheries, health laws, lighthouses, buoys, beacons, &c.—armories, and military academies, heads of Departments, public buildings, library, paintings, civilization of Indians, benevolent grants, seawalls, and surveys—roads and canals, among the rest, and many other subjects. Yet, gentlemen could not find one of these subjects mentioned in the Constitution—not a word of the kind: still they were admitted to be legitimate subjects of legislation; and why? Because they are means selected for "carrying into execution" the granted powers; and because we have expressly the power to adopt the means "necessary and proper" for this purpose; and, if gentlemen would take the trouble to look over the list, they would find much more difficulty in discovering the appropriate grant of power, to support much of this legislation, than he did in finding the power to make roads and canals. The degree of necessity and propriety was not defined. In carrying into execution the express grant of power, we are not limited in the selection of means, to those which are absolutely or indispensably necessary; but Congress is left free to exercise its own discretion in the adoption of the means that it may consider "necessary and proper to carry into execution the powers granted." Though gentlemen admit the necessity of roads and canals, for the purposes mentioned, yet, they say that the States have the power to make them, and that the General Government can then use them. And was it the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the General Government should be dependent; should wait until the States furnished the means for executing these powers? Certainly not. Where the States made roads, he was willing to use them. But there were great national objects to be accomplished—uniting the great sections of the country, the North and the South, the East and the West; objects perfectly national, which the States never could and never would attempt. It was for these that this bill provided.

He could not assent, Mr. S. said, to another proposition laid down by the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. ARCHER,) that "Congress could pass no law unless it was absolutely necessary to enable the Government to go on." [Mr. ARCHER corrected Mr. S., he had confined the remark to municipal law.] Admit the qualification, still nearly all our legislation, continued Mr. S., is municipal; it relates to the internal concerns of our own country, of our own citizens. Such regulations he considered municipal—laws were divided into national law and municipal law; the former related to foreign countries, the latter to our own. Look to your files; look to the loads of bills under which the tables were groaning; they were almost entirely municipal, regulating our own domestic concerns. Yet, perhaps, not one of them was “absolutely necessary to enable the Government to go on;” then you have no right to pass them; if you do, you violate the Constitution! Pass the appropriation bills—he knew of no others “absolutely necessary to enable the Government to go on”—then burn your files and go home: your labors are finished. These doctrines, Mr. S. contended, stripped the General Government of all its salutary powers, and would disqualify it for the attainment of the great and original objects of its institution. On the contrary, Mr. S. insisted that the powers of the General Government, in reference to all the great objects confided to its supervision and control, were plenary, were full and unlimited, as to the means of their accomplishment; except, indeed, where they were restricted by Constitutional inhibitions; and the Constitutional legislation of Congress is declared to be “the supreme law of the land,” “any thing in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.”

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Much reliance had been placed. Mr. S. said, in the course of the discussion, on that clause of the Constitution which declares that “Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, over such places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State where the same may be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings;” this provision, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. MALLARY) says, was introduced to enable Congress to build forts. But the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. ARCHER and Mr. BARBOUR) introduce it for a different purpose; they admit that the right to erect forts, magazines, &c., resulted, as a matter of course, from the power “to raise armies and provide for the common defence,” but, they say, that this provision was introduced to enable Congress to purchase the sites with the assent of the States—this interpretation of the grant Mr. S. considered equally erroneous; for the General Government certainly possessed the same right to purchase real property within a State, and to erect buildings, or make roads upon it, that an individual, or other corporation, or body politic, enjoyed, without the consent of the State, and they had exercised it to a vast amount to secure debts, &c. Nay, more; they had the power, by the Constitution, to take “private property” for “public use,” by making “just compensation;” and, if they can take it without the consent of the owner, a fortiori, they have a right to purchase with his consent. It was, therefore, evident, that this provision was neither introduced to give the right to erect forts, &c., nor the power to purchase sites; the object was clear—it was to give Congress “exclusive legislation” over our forts, to avoid the interference of State jurisdiction and State process. The reasons for this, he said, were obvious; he would not repeat them; but the same necessity for “exclusive jurisdiction” over roads and canals did not exist, though we had the same power to construct them. We could take the land and materials for their construction by making a “just compensation;” this was all that was “necessary or proper;” the jurisdiction could be safely left with the States. But, says the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. BARBOUR,) Congress may thus take possession of the New York Canal, or eighty thousand miles of post roads already made. To this there was an easy answer—it would be an abuse of power—every power might be abused. You have, expressly, the power to raise armies and lay taxes, without limit; by the abuse of these powers you might ruin the country—and where is the remedy? It was in the people; it would be found at the polls. Every gentleman who has spoken against this bill, (continued Mr. S.,) has deprecated the power of Congress to make internal improvements as ruinous to the States, as a violation of their rights, or as an encroachment on their jurisdiction. One gentleman tells us it would “bring the interference of the General Government to every man’s fire-side, and make it odious to a free people.” Another says, “the State governments” would thus become “secondary, degraded, and contemptible,” and would be at last “virtually, if not actually annihilated.” These were to him, Mr. S. said, very extraordinary arguments. What! ruin the States by internal improvements—destroy them by making roads and canals—“violate their rights” by giving them money—“degrade” them by increasing their strength, wealth, and resources, at the expense of the General Government! And, “virtually, annihilate” them, by distributing millions of the public money among them, for their common benefit! The sooner the States were thus ruined the better. The first to be destroyed, would be the last to complain. When the General Government goes forth among the States to exercise the fearful powers of taxation, “laying excises,” “raising armies,” and exacting contributions; carrying with her whole codes of laws, containing the severest penal sanctions, passed as incidental to these powers, we hear not a word about State rights; but when she goes forth with the public purse, not to fill it, but to empty it, not to raise, but to distribute money, then we hear the alarm about municipal laws, State rights, &c.; he thought those who supported the bill were more the friends of State rights and State interests than those who opposed it. But the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BARBOUR) says that his construction will produce harmony, while the exercise of this power will produce collision between the General Government and the States. A strange kind of collision; a singular conflict; the General Government offering money to the States, and they refusing to receive it! Another honorable gentleman has said that this power of making roads and canals would lead to a “consolidation" of the Government. In one sense, Mr. S. admitted the argument to be well founded; they would consolidate, they would unite, and bind together the States by the strongest ties; they were (to use the language of General Washington, when speaking of the union of the Eastern and Western waters) "the best, if not the only cement that will bind us together for any length of time, and we shall," says he, "be deficient in foresight and wisdom if we neglect the means of effecting it."

But, the honorable gentleman next tells us, that the General Government, holding the "purse and the sword," is strong; while the States, in their separate capacities, are weak. That the General Government, clothed with this tremendous power of making roads and canals, will attack the States in detail, not with the sword, but with the purse. First, the honorable gentleman says, "Congress declares to Vermont, we must regulate and distribute your commerce—we will open for you a canal." "Congress wields the whole force of the Confederacy; the State must submit." "The General Government," he says, "next enters New Jersey, and opens a canal through that State." "It then turns to Delaware, and in succession passes from State to State, encountering each one singly, with its whole strength, influence, and patronage." "What then," exclaims he, "must be the condition of the individual States when these splendid objects are accomplished?" Mr. S. said, he was at a loss to answer the question; these poor little States thus cut up by the General Government with roads and canals, would present a most deplorable spectacle; however, he thought, if the General Government would offer any of these States a half a million, or even a million of dollars, to cut roads and canals, they would submit to the operation, however unpleasant. Yet, with all these views as to the dreadful and destructive tendency of this power to the States, the same honorable gentleman tells us, that, "to the grandeur of the plans for internal improvement, he was not insensible; their utility he acknowledged, and it would afford him the greatest pleasure to concur in their support; nay, more, he could join with the most ardent enthusiasm in aiding their prosecution, did he consider himself authorized by the Constitution of the Union." Such was his language. Indeed, their utility he had not heard denied by any; and those who denied the power, generally professed a willingness to amend the Constitution, so as to give it to Congress expressly. Yet we are told, that, had it been proposed at the formation of the Constitution, to give this power to the General Government, "the States would have as soon abandoned their sovereignty and returned to the jurisdiction of the mother country, as have surrendered it." Mr. S. said he would not comment on these arguments—they destroyed each other—they could not stand together. He would not detain the Committee, to whose indulgence he was already much indebted, by any further reply to the arguments which had been urged against the Constitutional power of Congress over the subject; but he begged leave to ask, what had been already done by Congress in selecting means "to carry into execution" the express powers "to establish post offices and post roads"—"to regulate commerce," and "to provide for the common defence?"

Sir, said Mr. S., you have passed, as incidental to the first grant, whole systems of laws relative to the transportation of the mail; you have created a distinct department, and commissioned thousands of postmasters, employed mail contractors, postriders, regulated postages, &c., yet not a word, not a syllable, was to be found in the Constitution about mails, or mail contractors, postmasters, or postages; then what right, he would ask, have you to legislate upon these subjects? The right was unquestionable—you have the power "to establish post offices and post roads," and you have also the power to do whatever "is necessary and proper" to carry this grant into effect. These were considered "necessary and proper" means to accomplish this end, and therefore you have the undoubted right to adopt them; and if roads were equally "necessary and proper" as a mean to transport the mail, which, he thought, could not be denied, then your right to make them was equally clear and unquestionable. This conclusion, he said, was plain, it was irresistible; ingenuity itself could not cast the shadow of a doubt upon it. But, sir, you have gone further, said Mr. S., you have, as incidental to this incidental legislation on the subject of "post offices and post roads," superadded another system of laws to carry your incidental laws into effect, denouncing the severest penalties against those who violate or contravene their provisions, even to the taking away the property, the liberty, and in some cases the life, of the citizens of the State, in their own territory; yet we hear not a word of complaint, not a word about violating State rights by municipal laws; nothing is said about "degrading" the States, rendering them "secondary and contemptible," or rendering the General Government "odious." You may take away the life, liberty, and property of the citizens, by virtue of your power "to establish post offices and post roads," but if, by virtue of the same power, you go into the States to distribute money for their benefit in making roads, then we are alarmed with the cry about ruining the States. When you come with the rope to hang the citizens, then you are welcome; but if you bring money to distribute among them, in making useful improvements, then you are repulsed as an unlawful intruder; he would ask gentlemen on the other side, was this consistent? was it reasonable?

Much, very much, continued Mr. S., has been said on both sides, as to the word establish, as it related to post roads. He had listened with pleasure to those recondite philological disquisitions; but, for his own part, he did not consider it necessary or material to resort to the phraseology of the grant for the power in question. The object was indicated by the Constitution; it was the transportation of the mail, and the means of its attainment followed of course. And what object was more important than the distribution of intelligence through the mail? Was it not important that the people should know all that was going on in this Government? Every thing here depends upon public opinion; how important, then, is it that public opinion should be enlightened. When the people ceased to be virtuous and enlightened, there was, he said, an end of liberty; there was an end of this free and happy Government.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. of R.

But if the power in question depended upon the word "establish," he thought it was clear. If A, for a valuable consideration, grants to B the power "to establish" a mill road or a market road through his farm, does it not give to B the right to open and make the road? If it does not, the object of the grant is defeated; the grant itself is altogether nugatory, and useless and absurd. So the States had given Congress the power "to establish post roads," and if they have not the power to open and make them, the grant would, he contended, be equally useless and equally absurd.

But, said Mr. S., we have also expressly the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States." And what have you done as incidental to this power, with a view to carry it into effect? Look at your commercial laws and regulations, literally filling whole volumes. He would not attempt an enumeration of the almost infinite variety of means employed to carry into effect this grant of power, not one of which were mentioned in the Constitution. And among the rest, the Government expended near $200,000 per annum in the support, erection, and repair of lighthouses, buoys, beacons, &c., passing up our bays and rivers, hundreds of miles into the interior—not only erecting lighthouses, but building sea walls, making surveys, removing sand bars which obstructed the navigation; and if you can come up the Potomac for this purpose, to this city, why not go on to Cumberland, or up the Mississippi and Ohio to Pittsburg, from whence ships had been fitted out and descended that river? If you can cut a sand bar, you can cut a canal; the expense might be different, but the principle and the power were precisely the same; you do all these things by virtue of your power to regulate foreign and domestic commerce. If roads and canals were equally necessary and useful in the interior, for the regulation of commerce among the States, you have the same power precisely to make them. The only difference was in the means; and there was not a country in the world where this power could be so happily and so profitably employed as in this. Mr. S. here referred to a variety of objects, to illustrate this idea, which were highly important, he said, to the facilitation of internal "commerce among the States." And, again, said he, you have the power "to raise armies" and "provide for the common defence." This grant, he said, carried with it perhaps a greater variety of means, or incidental powers, than any other; by virtue of this power, you have erected forts, armories, military academies; you have procured all the necessary supplies and appendages of an army—provisions, military stores, and the munitions of war. You have enacted the most rigid system of military discipline, authorizing courts martial to take away the life of the citizen soldier for a great variety of comparatively small offences. And where, sir, do you get the power to do all this? Not one word is said upon the subject in the Constitution. Still the power exists, though the Constitution is silent, and why? Because, having the power "to raise armies and to provide for the common defence," you have also, sir, expressly the right to provide the means "necessary and proper to carry these powers into execution." And it is clear, sir, that if roads and canals be "necessary and proper" for "the defence" of the country, you have expressly the power to make them; the only question, in fact, is, are they a fit and proper means for this purpose? And who could doubt it? Look at the experience of the late war! look at the waste of blood and treasure on your Northern frontier for want of good roads and canals, and say are they necessary for the defence of the country? These lessons were too recent and severe to be forgotten. Sir, roads are of primary importance. You provide cannon and military stores for "the common defence;" but of what use are they without roads, upon which to transport them to the places where they may be wanted for the public service? Sir, said Mr. S., I hesitate not to express the opinion that, if the plan of Mr. Gallatin had been carried into effect, if even the single canal, mentioned by the President in his late Message, to connect the Seat of the General Government with the Northern lakes, had been executed, all the disgrace and all the disasters that befel our arms on the Northern frontier, during the late war, would have been avoided. Sir, the waste of treasure, and the waste of blood, the noble, the generous blood of the brave and patriotic freemen of the West, which had been poured out like water, would have been saved to this nation. The transportation of a single cannon, in some instances, had cost near $1,000, and a barrel of flour $100, where it is usually bought for four or five dollars. With these facts staring us in the face, and their weight resting on our shoulders, who would deny that roads and canals were "necessary and proper" for the common defence?

But the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. ARCHER,) who has just addressed you, admits the power to make military roads and canals. This, Mr. S. said, he considered a surrender of the whole question. The gentleman says it properly belongs to the power "to raise armies and provide for the common defence," and thus admits the right of Congress to select the means to accomplish the end of Government; and if a majority of Congress think roads and canals necessary and proper for the transportation of the mail, and the regulation of commerce, they have, undoubtedly, upon the same principle, and by virtue of the same power, a right to make them. But even suppose you confine its exercise to military roads and canals—by this you can accomplish all the great objects contemplated by the friends of this bill. If the honorable gentlemen will compare

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

Mr. Gallatin's report, which embraces the whole subject for mail, military, and commercial purposes, with the report of the distinguished gentleman now at the head of the War Department, on the subject of "military roads and canals," he will find their systems, in all material respects, to be the same. The Secretary of War, in fact, says, at the close of his enumeration: "Many of the roads and canals which have been suggested, are, no doubt, of the first importance to the commerce, the manufactures, the agriculture, and political prosperity of the country, but are not, for that reason, less useful or necessary for military purposes. It is, in fact, one of the great advantages of our country, enjoying so many others, that, whether we regard its internal improvement in relation to military, civil, or political purposes, very nearly the same system, in all its parts, is required. The road or canal can scarcely be designated, which is not highly useful for military operations, and which is not equally required for the industry or political prosperity of the community;" and had the roads and canals pointed out, he adds, "been completed before the late war, their saving, in that single contest, in men, money, and reputation, would have more than indemnified the country for the expense of their construction." He then recommends the very plan proposed by this bill for procuring the necessary plans and estimates, as preliminary to their execution; so that, by passing this bill, you do no more than has been required by the Secretary of War for military purposes alone; and the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. ARCHER,) who has admitted the power to make military roads and canals, may, with perfect consistency, support this bill with a view to strengthen the military defences of the country. And, having the power to make roads and canals for the defence of the country, will it be seriously contended that the State through which they pass may defeat them, though indispensably necessary for the safety and best interests of the country? To give the power to defend the country, without the means of its execution, would be ridiculous and absurd; it would be a degree of folly which could not be imputed to the wise framers of our excellent Constitution; besides, these powers, he said, were perfectly innocent and harmless. What possible injury could result? If, in their exercise, Congress should transcend the limits of a sound discretion; if they should resort to means not "necessary and proper," to attain the end—the Supreme Court, possessing a power of supervision and control, will correct it. But, sir, if the liberties of this country—if the States have any thing to fear from the General Government, it is not from their incidental or resulting powers; it is from their great and express powers; the power to "raise armies" and to "lay taxes." Here their power is not only unlimited, but it is without check, without control.

But, Mr. S. said, he not only thought the General Government possessed the power over the subject of roads and canals, but he considered the question settled; if any question could ever be settled by frequent and solemn decisions in Congress, this was. He found in the statute book a whole system of laws under the head of "roads and canals;" and were all these laws unconstitutional? Laws for the construction of the Cumberland road had received the sanction of every Executive, and of almost every Congress, since the Administration of Mr. Jefferson, who had signed the first law on the subject. But the strongest and most unequivocal expression in favor of the power was to be found in the proceedings had in the last Congress, on the bill providing for the erection of toll-gates on the Cumberland road. This bill certainly carried the Constitutional power of Congress over the subject, to its utmost limit. It assumed complete sovereignty and jurisdiction within the territory of the States, establishing tolls, and inflicting pains and penalties upon those who might disregard or violate its provisions; yet this bill, thus exerting the Constitutional power of Congress to its utmost extent, passed in Committee of the Whole, (though it encountered the powerful opposition of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, who had just spoken, Mr. BARBOUR, and several others,) by a vote of more than two to one, and after an amendment was adopted, appropriating a sum of money to repair the road previous to the erection of the gates, the bill passed, by ayes and noes, by a large majority; and even Virginia and North Carolina, so remarkable for their Constitutional scruples, stood divided on the passage of the bill, the former 8 to 12, the latter 5 to 5. And, in the Senate, where the Constitutional powers of this Government were certainly well understood, where you find many of the most able, experienced, and enlightened Constitutional lawyers in this or any other nation, this bill passed with all its powers, and all its provisions, gates, penalties, money, and all, by a vote of 29 to 7, and even some of the seven who voted against it, he understood, were influenced, not by any doubt of the power, but by a doubt of the expediency of degrading this great, free, national road to the level of common toll roads, for the sake of the trifling sum required to keep it in repair. By this strong and almost unanimous decision, the question, in Congress, at least, ought to be considered as settled. He came next, Mr. S. said, to consider the second question: Is this measure expedient? And this, to his mind, was the most important branch of the subject. [Here Mr. STEWART gave way, at a late hour, for a motion to adjourn.]

The next morning, Mr. STEWART, after thanking the Committee for the indulgence afforded him by the adjournment yesterday, proceeded to submit his views on the question of expediency. On this ground, the bill, he said, had met with very little opposition. Gentlemen who had denied the Constitutional power of Congress over the subject, had generally admitted the expediency of the measure. Some objections, however, had been made to it on this ground, which first claimed his attention. The honorable gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. ARCHER,) has said, that the national debt of near one hundred millions, should be first paid.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Mr. S. said, that he was quite sure that he felt as much anxiety as that honorable gentleman to discharge the national debt, and he would go as far to retrench the expenditure of the Government, to accomplish it. But the national debt, he said, had been overrated. The honorable gentleman would find, after deducting the three per cent. stocks, the subscription to the National Bank, and the amount of seven per cents. which would be discharged by the balance now in the Treasury, the amount to be redeemed of the national debt, instead of one hundred millions, was, in fact, little more than sixty-one millions, which, by the regular application of the ordinary sinking fund would be entirely extinguished in less than eight years. What then was to be done with the sinking fund of ten millions per annum? Was it to be wasted in idle extravagance? Besides, Mr. S. said, many of the present sources of expenditure would soon be dried up. The annual appropriations for the erection of forts, and the gradual increase of the Navy, would soon be rendered unnecessary, by the accomplishment of those objects. Our enormous pension list must soon be reduced by the hand of time, and the annual expenditure upon this Capitol, this splendid monument of national extravagance, which had cost as much as would have completed a canal from here to Cumberland, must cease. These results would produce an annual saving of near three millions per annum, which might be well applied to internal improvement; or, if gentlemen would consent to give to this object the increase of revenue, which would arise from the adoption of the new tariff, it would be sufficient for two or three of the first years of its operation.

Another objection made, was, that this measure would lead to an unequal distribution of the public funds. This Mr. S. said must depend upon the plan hereafter adopted. For his own part, he was free to say, that he would prefer a plan to distribute the fund set apart for this purpose, among the States, according to their representation in this House; reserving to Congress the right to designate the objects upon which it should be expended within or adjoining the several States; and, by referring to Mr. Gallatin's report, it would be seen that there was scarcely a State in the Union which was not intersected or bounded by some great national object of internal improvement. This fund, yielding an annual and certain aid to the States, would give a general impulse to improvements throughout the Union; it would stimulate and strengthen the efforts of the States; and induce them, in many cases, to commence great undertakings of this kind, which would never be attempted without it.

Thus the distribution would be salutary, it would be just, equitable, and beneficial to every portion of the Union. But, Mr. S. said, he would ask the honorable gentleman from Virginia, whether the expenditures of the General Government were, in other respects, equal among the States? Look at the immense expenditures on the seaboard, in the erection of forts and other public works of defence, in building and supporting a Navy, for the protection of foreign commerce, and for defending it against foreign aggression; the late war was emphatically a war in defence of "Free trade and sailors' rights;" in support of which the interior of the West had expended their full portion of blood and treasure. Of the five hundred and sixty millions of dollars expended since the formation of the Government, how much had gone to the benefit of the interior, in promoting internal commerce among the States? Scarcely two millions for constructing the Cumberland road, and this trifling sum the State of Ohio was required to refund. Was this an equal, was this, he asked, a fair distribution of the public funds? Must all be devoted to foreign commerce, and nothing to internal commerce among the States? Sir, said he, the interior is now laboring under a complication of difficulties, which rendered their situation truly distressing. The manufacturing establishments, which heretofore furnished a market for the farmer, (for want of adequate protection,) had sunk under the weight of foreign competition; without canals, the products of agriculture would not bear transportation to the Atlantic markets; thus, the farmer, without a market, was left without a motive to industry. Here Mr. S. mentioned a variety of facts, showing that the West paid annually a tax of near three millions of dollars for the transportation of goods, and a heavier duty was paid on glass and other articles carried from the West to Baltimore, than was paid by the foreign article in the same port; nineteen-twentieths of this expense would be saved by a single canal connecting the Eastern and Western waters. He then took an extensive view of the canals and internal improvements in England, where twenty-two canals crossed their mountains, uniting the eastern and western waters of that Kingdom. He also adverted to the policy of France, Holland, and several other European nations, and contrasted their policy in this respect with our own. While no nation, he said, possessed the same advantages, the same facilities, or the same inducements, as this, for internal improvements, yet none had done so little. As a nation, he said, we had done almost nothing; we were far behind the Holy Alliance, and had scarcely kept up with the Ottoman Porte in attending to the internal concerns of our own country, by developing its resources, and facilitating internal trade by internal improvements. If we were asked by our constituents why we lavished millions every year, for the benefit and protection of foreign commerce, and did nothing to promote internal commerce among the States, were we prepared to give them a satisfactory answer?

But, as nothing but what was foreign appeared to satisfy some gentlemen; as they appeared to have an aversion to every thing that was domestic, that was internal, that was American, whether in reference to commerce or manufactures, still they might, he said, be gratified—they might have foreign commerce at home, at least if distance made commerce foreign. For instance, he said, our Atlantic merchants might be as profitably employed to themselves, and much more so to the country, in importing lead from Missouri, instead of bringing it from Europe. While the voyage would be equally foreign as to distance, it would be infinitely more secure and advantageous. In a single year (1816) we had imported from abroad more than 20,000,000 of pounds of lead. Every year cost the nation more than half a million of dollars, while our own country furnished this article in inexhaustible quantities. In the West, we had whole districts of country literally composed of lead, sufficient to supply the universe; yet, for want of the necessary facilities for transportation, such as this bill was intended to afford, these immense sources of national wealth, of national independence, remained, and must continue to remain, dormant and useless. This was a single instance selected to illustrate the policy of this measure, while the argument would apply with equal force to an almost infinite variety of other sources of wealth in the interior, as iron, glass, &c., the raw material of which remained buried in the earth, useless and unproductive, and which only required the plastic and vivifying touch of governmental patronage and protection to spring at once into useful and prosperous activity.

Mr. S. here introduced another argument in favor of this measure, drawn from its evident tendency to enhance the value of the public lands, of which the Government still had for sale more than 400,000,000 of acres, and with respect to which Congress had expressly, by the Constitution, power to make "all needful rules and regulations;" and certainly there could be no "regulation" better calculated to increase their value, to facilitate their sale, and to induce their settlement, than a good system of roads and canals, opening a cheap, free, and easy communication with them. In support of this argument, Mr. S. read several extracts from Mr. Gallatin's report, made in 1808, which states, among other things, that "the opening of an inland navigation from tide-water to the great lakes would immediately give to the great body of lands bordering on those lakes as great value as if they were situate at the distance of one hundred miles by land from the seacoast; and if the proceeds of the first ten million of acres which may be sold were applied to such improvements, the United States would be amply repaid in the sale of the other ninety millions." Mr. S. also referred to some calculations made on the subject, in a letter addressed to Mr. Gallatin by Mr. Robert Fulton, to whose genius the world was so much indebted, in which he demonstrated that the public lands, six hundred miles from the seaboard, would, by the use of canals, enjoy all the advantages of those within fifty miles of it by land. "Every mile of canal, he stated, through the public lands, would accommodate 25,600 acres;" "and the land sold, says Mr. Fulton, in 1806, averaged about two dollars per acre—with a canal it would produce six dollars. Thus, he says, only twenty miles of canal each year running through national lands would raise the value of 512,000 acres, four dollars per acre, giving $1,048,000, a sum sufficient to make 136 miles of canal." Hence, it was evidently the interest and duty of the Government speedily to adopt a system of policy which, while it greatly increased its revenue and resources, would at the same time open a market to the West, facilitate trade and intercourse, unite the great geographical sections of the Union, and thus promote the permanent prosperity of the nation.

Sir, said Mr. S., possessing, as we do, the only free Government upon earth, blessed by Divine Providence with every variety of climate and of soil, unconnected with Europe, and strangers to the storms which disturb her repose, enjoying tranquillity at home, and at peace with all the world, it is the policy of this Government to turn its attention to its own internal improvement, to bring into activity its own immense resources, which, as yet, were but partially developed; to minister to the wants and relieve the distresses of our own people, by seeking out and adopting appropriate remedies, by building up proud and permanent and glorious monuments of internal improvement, which will remain to the latest posterity as so many memorials of the wisdom and munificence of their ancestors. Unique in our situation, occupying a proud pre-eminence among the nations of the earth, sir, we owe a great example to the world, not by conquering and destroying nations, but by cultivating the arts of peace, by making our people as prosperous and as happy as they are free. His heart, Mr. S. said, beat high with joy and gladness when he contemplated the delightful prospect which, he flattered himself, was rapidly rising into view, when this nation would cease to be dependent upon European skill and industry for the supply of its wants; when we should enjoy the utmost degree of prosperity; when New England, now sufficiently populous, instead of Old England, should become the great and principal seat of our manufacturing establishments—the South cultivating and supplying the raw material, while the West, offering to the hand of agriculture a rich and productive soil, will always afford the breadstuffs in abundance. Thus, the great sections of our Republic will become customers instead of rivals, mutually dependent upon each other both for a market and a supply. Then, with the proposed system of internal improvement, by which the provisions of the West would find a rapid, cheap, and easy conveyance to the East, in exchange for return cargoes of manufactured articles, and the cottons of the South enjoying similar facilities of exchange with the North, our independence would become perfect, and our Union indissoluble.

In a country, continued Mr. S., so extensive as this, spreading itself over an almost unlimited extent of territory; divided into great geographical sections by high and almost impassable mountains, and presenting an exposed military frontier of seven or eight thousand miles, a well regulated system of internal improvements, whether regarded in relation to its military strength, or its political stability, or its commercial prosperity, was of the utmost importance. With it, we would be the strongest, without it, the weakest, nation on earth, possessing the same population and resources. Sir, said Mr. S., this nation must depend, for its security and its liberty, not upon standing armies, but upon the virtue and patriotism of the people—on the militia, the citizen-soldiers of the Republic. Standing armies, in time of peace, he deprecated, as inauspicious to freedom; he regarded them as a most destructive bane, and intolerable burden. The strength of this nation, therefore, in all emergencies, would be in proportion to the facility with which the physical force of the country could be promptly and rapidly concentrated at any point where its presence might be required, whether “to suppress insurrections” at home, or “to repel invasions” from abroad.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Suppose, said Mr. S., your seaboard to be threatened by the combined fleets of Europe, without the possibility of knowing at what point you were to be attacked, what would be a standing army of even one hundred thousand men, distributed along a maritime frontier of three or four thousand miles, without facilities for prompt and rapid concentration? They would be weak and inefficient. How much more powerful and effectual would be a system of inland navigation, extending from the North to the South, connecting in one common chain the whole of your Atlantic cities, and thence, like the radii of a circle, penetrating the interior to its centre, enabling the whole physical strength of the country to be rapidly delivered at any given point, where they could move, with all the munitions of war, “pari passu” with the enemy, always fresh and unbroken by the fatigue of long and forced marches? These advantages, said Mr. S., are not imaginary. They have been already, in some degree, realized on the New York canal, where we now transport troops and munitions of war more than three times the distance in the same period, and at less than one-third the former expense, without fatigue to the soldier, or the destruction of property attendant upon land transportation. As a means of national defence, therefore, roads and canals were incomparably the best. In peace, liberty had nothing to fear from roads and canals—from standing armies it had. In peace, forts were useless, nay, worse—they were a burden of expense. Roads and canals, whether in peace or in war, afforded every facility for commercial intercourse, and, if made by subscribing stock, would be, instead of a public burden, a constant source of revenue to the Government, presenting such facilities that, by stamping on the earth, an army will spring into existence, and rush to the point of danger or alarm.

But, independent of their military and commercial advantages, roads and canals, considered in a political point of view, would form one of the most powerful bonds of union among the States. They virtually removed mountains, conquered time and space, brought distant parts of the country more nearly together, and united them by the strong ties of friendship, of interest, of intercourse. And here he begged leave again to quote the language of WASHINGTON, the Father of his Country, whose solemn advice could never be too often repeated. In speaking of the Western country, forty years ago, he says: “For my own part, I wish sincerely every door to that country may be set wide open, and the commercial intercourse with it rendered as free and easy as possible. This, in my opinion, is the best, if not the only cement, that can bind these people to us for any length of time; and we shall be deficient in foresight and wisdom, if we neglect the means of effecting it. Our interest,” he says, “is so much in unison with this measure, that nothing short of that ill-timed and misapplied parsimony, and contracted way of thinking, which intermingles so much in our public councils, can counteract it.”

If the policy which opposed this measure forty years ago, was justly considered unwise, ill-timed, contracted, and illiberal, what would be said of it now? Since then, a new world, as if by magic, had sprung up in the West; the wilderness had yielded to the hand of industry; ships had taken the place of the Indian’s canoe, and splendid cities and towns, and cultivated fields, had risen on the ruins of savage huts. If it then required roads and canals as the “best and only cement,” to hold together the East and the West, how much more are they required now? Then the Western people were surrounded by powerful and hostile savage tribes; they were not only dependent on the Atlantic States for protection and for supplies, but were bound to them by all the ties of a common kindred, and filial affection, bearing to the Eastern States the relation of the first colonies to the mother country. But how is it now? The population of the West is the growth of its own soil; their wealth and resources are increasing every day; they are becoming, of themselves, a great and powerful people, and, as they increased in weight, it would be the part of a wise policy to increase the number and strength of the ties which unite them to the East. Though it is true, sir, that the West cling to their brethren of the East, with a fond affection and an ardent attachment; though they cheerfully perform an annual pilgrimage over yonder rough and rugged mountains, to worship here with “a more than Eastern idolatry,” at this temple of liberty, this altar of our Union; yet, sir, remember that the time may come (which God forbid) when an unwise and unjust policy may weaken those attachments, however strong, and stifle those affections, however pure. Though all is now sunshine, still a cloud may yet appear to darken and to mar our political horizon. How long was it since the threat of resistance, the thunder of rebellion, was heard on this floor from another quarter? Though he did not, for his own part, apprehend any danger, at present; yet it was, he repeated, the part of a wise policy to strengthen, by every possible means, the ties which bind this Union together; for, upon it depended the peace, and the happiness, and the best hopes of this people. Destroy this, and you extinguish the last lamp of liberty; you prostrate the last citadel of freedom. Thus, freedom left without a friend, and liberty without a sanctuary, the fell principles of "the Holy Alliance" would spread, unresisted, their gloomy dominion over the universe.

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

Sir, said Mr. STEWART, I feel that I have trespassed too long on the patience of the Committee, and will only add, that the power to pass this bill is as clear to my mind, as its exercise is expedient. Sir, said he, it is almost the only power you possess of conferring benefits and blessings upon the States; of expending the people's money for the people's benefit; and its exercise, more than any other, would tend to promote and to perpetuate the union, harmony, and prosperity of this nation; and, as he considered this the most salutary power that the General Government possessed, so it would be the last that he would consent to surrender. It was a power which every well-regulated government must possess—the power of self-improvement.

Sir, said he, defeat this bill, and you give the death-blow to the best hopes and best interests of this nation. Pass it, and one other, (he meant the tariff,) and the 18th Congress will have nobly done its duty. It will be hailed by future generations as having laid the foundation of a system of policy which would soon raise this nation to the high and brilliant destiny that awaits it.—Let the fate, however, of these measures be what it might, he would, at least, have the satisfaction, he said, of recording his name in their favor.

THURSDAY, January 29.

On motion of Mr. WEBSTER, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads were instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, that the publishers of newspapers, and other periodical journals, may be allowed, in transmitting such newspapers, or journals, by mail, to accompany them with bills, or memorandums of account, on such conditions, and for such additional rates of postage, as may be thought proper.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from William P. Duval, Governor of Florida, accompanied by a printed copy of the "Acts of the Legislative Council of the Territory of Florida, passed at their second session, 1823;" which letter and acts were ordered to lie on the table.

The amendment proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to alter the times of holding the District Court at Mobile, in the District of Alabama," was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendments proposed by the Senate to the joint resolution in relation to an intended visit of the Marquis de Lafayette to the United States, was read, and concurred in by the House.

The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the final adjustment of land claims in the State of Missouri, and Territory of Arkansas, derived from the Governments of France and Spain," was read twice, and committed to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Ordered, That the report of the Committee on the Public Lands, made on the 12th instant, on a proposition to revive and continue in force the provisions of "An act for the relief of the purchasers of public lands prior to the 1st of July, 1820," be recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The report of the Postmaster General, made on the 27th instant, in relation to an equalization of the compensation of deputy Postmasters, were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SURVEYS FOR ROADS AND CANALS.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, on the bill for obtaining the requisite plans and estimates on the subject of roads and canals.

Mr. STEWART concluded the speech which he began yesterday, in favor of the bill, as given entire in preceding pages.

Mr. A. STEVENSON, of Virginia, in rising, said, that he had not the vanity to suppose that any argument which he could offer on this subject would change the opinion expressed by the House, in the previous vote on this bill. Indeed, he should have considered himself precluded, by his respect for the House, from any attempt to discuss, at this stage, the important principles involved in this bill, had not the House evinced, by consenting to recommit it, a willingness to have it more fully and freely debated. Under this impression he rose, at this protracted stage of the debate, to discharge what he believed to be a sacred duty, and to ask the indulgence of the Committee, whilst he presented, as briefly as he could, his views on this interesting and important subject.

He did not intend, Mr. S. said, to discuss at large the expediency of the system, towards which this bill was avowedly a preliminary step, and which might justly be considered as the first link in the mighty chain of constructive power. Candor, however, required him to say that, if he believed the power claimed could be exercised without a violation of the Constitution, yet he would refuse to exercise it.

He concurred in the opinion expressed by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, (the SPEAKER,) that political power was the highest which could be given by man to man. It was the most sacred trust that could be reposed in an earthly tribunal; but he had yet to learn how a refusal to exercise any power, which might be deemed unwise or inexpedient, could be construed into an abandonment of duty, or treachery to the nation. He would not follow gentlemen in the wide range they had taken, as to the expediency of this measure, but would content himself with presenting some general remarks, in relation to this branch of the subject, before he came to discuss the question of power.

There are many and powerful considerations, Mr. S. said, which, in his opinion, forbid the exercise of this power by the General Government at the present time. The subject was one peculiarly fitted for the State governments. It was one of a local, rather than a national character; and could only be well executed by the local authorities. All these schemes of internal improvement must have their rise, Mr. S. said, in local interests and feelings; and he put it to the candor of the friends of this bill to say, whether their contemplated schemes for improvement had not their origin in local views. What security, Mr. S. asked, by the present Constitution, should we have for equality, in the disbursements of the millions which would be necessary for the execution of these splendid and magnificent schemes? None, none, but legislative discretion and pleasure. Does not every impartial mind see that the resources of the nation, derived from all, would be used for local rather than national objects; and that favorite portions of the Union would receive the benefits, whilst other parts could not participate?

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. of R.

Sir, said Mr. S., instead of promoting those great national benefits, which the imagination of the honorable Speaker has sketched in such bright perspective; instead of promoting union and peace among the States and the people, it would be the apple of discord and disunion. Look to the situation of some of the old States, and see what would be the operation of this system upon them. There are many of them who deny the Constitutional power now claimed, and believe it cannot, and ought not to be exercised by this Government. They have maintained that opinion from the foundation of the Government to the present time. They have heretofore refused to participate in any of these schemes, and would, he had no doubt, continue to preserve their consistency. In relation to my own State, said Mr. S., I feel a proud confidence that she will not abandon the high ground which she has heretofore so well and so ably sustained. Virginia, sir, has maintained too long her worship at the altar of the Constitution, pure and undefiled, to be seduced from her allegiance by golden considerations, or alarmed by any mistaken apprehensions of disunion or disaffection. Virginia is not insensible to the benefits of internal improvement; she is now actively engaged in this great work; but she asks not the aid of this Government, and would scorn to receive it, by a sacrifice of her principles, or an abandonment of duty. There are other States which hold the same sentiments. What, then, is our situation? Why, the resources of our nation are to be seized on, to aggrandize our Western and Northwestern brethren; to subdue the Western floods, and tame their mountains; and, if we refuse our assent, we are told that "the Union may be endangered and shaken to its centre."

Sir, said Mr. S., I entertain no fears upon the subject. No man can make me believe that the rejection of this bill, or the refusal to exercise the power now claimed is to separate these States, or alienate the affections of the West from the Union. Our Western brethren are too patriotic and high-minded; they bear too noble and lofty a spirit they are bound to us by too many and endearing ties; they have poured out their blood too freely in defence of every thing which can be dear to freemen—to let any mistaken or momentary feeling hurry them into anarchy or disunion. In opposing this bill, Mr. S. disclaimed any unfriendly feeling towards the West. He could say, with an ancient worthy—

"Amicus Plato: sed magis amica veritas."

He loved the West, but he loved the Constitution and interests of his country more.

He called upon gentlemen to pause! If this power must be exercised by this Government, let it be by an amendment of the Constitution. A proposition to that effect had been submitted in the other branch of the Legislature. Let us wait its issue; present the question fairly to the people; (I do not say that I will vote for it;) but if they, after fully understanding and weighing the subject, shall determine to give you this power, then, and not till then, attempt to exercise it.

Mr. S. said that he would now proceed to the question of Constitutional power. Have Congress a right to project and execute a great national scheme of internal improvement, by means of roads and canals? This was the view in which this bill had been sustained by the able and ingenious arguments of its friends; and it was, Mr. S. said, his intention to examine and answer these arguments as far as he was able. Before, however, he did so, he begged to be indulged with a few preliminary remarks upon the indisposition which was always manifested in this House, to Constitutional discussions. It must be obvious to those who had been here but for a short time, that arguments of this character were never very graciously received on this floor; and especially where they were supposed to conflict with favorite or interesting schemes of national policy. If there was nothing in the measure proposed, and objected to, offensive to the great principles of civil liberty, or republican Government, gentlemen were not disposed to examine very nicely the powers between the two Governments. The line between powers surrendered and those retained, they were not anxious to draw, provided any good end might be obtained, by the exercise of the immediate power claimed. We hear it daily rung in our ears, said Mr. S., that these discussions are idle; that this will, and must, become a great and splendid Government; and that it is folly to suppose that we have not, and ought not to have, the powers to accomplish it. Virginia, too, is ridiculed and abused for her scruples and her jealousy upon this subject. Sir, let me tell this House that the period is approaching, if it has not arrived, when Constitutional discussions must and will be listened to here. The people are getting roused, and the subject is coming home to the bosom of every man. Human affections and attachments, Mr. S. said, had been aptly compared to solar heat, which decreases in proportion as it recedes from the sun. This was true in relation to Government. As it extended and spread out its limits and population, the extremities would become weakened, and corresponding energy and power must be given to the centre.

When the Government was formed of the old thirteen States, fears were then entertained by many of the wise men who formed it, that its territorial limits were too large for a single Government, and that it would require too much power to govern well. What would then have been thought, if it could have been foreseen that, in

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

forty years, we should have been pushing our limits to the waters of the Oregon, a distance from the Seat of Government of some four or five thousand miles?

Sir, is it not demonstrable that, as you extend your territorial limits, the power in the centre will, like the snow-ball, continue to increase; and that a spirit of jealousy will arise in the States and among the people, unfriendly to the Government? Do we not know that this is now the case, and that more danger is apprehended from tyranny in the head than anarchy in the extremities? Is it not what might be expected? Do we suppose that the people are willing to abandon their State governments as useless corporations?—those governments which brought them through an age of revolution, and cheered them amid the gloom of a long and bloody war; those governments to which the people look up for the protection of their dearest rights, and consider as the safe-guard of their liberties! We may hug ourselves in the consciousness of possessing power which cannot be taken from us; but the eyes of the nation will be upon us. No Constitution, said Mr. S. possesses the power of preserving itself; no parchment barriers ever did or can preserve a government: it is to the virtue and intelligence of the people that we are to look. Without this, your Constitution, when opposed to the lust of power, would be a dead letter; a miserable, empty reed, dashing against a Colossus. There is, besides, no friendly third Power to decide between the States and General Government in conflicts for power. These considerations ought to teach those who are rulers in the respective governments the necessity of caution and forbearance in the execution of their powers—to recede from, rather than to overstep, the line of separation; and to invite, rather than to scowl upon, Constitutional discussions. It is only by this course, said Mr. S., that we can preserve the Union, and the liberties and happiness of the people. As to my own course, Mr. Chairman, it has long since been settled. I came here to exercise my duty in good faith; and, whilst I will not, by an improper or weak exercise of power, paralyze the energies of this Government, or defeat the great objects of its creation, I will not legislate into the Constitution one scintilla of power, or assume even that which I may think doubtful, to obtain any object, however desirable.

Sir, said Mr. S., I can never forget the words of the venerable Clinton, when, in the Senate of the United States, he rejected the bill rechartering the Bank of the United States. He said: "In the course of a long life, I have found that Government is not to be strengthened by an assumption of doubtful powers, but by a wise and energetic execution of those which are incontestable: the former never fails to produce suspicion and distrust, whilst the latter inspires respect and confidence."

These words ought to be written in letters of gold upon your Coliseum, and over the doors of this Hall; and he would go still further, (much as he was opposed to amendments to the Constitution, and despised oaths,) and to the oath which every member of this House takes to support the Constitution of the United States, he would add the words, "and never exercise a doubtful power."

Mr. S. said, that, before he came to comment upon the two parts of the Constitution which the honorable Speaker and his friend from Delaware (Mr. McLANE) relied on as deriving this power, he would make a single remark upon the discrepancy which existed amongst the friends of the bill, as to the sources of the power claimed. The Speaker had defended this diversity of opinion, and thought there was nothing extraordinary in it. He said that it was common for men to view the same subject under different aspects. That it was favorable to the assertion of the power claimed, inasmuch as the same result was obtained by so many various modes of reasoning. Sir, said Mr. S., I protest against arguments like these, as applicable to a written and limited Constitution. Can it be believed that a power like that claimed—a power involving all the highest attributes of sovereignty, should have been wholly omitted in the specification of powers, and left as accessorial to half a dozen subordinate and inferior powers? The friends of this bill are completely at war among themselves, as to the true source of the power. One gentleman comes forward and claims it under the clause "to establish post offices and post roads." A second disclaims this source, but seeks it under the right to "regulate commerce." A third does not believe it is in either, but maintains that it is given by the clause empowering Congress to "declare war." A fourth, from the power to appropriate money. A fifth, from the clause authorizing us to pass all laws "necessary and proper" to carry into effect the powers vested in the General Government; and a sixth, from the power to "provide for the common defence and general welfare." Now, is it not singular, Mr. S. asked, that a power of such magnitude should have been left to implication, and be capable of being attached, by ingenious construction, to so many and such conflicting powers, in an instrument so distinct, so cautious, so minute, in all its specifications, as the Constitution of the United States? The honorable Speaker, in his able and ingenious argument, took his stand upon the power to make post roads, and to regulate commerce between the States, though he admitted that the commercial clause was the most doubtful source of power. He contended that the whole question turned upon the true signification of the word "establish," which he asserted to mean (in the sense in which it is used in the Constitution) to "fix," "build," "create," "make firm." Mr. S. said, that he was not a little astonished that the Speaker should, in the construction of an instrument so sacred as the Constitution, have confined himself to verbal criticism and a play upon words. Did he go back to the period when the Constitution was formed, or give us the circumstances which led to its formation? Did he call to his aid any of the able writers who have given us commentaries on its meaning? Did he show us how these clauses in the Constitution were considered by the Conventions, who ratified it? Did he resort to the discussions in the State Conventions? Did he compare the various parts of the instrument with each other? No, sir; he told us simply that the word "establish" meant to create; and that the whole argument turned upon the true signification of this word.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Now, said Mr. S., I am directly at issue with the Speaker, as to the meaning of this word "establish." If we go to philological authority, or common usage, it is much oftener used to signify "confirm," "adopt," "designate," than to create, construct, or build. Establish is to render certain, fixed. We speak of an "established church," or an "established religion." We do not mean a church or religion created, but one fixed, confirmed by authority. The word "establish," includes the idea of authority, when used in a legislative sense. It has been said that, to ascertain its signification, (in the clause under consideration,) we must resort to other parts of the Constitution, when the word is used in the same sense, or in relation to the same subject.

In the seventh article of the Constitution, it is said that the assent of nine States shall be sufficient for the "establishment of this Constitution." Now, this word establish was used there to mean confirmation, adoption, ratification. It was not intended to mean "creation," because the Constitution had been previously formed, and was in being; it was only to be presented to the people to be adopted and confirmed.

Again; there were other strong legislative illustrations, Mr. S. said, (though he scarcely thought this verbal criticism befitted the dignity of that House,) which would go to show this word "establish" was intended to be used by the framers of the Constitution. In the year 1775, Congress appointed a Postmaster, with power to "establish" lines of weekly posts from New England to Georgia. Now, Mr. S. said, it would not, he presumed, be contended that the Postmaster General, during the Revolutionary war, under the power to "establish posts and post lines, or routes," could have exercised or claimed the power of creating and actually making roads, against the will of the States. Then Congress had no more power over the territory or jurisdiction of the States than they had in any country in Europe. It was only meant to give the power of designating and marking out the particular roads or routes to be used as post roads; and such, no doubt, was the meaning of the framers of the Constitution in giving Congress the power to "establish post offices and post roads."

Indeed, Mr. S. said that this was their meaning, was rendered clear to his mind, beyond doubt, by the provision in the Articles of Confederation upon this subject. Under the Confederation, it never was contended, by any, that Congress could have forced their way into the States to make roads and canals. The States were, then, to be coaxed into measures, not coerced. Yet the Articles of Confederation gave to Congress the power of "establishing and regulating post offices, from one State to another, throughout the United States."

This power was transferred from the Articles of Confederation to the Constitution; and the word "establish," used in both, was to be understood in the same sense. He thought that this was conclusive.

But, Mr. S. said, he would discard all arguments arising from the literal meaning of this word "establish" and would go to a fair and just construction of the Constitution, as it was understood by its framers and the people, in relation to the extent of this power now claimed.

He laid it down as an incontrovertible rule in the construction of all written instruments, that if the meaning be clear, all the consequences, whatever they may be, were to be admitted; but, if the meaning be doubtful, then it was fairly triable by its consequences. Now, it would be conceded, he presumed, by all, that the power claimed was at least a doubtful one, and, if so, that it was fair to examine the consequences to which it would lead, by way of proving that it never was intended to be given. Let us see, said Mr. S., what these consequences are. If this power exists, it is one independent of the State Governments. It may be exercised against the consent of the States and the people. The General Government can force a way through the States—take land; make roads of any dimension; cut timber; put up gates; collect tolls; build houses; appoint keepers; punish for injuries to the roads; impose penal sanctions, &c. The jurisdiction, he said, must be either in the States or the General Government. It cannot be in the States, because, if it was, they might resist and defeat your power. It must then be in the General Government. You get the right of soil, and the right of exclusive jurisdiction. You may extinguish (and indeed must) all State authority, Legislative, Executive, and Judicial. Your jurisdiction becomes national and municipal, and precisely the same as in forts, dockyards, &c.

Now, said Mr. S., I deny that the Government of the United States can exercise jurisdiction over soil, in a national view; but in two cases. 1st. Over the District of Columbia, and such places as they may purchase by the consent of the Legislatures of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, &c. 2d. By their power of taxation. These are the only two cases under the Constitution in which the General Government can acquire land as a sovereign Power. Mr. S. said, he did not mean to go into the discussion of the question stated the other day by his colleague, (Mr. BARBOUR,) as to the power of this Government to purchase and hold land as an individual; but if this could be done, (and he would now neither admit nor deny it,) it must be held subject to the State jurisdiction. The vendor may pass the right of soil, but the territorial jurisdiction remains with the State. The lex loci rei sita, Mr. S. said, was universal, as to the reality. The General Government was as much bound to conform to the municipal laws in relation to title to land, and conveying that title, as individuals—7 Cranch, 117.] Writers upon public law tell us that one sovereign may hold land, within the territory of another sovereign; but subject to the territorial jurisdiction of the latter—[Vattel.] Now, said Mr. S., if I am right, (and I call upon those who are friendly to this bill to answer and show where I am wrong,) if this Government can only in two cases acquire right of soil and jurisdiction in a national view, what becomes of the power now claimed to make roads and canals, and to exercise Legislative, Executive, and Judicial authority, in their national, sovereign character. Besides, how would you execute this power against the consent of the State governments? You would be compelled to condemn the land and pay for it, or take it by force, and be a judge in your own case, of its value, contrary to every principle of justice and right. If you resort to writs of ad quod damnum, the juries in the respective States would fix so high a value, as to defeat the exercise of the power. But, it is said, that all that is claimed, is a right to make and preserve the road, and have a right of way; but, suppose the road is injured, how is the trespass to be punished. The State will not do it, the road is not theirs, and was made contrary to their consent. They cannot punish for a violation of Federal laws. Who is to prosecute and punish? The General Government. And for this purpose you will be forced to send into the States your judicial and ministerial officers, and to plant on these one hundred thousand miles of road, individuals who may set at naught all State law and State policy. Nor can the State governments punish for the higher offences—of murder, or any other crime committed on a road, over which the General Government have exclusive jurisdiction. Such now is the law, as to forts, dockyards, &c., and such, Mr. S. said, must be the case, if the power now claimed can be sustained. There were important reasons why the Constitution so cautiously guarded against exclusive jurisdiction, even as to forts and dockyards. It was to protect the territorial rights of the State governments. Can it be believed, that in such cases it would require the assent of a State to give jurisdiction as to a miserable fort or dockyard, and yet leave them at the mercy of this Government, in relation to this important and sweeping power? Mr. S. said, he thought not. Again, would the authors of the Federalist have viewed this power to establish roads as such a “harmless one,” unworthy of discussion, if they had supposed that it conveyed such powers as are now claimed under it. Would the able and enlightened men who opposed this Constitution in the respective State conventions, have permitted it to pass without objection, when other powers, comparatively small, were seized on, and wielded with the most gigantic power, against the adoption of the Constitution. Do you imagine, Mr. Chairman, said Mr. S., that if the whole power of internal improvement was intended to be given to this Government, by this clause, that the acuteness of such men as Patrick Henry and George Mason, would not have detected, and the thunder of their eloquence denounced it? But how was it considered? In no other light than as a harmless and unimportant power. Is it then fair to push the terms of a grant against the plain intention of the parties to it? Is it just? Is it honest? But how was this power viewed in the early stages of our Government? Only as a right to designate, adopt, and mark out, post roads. When the first law passed, after the adoption of the Constitution, what were its provisions? That all the post routes which had been established by the Postmaster, theretofore, should be confirmed. Had he made, erected, or constructed, any roads? Had he the power to do so? No, he had only designated them, and the word establish was used in reference to roads which had been designated and marked out as post routes. [Here Mr. S. read parts of the old Post Office law]

Look, said Mr. S. to the pamphlets, essays, and newspapers, of those times; to the arguments and discussions at the time the Constitution was under consideration; to the opinions expressed by its friends and foes; and see if a hint can be found, of such an interpretation as is now attempted to be given. No, sir, (save in the Convention of New York,) I think I may say, with safety, that no such thing can be found, and even there the case was supposed as going to show the evils of construction which might be resorted to under the Constitution.

There was, Mr. S. said, another and high authority against the consequences of this doctrine of the gentleman from Kentucky, (Mr. CLAY,) and that was himself. The power to make roads and canals, gives, he says, incidentally, the power to incorporate companies, to accomplish that end. In other words, the incorporation of companies may be resorted to as a mean of executing the power to make roads and canals. In 1811, the honorable Speaker was a member of the Senate of the United States, and delivered a very able argument against the bill to recharter the United States Bank. Mr. S. said, he would beg leave to read an extract from the speech, which was then before him:

“The power to charter companies, is not specified in the grant, and I contend is of a nature not transferable by implication. It is one of the most exalted attributes of sovereignty. In the exercise of this power, we have seen an East India Company created, which has carried dismay, desolation, and death throughout one of the largest portions of the world. Under the influence of this power, we have seen arise a South Sea Company and a Mississippi Company, that distracted and convulsed all Europe, and menaced a total overthrow of all credit and confidence, and universal bankruptcy. Is it to be imagined that a power so vast would have been left by the wisdom of the Constitution to doubtful inference?” “All corporations enjoy exclusive privileges. That is, the incorporators have privileges which no others possess, and if you create fifty corporations, instead of one, you have only fifty privileged bodies, instead of one. I contend that the States have the exclusive power to regulate contracts, to declare the capacities and incapacities to contract, and to provide as to the extent of responsibility of debtors to their creditors. If Congress have the power to erect an artificial body, and say it shall be endowed with the attributes of an individual, if you bestow on this object of your creation the ability to contract may you not also, in contravention of State rights, confer upon slaves, infants, and femme coverts, the ability to contract?"

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Sir, said Mr. S., I claim the benefit of this argument; and if, in 1811, we had no power to grant incorporations, have we such a power at this time? If then, it was unconstitutional, is it not so now? The Constitution cannot shift and change with circumstances and our notions of expediency. What was unconstitutional on yesterday, will be so to-day, to-morrow, and forever, until the Constitution is amended. I confess, sir, I am an infidel to this doctrine of Constitutional expediency. Let us not, said Mr. S., supply, by implication, that which the Convention dared not to express. Let us not, Mr. Chairman, I beg you, ascertain the powers of this Government, by our opinions of necessity and discretion. Let us not act the part of "Cambyses' judges, who, when their approbation was demanded by the Prince, to some illegal measure, said, 'though there was a written law, yet the Persian Kings might follow their own will and pleasure.'" Let it not be said that, with a written Constitution, we have the right to do what we please, and that the Legislative power of this Government is extending, on every occasion, the sphere of its activity, and drawing all powers into its impetuous vortex.

Mr. S. said, that this Government had gone on for forty years in exercising the power under the post office clause beneficially and satisfactorily to the people, and in the way it was intended by the wise men who formed the Constitution. The great objects (which the Speaker has so much at heart) of distributing civil, commercial, literary, and social intelligence, had been accomplished, without the assertion or assumption of the power which was now claimed. And Mr. S. said, that he saw no reason for abandoning a system which had, both in war and peace, been productive of so much benefit to the people and peace between the two Governments.

I will now proceed, said Mr. S., to the arguments urged on yesterday, by my friend from Delaware, (Mr. McLANE,) for whose judgment and opinions I entertain such high respect, that, when I differ with him upon any subject, I am induced to doubt the correctness of my own opinion, and to examine it with more than ordinary care. He had done so in the present case, and the result of his deliberate and best judgment had produced no change.

The gentleman from Delaware considered the power of making internal improvements, as resulting from that clause in the Constitution which gives to Congress authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States.

Mr. S. said that he would attempt to show that this clause gave no such power.

This power to regulate commerce, the gentleman from Delaware contends, gives, not only the authority to cut canals and make roads, but to do every thing which shall tend to facilitate and advance the commerce of the country; render it effectual, and carry it on. The object of giving this power to the General Government, he argued, was not, as had been supposed, to prevent the imposition of duties, &c., by the State governments, because the Constitution contained a direct prohibition upon the States from laying any imposts or duties on imports and exports. He contended, therefore, that the right of regulating commerce must have been given for the purposes which he supposed, or the power would be dormant and inoperative. This argument, Mr. S. said, was ingenious, but fallacious. It was true that the Constitution did contain the direct prohibition which the gentleman had alluded to, but it did not prove that the main object in giving the power to regulate commerce between the States was not to protect the States from the imposition of duties, &c., by each other.

It would be remarked, Mr. S. said, that the power to regulate commerce was an affirmative grant to the General Government, (among many others,) in the 8th section of the 1st article of the Constitution. This power was not by the express words of the grant exclusive, and therefore the States retain, for some purposes, concurrent power, as to commerce, within their own jurisdictions. To prevent, however, any difficulty as to concurrent powers between the two Governments, on the subject of duties, &c., the prohibition upon the States, as to duties, &c., was, in abundant caution, inserted. This prohibition is found in the 10th section, which contains a general negation of powers as to both Governments.

Mr. S. said, that this was the case with many other powers—take, for instance, that to "coin money," or grant "letters of marque and reprisal." These powers are given to Congress in the 8th section. Yet, the 10th section declares, that "no State shall coin money, or grant letters of marque and reprisal." It was done to show that there was no concurrent power remaining with the States, as to these particular subjects. There was nothing then, Mr. S. said, in the Constitution, which forbids the idea that this power of regulating commerce was mainly intended to prohibit the States from laying duties and fettering the commerce of the Union by improvident restrictions and State regulations. He would endeavor to show to the Committee, before he sat down, that this was the great moving consideration, in giving the power to the General Government to "regulate commerce between the States." In doing this, he said it would be necessary to have recourse to the existing circumstances under which the Constitution was formed, to the evils intended to be guarded against, and the good to be obtained. Before the adoption of the Constitution, Mr. S. said, there was a strong and deep impression of the inconveniences experienced under the Confederation. In relation to our foreign and internal commerce, innumerable obstructions were thrown in the way by the State governments. The want of concert, and clashing and dissimilar views in the States, called loudly for some remedy.

He begged leave to refer the Committee to the first proceedings of the Government, which took place upon this subject of regulating commerce. As early as the year 1778, New Jersey came forward and made a strong representation to Congress, objecting to the 6th and 9th articles of the Confederation, which gave to the States the power of regulating commerce, and urging the reasons and propriety of vesting in Congress the power of regulating the trade of the United States. This proposition was considered and rejected by a vote of two to one. In February, 1781, the subject was renewed, and again the proposition made to invest Congress with the right of regulating commerce, duties, &c., and was again rejected. In the commencement of the year 1783, a committee, consisting of Mr. Madison, Mr. Ellsworth, and Mr. Hamilton, were appointed to prepare an address to the States, pointing out the defects in the Confederation, and urging the propriety of giving to Congress the regular commerce, &c. This was done, and a very able address was presented, and adopted by Congress on the 26th April, 1783, [parts of which Mr. S. read.]

From that period till January, 1785, the subject was repeatedly before Congress, and the State governments, but nothing definite was done. In July, 1785, a committee, consisting of Messrs. Monroe, Spaight, Houston, and King, made a very able report in favor of giving Congress the power of regulating the commerce of the United States, which was considered by Congress, but not adopted, it being deemed most advisable that all propositions for perfecting the articles of Confederation should originate with the States. On the 30th November, 1785, Mr. Madison brought forward in the House of Delegates of Virginia a resolution empowering Congress to regulate trade, &c., with a preamble stating the reasons why it ought to be done, [extracts from which Mr. S. read.] This proposition was adopted; but the vote was afterwards reconsidered, and the report laid on the table. In lieu of these resolutions, one was adopted by Virginia proposing a convention from the different States to consider of measures necessary to enable Congress to regulate trade. New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Virginia, appointed commissioners, and, on the 11th September, 1785, they met at Annapolis, in Maryland. A report upon the subject of remedying the defects of the Confederation was made and adopted. In 1787, Congress recommended a convention to adopt a Federal Constitution; and in September, 1787, it was received, and submitted to the States for ratification.

These, Mr. Chairman, said Mr. S., were the proceedings which produced and led to the formation and adoption of the present Constitution of the United States; and I beg gentlemen to examine these various reports, resolutions, and proceedings, and they will be satisfied that the power now claimed to regulate commerce between the States was not intended to go further than to place all the States upon an equality in a free and uninterrupted intercourse. That this was the great and leading object of the immediate framers of the Constitution, and the understanding of the people, Mr. S. said, he would be able to satisfy the Committee by other high authority. He meant to test the doctrines now advanced by those of the enlightened advocates of the Constitution at the immediate time of its adoption. He alluded particularly to the writings and opinions of Mr. Madison and Mr. Hamilton, to whose abilities the establishment of the Constitution was much attributed. In the first volume of the Federalist, Mr. Madison says:

"The defect of power in the existing Confederacy to regulate commerce between the States, has been already pointed out by experience. It may be added, that, without this supplemental provision, the great and essential power of regulating foreign commerce would have been incomplete and ineffectual. A material object of this power was a relief of the States which export and import through other States, from the improper contributions levied on them by the latter. Were these at liberty to regulate the trade between State and State, it must be foreseen that ways would be found out to load the articles of import and export, during the passage through their jurisdiction, with duties which would fall on the makers of the latter and the consumer of the former. We may be assured, by past experience, that such a practice would be introduced by future contrivances; and both by that, and a common knowledge of human affairs, that it would nourish unceasing animosities, and not improbably terminate in serious interruptions of the public peace."

Mr. Hamilton, in the same volume, in pointing out the advantages and objects of this power, is equally strong:

"The interfering and unneighborly regulations of some States, contrary to the true spirit of the Union, have, in different instances, given just cause of umbrage and complaint to others; and it is to be feared that the examples of this nature, if not restrained by a national control, would be multiplied and extended till they became not less serious sources of animosity and discord, than injurious impediments to the intercourse between different parts of the Confederacy. The commerce of the German Empire is in continual trammels from the multiplicity of the duties which the several Princes and States exact upon the merchandises passing through their territories, by which the fine streams and navigable rivers, with which Germany is so happily watered, are rendered almost useless. Though the genius of the people of America might never permit this description to be strictly applicable to them, yet we may reasonably expect, from the gradual conflicts of State regulations, that the citizens of each would at length come to be considered and treated by the others in no better light than that of foreigners and aliens."

In the Convention of Virginia, when this clause to "regulate commerce between the States" was under consideration, Mr. Madison said:

"All agree that the General Government ought to have power for the regulation of commerce. It will be a principal object to guard against smuggling, and such other attacks on the revenue as other nations are subject to. We are now obliged not only to defend against those lawless attempts, but, from the interfering regulations of different States, with little success. There are regulations in different States which are unfavorable to the inhabitants of other States, and which militate against the revenue. New York levies money from New Jersey by her imposts. In New Jersey, instead of co-operating with New York, the Legislature favors violations on her regulations. This will not be the case when uniform regulations will be made."

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

Grayson (who was second only to Patrick Henry, in the bold stand made in Virginia against the Constitution, from fear and jealousy of the powers of the General Government, and especially those derivable by implication) said, "that he was 'willing to give the General Government the 'regulation of trade, as it would be serviceable in 'regulating the trade among the States.'" This is all that was said in the Convention of Virginia upon the subject of regulating commerce between the States.

Again, Mr. Stevenson said, the Articles of Confederation contained this term "regulate" in relation to other things. Congress had the power of "regulating" the value of coin struck by the respective State governments. The sense in which it was used here was obvious and limited. A similarity in the use of the same phrase in the two charters might, therefore, justly be considered as rendering the meaning less liable to be misconstrued in the latter instrument. If the meaning of this word "regulate," therefore, was used in a limited and restricted sense in the instrument revised and remodelled, it cannot be supposed that, when it is copied into the present Constitution, a different and more enlarged meaning ought to be attached to it. [Here, Mr. S. referred to the report in the Virginia Legislature, of 1798 and 1799, as to the rule of construction.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, said Mr. S., I appeal to every candid and unprejudiced mind, and ask, whether the motives and objects in giving this power to regulate commerce between the States were not those pointed out in the extracts and speeches which I have referred to?

If it was intended, as my friend from Delaware supposes, to give the power (under the term regulate commerce) to "facilitate," "carry on," cut canals, make roads, &c., (besides the other powers of jurisdiction, &c., which I have pointed out in the first point of my argument on the subject of roads,) would not some of the friends of the Constitution have urged them in vindication of the power, or its foes have seized on them for the purpose of objection and denunciation? Let any candid man, Mr. S. said, read the proceedings to which I have referred, and the debates in the State conventions, compare the character of the power now claimed, with others which were seized on, as strong grounds of objection, and say whether, if it had then been known or suspected that such a power was given or intended to be granted, the Constitution would have been adopted. Mr. S. said, in his own State, the Constitution was carried by a majority of only ten votes. If the rules of interpretation and construction of the present day had then existed, it would not have received, he believed, ten votes in its favor.

Surely, then, such a contemporaneous exposition of the meaning and objects of the Constitution ought not to be disregarded.

Mr. S. said that this word "regulate" was pushed, by his friend from Delaware, beyond its fair and legitimate meaning. He did not mean to quibble about words, but its meaning ought to be limited. He would illustrate by a familiar case: The Speaker of this House has power to "regulate this Hall." What is the meaning of this rule? That he shall have it kept open for ingress and regress of the members—and made comfortable for the purposes of legislation. But, can he pull down the columns, or change the shape or construction of the room without our consent? It would not be pretended. So, in the case of regulating commerce. This Government may be considered as the friendly third power to decide between the States—not to participate herself, but with the power to regulate the manner in which it shall be carried on. She stands as the umpire, to secure a free interchange upon principles of equality between the States of the South and the North, the East and the West; to insure to each an uninterrupted and unfettered intercourse; to protect each State from fraudulent and unequal prohibitions, whilst carrying on trade through the jurisdictions of one another; to prevent smuggling; regulate the conduct of seamen; establish ports; fix on places of lading and unlading, as might be most convenient for the merchant, on the one hand, and for the effectual collection of the revenue on the other. All these objects, and many others of like character, fall within the power of "regulating commerce." Again: If we have the power, under this word "regulate," to do every thing which shall facilitate commerce—if we cannot only regulate, but "carry it on," why may not the Government build ships at the expense of the nation, for the purpose of transporting commodities to and from one port to another, especially where small ports may be too poor to build vessels to transport their products? Why may we not legislate upon the subjects of exchange and promissory notes? Wholesome laws and regulations, in relation to these objects, might facilitate and aid commerce and trade between the States. Why not, too, incorporate agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial companies? These may be subservient and useful in relation to our commerce, and would tend to facilitate and foster it. But, would such powers be tolerated in this Government, or even claimed by the warmest advocates of this bill? Against this power of the General Government to make internal improvements by means of roads and canals, under any part of the Constitution, Mr. S. said, he would bring the sanction of a high name in the annals of our political history—the authority of a man whose principles had been as uniformly steadfast as republican, and whose virtues were as pure as his genius was splendid—a man who had justly been considered as the "Apostle of Liberty." It was unnecessary to say that he alluded to Thomas Jefferson. In his Message to Congress in 1806, he denies, in terms, the power in this Government

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

to execute a system of internal improvement by roads and canals, and recommends an amendment of the Constitution in this respect.

[Here Mr. S. read extracts from the Message.]

I deny, then, said Mr. S., any power in this Government, under the clause to "regulate commerce among the States," to make roads and canals in any part of this Union.

Mr. S. said he had intended to have gone at large into an examination of a third source from which this power, he knew, was claimed by some of the friends of the bill, (though not by the Speaker and the gentleman from Delaware,) and that was, the "power of unlimited appropriation of money." But he was sensible that he was trespassing too long upon the attention of the Committee, (who had so kindly attended to him throughout the discussion,) and he would, therefore, content himself with a few general remarks.

This doctrine of unlimited appropriation by this Government, of the money of the nation, was first asserted by Mr. Hamilton, whilst Secretary of the Treasury, in the year 1791. In his report of the 5th of December, 1791, he maintained that it belonged to the discretion of the National Legislature to "pronounce upon the objects which concern the general welfare, and to appropriate the money of the Union to whatever concerns the general interests of learning, of agriculture, of manufactures, and of commerce."

If, said Mr. S., you have this power of the purse unlimited, you destroy the effect of any particular enumeration of powers in the Constitution. The effect is precisely the same as if the Constitution authorized every measure. There was not a power which might not have some reference to the common defence and general welfare, nor one of any magnitude, which, in its exercise, did not embrace an appropriation of money. Any government, therefore, which possessed either the power of legislating for the public welfare, or the right of appropriating, at pleasure, the public money, was, in effect, absolute and unlimited.

Sir, said Mr. S., in our general system of political economy, having for its object the national welfare, every thing is related, immediately or remotely, to every other thing, and, consequently, a power over any one thing, if not limited by some obvious and precise affinity, may amount to a power over every other thing—ends and means may be made to change their character, at the will of legislative ingenuity, and what was intended as an end, in one case, may become means in another.

We know, from experience, how easily this can be done. The British Parliament found no difficulty, when collecting a revenue from the commerce of America, in calling it a tax for the regulation of commerce, or a regulation of trade, with an eye to tax.

It is conceded that this Government may tax without limit; but then comes the enumeration of the cases to which its powers shall extend. You may apply the money to the common defence and general welfare, but it must be in application to some particular measure, pointed out and authorized by the Constitution. Sir, the question ought to be, when money is about to be applied to any specific measure, Is it in the enumerated powers of the Constitution? or is it fairly incident to any of those enumerated? If so, it is right; if not, it is wrong. Therefore, the Constitution wisely provides that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but by appropriations of law. It is immaterial, Mr. S. said, whether unlimited powers be exercised under the name of unlimited powers, or under that of unlimited means, in carrying a limited power into execution. A government may be limited in its sovereignty, with respect to its means, as well as to its objects of power, and to give an extent to means, is to make it unlimited. And here, Mr. S. said, he would take occasion, before he concluded, to offer one or two remarks upon the subject of "implied or incidental powers," on which so much had been said. He did not deny, nor did his colleague, (Mr. BARBOUR,) as some gentlemen had supposed, that this Government did possess some powers of this character. Indeed, without them, he was willing to admit the Government could not get along. But they must be "fairly incident" to some enumerated power, given by the Constitution. It was a clear principle, Mr. S. said, of universal law, of the law of nature, nations, of the common law, and of reason, that the general grant of power carries with it the means which are necessary to the fair execution of the power. But it must be those means, and those only, which are necessary.

Vattel says: "Since a nation is obliged to preserve itself, it has a right to every thing necessary for its preservation; for the law of nature gives us a right to every thing, without which we could not fulfil an obligation; otherwise it would oblige us to do impossibilities, or rather contradict itself in prescribing a duty, and prohibiting, at the same time, the only means of fulfilling it." So, too, he tells us, that "if a man grant to one his house, and to another his garden, the only entry into which is through the house, the right of going through the house passes as an incident; for it would be absurd to give a garden to a man, into which he could not enter." Again, Vattel says: "The grant of a passage for troops includes every thing connected with the passage, and, without which, it would not be practicable, as exercising military discipline, buying provisions," &c.

There was, Mr. S. said, in these examples, an entire coincidence with the principles of the common law. In all, the incidental power is limited to what is necessary, and not to unlimited discretion and will.

The common law tells us "that, when one grants a thing, he grants also that without which the grant cannot have effect."—[Knivet's case, in Coke.] So (according to Blackstone) a right of way arises on the same principle of necessity, by force of law; as if a man grants me a piece of land in the middle of his field, he tacitly and implicitly gives me a right to come at it. And Coke

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

says that when the law giveth any thing to any one, it implicitly giveth whatever is necessary for taking or enjoying the same—it giveth “what is necessary.” It was also a principle of the common law, that the incident is to be taken, according to “a reasonable and easy sense,” and not strained to comprehend things remote, “unlikely or unusual.”

Now, said Mr. S., I contend that these instances are conclusive, to show a restricted construction of the incidental powers of the Constitution. They show what is necessary is only granted. They exclude the things that are only remotely necessary, or which may tend to the fulfilment of the grant. The rules and doctrines of the common law, Mr. S. said, ought to govern, in expounding the Constitution of the United States. We must, necessarily, resort to the common law, in expounding the Constitution. Many of its powers were given in terms only known to the common law, and its authority has been universally admitted, to a certain extent, in expounding and construing the Constitution. [Here Mr. S. referred to the report and resolutions of Virginia, in '98 and '99, and the essays by Hampden.] The Federalist, too, (in page 266 of 1st volume,) says, “that all powers indispensably necessary are given by the Constitution, though they be not expressly granted.”

“Incidental powers are defined to be powers appertaining to, or following others as more worthy or principal”—Coke, Litt., 151—means falling in along the main design.

Can this Government, then, said Mr. S., claim as “incidental,” means which are of an indefinite or paramount character? Can the Government convert and change terms as it pleases, and, under the cloak of incidental powers, make the Constitution a nose of wax, and compress or enlarge it as occasion or necessity may seem to require? Mr. S. said he hoped not. It had been said that men govern the world, and money men. Give any government the sword and the purse, and they want nothing else. Give to this Government the power to adopt and execute a great national scheme of internal improvement, and the unlimited right to appropriate money, and it would be worse than folly to suppose that any limit can be imposed on it but by legislative discretion and pleasure. In every point of view in which he had been able to consider the subject, Mr. S. said, his mind had brought him to the conclusion that Congress had no power to pass this bill, and that it ought to be rejected.

One word more, Mr. S. said, before he sat down. The friends of this bill were right in saying that it was an important measure. The precedent now to be set would hereafter be relied on by those who shall come after us. Those who succeed us will venture a little farther. One step will strengthen another. That which is now supported by example, growing old, will become an example itself. Heretofore, the warfare on the part of the National Legislature, against the rights of the States and people, had been carried on, Mr. S. said, by detachment; but now that policy was thought to work too slowly, and was, therefore, to be abandoned. We are now called on to lend our high sanction to a latitude in expounding the Constitution, which is calculated to break down all the landmarks intended by a limitation of its powers, and to substitute, for a definite connexion between means and ends, a legislative discretion, to which no practicable limit could be assigned. We are now to sweep down, at one blow, the independence and power of the State governments, in order to make this a great and splendid Government.

Sir, said Mr. S., these must be the consequences to which the doctrines of this day lead. The genius and eloquence of my friend from Delaware, and the honorable Speaker, may shed a lustre over this subject; but strip it, and all will be found to be gloomy and hopeless mischief. I call upon the Committee to pause, before they sanction this bill, and to weigh well its consequences. I do this in the name of our common country. I do it in behalf of those State Governments to which the people are so much and so deservedly attached, and which are the safeguards and ornaments of our Constitution. Sir, they stand now upon a little spot, surrounded by inundations; and as the waters are rising on every side, and undermining their foundation, let us realize the wise purposes for which this Government was formed, and become the dyke to fence out the flood.

When Mr. S. had concluded—

Mr. STORRS, of New York, said, that it might be, and probably was, true, as had been stated by the gentleman from Virginia who had just resumed his seat, (Mr. STEVENSON,) that the measure now proposed originated in local interests. It was perfectly natural that it should be so. Many great public measures of every Government may be traced to the same origin. As a Representative, however, of the State of New York, Mr. S. said, that, for one, if he had formed any just notions of her true policy, he should hardly be suspected of having brought into this debate any very great prejudice in favor of the measure. That great State has conceived, and from her own unexhausted and scarcely diminished resources; executed, for herself, those great works of internal improvement, which will elevate her to the high rank in the Union to which she has been destined by nature. She has ceased to ask extrinsic aid. If he now regarded only her separate interests or ability, the time has passed by when this measure should receive his support as a question of expediency. It was due, however, from New York, to her own character, that, on a great national measure, essential to the prosperity of the Union, no contracted views of sectional interest should govern the discharge of her duty to the nation. If he thought that any well-founded doubt of the power of Congress over this subject existed, he would have been more inclined to submit to the States, in the form of an amendment, the Constitutional question which it was supposed by some gentlemen to involve. He was now convinced, by many circumstances, and especially by the course of this discussion, that such a proposition would only tend to weaken and paralyze, if not completely to divest the Government of powers which he thought it already fairly possessed. Gentlemen had candidly avowed, that if they believed we had the power, they should oppose its exercise, as impolitic and inexpedient. It was evident that the conflicting interests and local jealousies of the country, would now defeat even a declaratory amendment, and he was satisfied, after what had passed, that it was now essential to the very preservation of the power, that Congress should act on the subject.

Mr. S. said that he did not agree with the gentleman from Virginia, who spoke yesterday, (Mr. ARCHER,) that any great danger was to be apprehended from the assumption of unauthorized powers by Congress. The tendency of the Government was not in that direction. The responsibility of this House directly to the people, and the frequency of elections, was an effectual security against any lasting or successful usurpations of power. He listened to this caution with less uneasiness when he considered that his colleague, (Mr. WOOD,) and the gentleman from Virginia, both of whom had alluded to it, represented the larger States. He rather believed that more danger might hereafter be found in an opposite influence—the jealousy of the large States—the great masses of political power which most sensibly felt the check which Congress held over their influence. It is the disposition, said Mr. S., of human nature, to submit with impatience to control, and the same uneasiness of restraint is felt in all political bodies. The small States are naturally jealous of the larger, and the large States feel the restrictions which the Constitution has imposed on their powers. I am more inclined to think, that experience has already shown, that the General Government will oftener feel the necessity of protecting itself against the large States by a rigid maintenance of its established powers. The Confederacy will not be rent assunder by any explosion here. It will rather break by the weight of its own members.

The idea that Congress possesses the power of executing a system of national improvement, is not so modern as has been supposed. The Committee has been asked why, if it had been originally proposed by the framers of the Constitution that we should have this power, has not the notion been asserted, or alluded to, in all the reports of the debates, or the newspaper discussions of those days? He could state to the Committee, that, in the Convention of New York, it was proposed, by an eminent Constitutional lawyer, to limit the exercise of such a power under one clause in the Constitution. Mr. S. read from the Debates on the Federal Constitution, in the New York Convention, the following extract:

“To the clause respecting the establishment of post offices, &c., Mr. Jones moved the following amendment: Resolved, As the opinion of this committee, that the power of Congress to establish post offices and post roads, is not to be construed to extend to the laying out, making, altering, or repairing, highways in any State, without the consent of the Legislature of such State.”

It does not appear whether the Convention had afterwards acted on this proposition; but the intention of the mover was clearly to abridge the power, and give to the States a check upon its exercise. The proposition obviously affirmed its existence in the proposed Government.

He could not promise the Committee any new views of the Constitution, but should confine his remarks, at so late an hour of the day, chiefly to a general view of the principles on which the Government was founded, and by which its powers were to be tested. It had been, in his opinion, altogether erroneous to construe the powers granted in a strict or narrow sense. No sound or safe rule of political interpretation required it. They should be largely, liberally, and beneficially, construed, in furtherance of the great national ends for which the Government was instituted. A contrary rule implied that a reasonable confidence was not to be placed in Congress. When I consider, said Mr. S., how much is expected of us, I should feel much embarrassed if I thought that we were placed here under a responsibility disproportioned to our powers. There is nothing in the nature of our political relation here, which should lead us to distrust ourselves, or induce the nation to fear that we shall transcend our just powers. We are all equally sensible of the great interest we have in preserving entire the powers of the State governments, and the force of their influence is deeply felt here. The time may come—perhaps it has been—when power may be abused here as it has been by other men: but the possibility of its abuse is no argument against its existence.

It has been said that the General Government has been vested with but few municipal powers, and from this idea, it seems to have been considered by many as a Government created for national purposes, in contradistinction to the municipal character of the States. There is no contrast of signification in these terms. It is, in truth, both. It was, indeed, created for great national purposes, but though, in some respects, federative in its structure, is strictly municipal in its whole character and operation. It is precisely in this respect that it is to be distinguished from the old confederation, which was a mere league between independent sovereignties—a general council of the States, and could not properly be called a government at all. The object of the Convention was to abolish altogether the political basis on which it was founded, and to substitute in its place a government operating directly on its citizens. There is no other apt definition of a municipal government, for the term may be most pertinently used in distinction to an alliance. The chief object of the change was not, in his opinion, as his colleague (Mr. WOOD) seemed to suppose, to vest in the new government the power of raising revenue. In that particular, indeed, the defect of the old system, in its organization and mode of operation, had been fatally felt, and this defect was a striking illustration of its total inadequacy to any national purposes. It may have been, in fact it was, one of the principal causes of revising and changing the system, but not the chief end that was expected to be attained. The plan of the new government was intended to subvert the whole system, and convert the confederacy into a national government. If this principle is distinctly and steadily kept in view, we may relieve ourselves of many fancied difficulties which otherwise press upon us in seeking for the just rule of ascertaining the extent and character of its implied powers. It is to be treated as a national government—territorial—as having a national judiciary and magistracy, enforcing obedience and extending protection directly to its subjects, creating for its citizens a common country and common political obligations, and as possessing, like all other governments, the means of effecting the ends of its existence. The alarm of usurpation had been often sounded. We have been warned against encroachments on the State governments or the people. It has been said that we claim the purse and sword. It was intended that we should have them. It had been observed in the Federalist, with peculiar truth and applicability, that the old confederation “had neither troops, treasury, or government.” The States had raised armies, the States levied money, and the States enforced obedience. These are the very powers which were designed to be transferred to us. Without these, this Government would perish from its own weakness. The power of executing the proposed scheme of national improvement, as the plan contained in the bill now before us has been termed, has been also considered as calculated to excite alarm, as leading to a violation of private right and State jurisdiction. There were many confessed powers which are calculated to give a much clearer conception of the extent of its incidental powers than this, and to excite much more alarm, if the fears of gentlemen were well founded. We are citizens of a national Government. As this Government is municipal, obedience is due, and in the duty of obedience allegiance existed, and from allegiance treason is implied. The Constitution has not created this crime in any expressed terms. It has recognised it as accessory to the sovereignty, and limited its definition and extent to particular specified acts. But it is through successive implications that the Government has acquired the power over life and death in case of treason, and yet no doubts have ever been started on this point. But it is not in the punishment of treason only that such a high power and authority is exercised. Throughout the whole system of national criminal jurisprudence—in robbery of the mail, perjury, the slave trade acts, and the laws for the preservation of neutrality, numberless instances might be given to illustrate the exercise of a like power, founded in implication purely. It is legitimate because, for the purposes of the Constitution, the life and personal liberty of its citizens are placed in subjection to the powers of the national Government, and because, in its operation, it has all the municipal characteristics of the State governments. The powers are as properly inherent, if such a term may be thus used, as the powers of the State governments. Both were created by the people.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

They had collectively vested certain portions of sovereignty in the national Government, and certain other powers in the States. Those of the national Government were enumerated, but it is not less municipal for that reason. The same argument would prove that the State governments were not municipal. Neither of them possesses the totality of sovereignty. Our powers are limited expressly, and the State governments are limited by the Constitution of the United States, and many of them by their own constitutions. As both governments are in their nature alike, the same rule of construction as to implied or incidental powers is to be applied to the powers clearly vested in either of them.

There is, said Mr. S., one clause in the Constitution, which had much puzzled all those who attempted to lay down the indefinite line between the General and State Governments. He referred to that which declared that Congress had power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers granted by the Constitution. There was no grant of power contained in this provision, nor was that its purport or intention. It was little else than mere supererogation. Had it been omitted altogether, the right of making such laws must have been perfect in the Government, or its powers could never have been executed at all. The grant of any political power whatever necessarily includes within itself the right of using the means of accomplishing the end and object of the power. It may have been inserted from abundant caution. It is well known that much difference of opinion existed in the Convention, how far, and over what objects the powers of the proposed National Government should be extended. A deep felt jealousy of State rights existed in that body. It is very reasonable to suppose that the subject of constructive or implied powers, incident to the new Government was agitated. The framers of the Constitution, who designed to give efficacy, strength, and stability to it, may have been forewarned by the course of discussion, and perhaps imagined, that at some future day, a new sect might spring up in the nation, whose doctrines might so narrow the means of the Government as to paralyze its operations, circumscribe its powers, and leave it to the mercy of the State governments. Much of the argument which has perplexed this subject has been founded in the construction of this clause, which was, in truth, merely declaratory of the general implied powers indispensable to all government and public bodies, and incidental to their very existence. I admit, said Mr. S. that it is not easy, perhaps it is impossible, to draw the line which separates the powers of the Governments. It is difficult to do this, because the nature of all government is moral, and not mathematical. The subject does not admit of being successfully or very intelligibly treated by general propositions, which are to solve all given problems. It leads directly to confusion of their powers, and involves it in a species of political metaphysics, which misleads and bewilders us. It is impossible to enumerate or define all the means which were intended to be placed in the hands of this Government, under all future exigencies, arising out of the extension of the country, its multiplied relations, and the future growth and expansion of its interests. The public library would not contain the volumes which should define these means. No human foresight could judge of them. It was submitted to the wisdom and discretion of Congress to appropriate them to its aid, as future circumstances and the national prosperity required. These, said Mr. S. are the views of the nature of this Government, which he had been taught from early life, and which all his reflection and limited experience had confirmed. They were not peculiar to him, and contained nothing new—but he had deemed it necessary to consider them more largely than he otherwise should, had not the debate, in some instances, been led away from what were, in his opinion, the first principles of the Government. Considering this Government, then, as municipal, and having the power of adapting its means to the ends of its institution, it might be useful to trace the legitimate exercise of its powers, that its capacities may be more fully developed and understood. It has the power to coin money. Under this faculty, it may purchase (he believed it had done so at Philadelphia) a site for the establishment of a mint. It might, undoubtedly, rent a house for that purpose, and if its capacity to take a leasehold interest was admitted, it might take the freehold or fee of the land. By the power of creating a national judiciary, it might, in the fair exercise of it, purchase and hold sites for courthouses. In the administration of criminal jurisprudence, it may erect penitentiaries—for the collection of revenue, it has become the proprietor of custom-house establishments, which have been erected by the Government. These have all been practical constructions, under these powers, ever since the organization of the Government, and under all Administrations. They had never been denied, and it is too late to question them. It is not useful to inquire or necessary to determine whether the jurisdiction of the United States, over such places, was exclusive for all purposes, so as to exempt them from all municipal jurisdiction of the States, nor did he consider that it proved any thing, if settled either way. He stated these cases as illustrations of the well established and undeniable power of the Government, in its choice of means for the promotion of the great ends of the Government. If we could, constitutionally, purchase sites for all these objects, it must be very difficult to demonstrate, by any sound argument, that we could not purchase a site and erect a post office, or, in other words, establish a post office. And yet the arguments which have been founded on the fanciful definitions of this word "establish," to refute our power of constructing post roads, would equally prove that we cannot erect post offices, as we may courthouses or penitentiaries, and as we have done custom-houses. The power of establishing post offices and post roads is a general grant of power over the transportation of the mail, and includes all the means which are adapted to that end, and all power necessary to effect it.

It is fair and proper in investigating the means of the Government to look to the preamble of the Constitution, not as containing any grant of powers, but as indicating the great ends to be promoted and secured by its creation. It was intended that the exercise of its powers should be efficacious for those ends, and construed in reference to them—to be made subservient in their exercise to the "perfection of the Union," and the "promotion of the general welfare and defence." Certain subjects have for these objects been placed under the sovereignty of Congress. The regulation of foreign commerce, and commerce among the States, is one of these. In the execution of this power, we are bound to look to the promotion of the security, prosperity, and extension of commerce. It is confided to us for that purpose, because this Government is best adapted to promote that great national interest. It is a power, for that end, over the navigable waters of the United States. Thus, in the Chesapeake or Amboy bay, the Hudson or Delaware rivers, we have this power, in preference to the States adjoining these waters. There is no residuum left of a political nature in those States. My colleague (Mr. Woon) considered that the sole powers of Congress over commerce is to lay duties and collect them, and that the whole power was exhausted on the tariff and revenue laws; that the authority to build lighthouses belonged to the collection of revenue, and not to the power of regulating commerce. If this were all so, then the power to regulate commerce is not, in fact, a distinct power, and its enumeration as a specific, primary power, was nugatory and senseless. It might have been altogether omitted, and was already included in the power previously expressed and granted, and was mere tautology. He differed altogether from such a construction of this or any other clause. The Constitution was designed to vest the sovereignty over this subject in Congress as a municipal government. The language of all these grants of power imported that sense, and no other. Thus, Congress has power to regulate the value of coin; to regulate commerce; to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces. All these phrases import that the subject-matters of these grants was to be under the sovereignty of Congress, for the national objects of the Government. Congress have, in the exercise of its power over foreign and domestic commerce, treated them in that sense, and executed them for those ends. In what construction but this was the embargo—the non-intercourse system—all your prohibitory laws, and especially the late navigation acts, founded? Do gentlemen imagine that the nature of these can be tortured into custom-house regulations? The Old Congress never understood that, when it was proposed to give a like power over commerce to that body, it was to be treated as a revenue power merely. The present Executive, in his report on that proposition, on the 15th of February, 1785, considered it, with great justice, as to be exercised for great national purposes. After detailing the evils and inconveniences of the distribution of this power among the States, the report adds:

"But, if they act as a nation, the prospect is more

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

favorable to them. The particular interest of every State will then be brought forward, and receive a Federal support. Happily for them, no measures can be taken to promote the interests of either, which will not equally promote that of the whole. If their commerce is laid under injurious restrictions in foreign parts, by going hand in hand in confidence together, by wise and equitable regulations, they will more easily sustain the inconveniences, or remedy the evil. If they wish to cement the Union by the strongest ties of interest and affection; if they wish to promote its strength and grandeur, founded upon that of each individual State, every consideration of local, as well as of Federal policy, urges them to adopt the recommendation," &c.

These are enlightened views of the system, and a just commentary on the power in question.

The erection of lighthouses, beacons, and buoys, may indirectly promote the security of revenue, but it never appertained strictly to its mere collection. All these exertions of power have been founded on the duty of Government to protect, foster, and promote the prosperity and security of the national interests, which have been confided to the sovereignty of Congress, and made subordinate to its legislative power and supremacy. In the exercise of this power of regulating commerce, the Government exerts a supervisory power over the conduct of its citizens, prescribes the places where, the time when, and how, their commerce shall be carried on, in what articles they may trade, and when all trade shall cease. The erection of the sea-wall on the Eastern coast, or a break-water at the mouth of the Delaware, recommended by the Executive, is only legitimately done under this construction of our powers. What has been done for this great end of the Government on the margin of the ocean, may, by the same rule of interpretation, be done on the land. Our power is not bounded by the sea-shore. Having the jurisdiction over the waters of the Union, and the sovereignty over trade, for the promotion of the national commercial prosperity, we may as constitutionally appropriate the public funds in improving the natural means and resources of the country for this great and beneficent end. No one would contend that such a system of improvement was exclusively in the power of Congress, nor does it interfere at all with the power or jurisdiction of the States. Though the power of regulating commerce should be admitted to be exclusively in Congress, yet the means of the General and State Governments might be concurrently used for the different ends of their creation. The punishment of forgery, and counterfeiting the public securities, or coin, or robbery of the mail, are concurrently exercised over the same acts and person. He would not say that the States also may not erect lighthouses, beacons, and buoys. There is a vast class of like powers which are intermediate and common to both sovereignties. Mr. S. said, that he should not engage in any minute philological discussion of the words used by those who framed the Constitution in its various grants of power. They were to be understood in a general political sense, and not to be hunted for in dictionaries. Much had been said of the word establish, as used in the clause relating to post offices and post roads. Another clause authorized Congress to establish a Supreme Court; another, to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court. He understood all these in the same sense. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. STEVENSON) seemed to suppose that the construction which had been given to the word establish by those who denied our power on this subject, received much aid from its use in the clause which declared that the ratification of nine States should be sufficient for the "establishment" of the Constitution, and asked us if this ratification did not succeed its actual creation? and if the word establishment would here bear the sense which the friends of this power maintain? Mr. S. said, that it did bear that sense, and no other. The paper or parchment may have existed, but the political creation of the Constitution was only complete when such a ratification was perfected. The words, and sentences, and paragraphs, had been framed, but the soul and vitality had not been infused into it. It had no more life and existence than the bare letters of the alphabet. Much has also been said of the word "regulate," as used in the Constitution. In relation to commerce, which includes a great complexity of interests and relations, the word was, for this reason, subject to much criticism. But to apply it to a subject of more simplicity—suppose, said Mr. S., that the Constitution had conferred on Congress a power to regulate the coin. Had it been necessary, for the sake of uniformity in value, or a common standard, that Congress should have established a Mint and actually coined money, to effect this end, would it hardly admit of denial, that they might have attained that object by such means?

Mr. S. said, that he should not detain the Committee by any argument to prove the power of Congress to construct such roads or canals as were necessary to the defence of the country. He could add nothing, in his opinion, more conclusive than what had been already stated by other gentlemen. The gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. ARCHER,) admits that we have such a power for that end; but, that his measure is, or may be, unconstitutional, because we have not that end in view. Though I cannot consent that the constitutionality of any measure is to be tried by this rule, or brought to any test but its actual provisions, yet it is not admitted, that, if the bill is Constitutional on its face, any collateral advantages may not fairly be taken into consideration. There were many acts of Congress, confessedly Constitutional, which, if judged by a rule so severe, must be condemned. The power to raise revenue by imposts, admits of no debate; and yet the preamble of the first act ever passed under this power of Congress, recites, as one of its chief objects, the protection and encouragement of manufactures. Under the power of making war, and the duty of providing for the public defence, Congress have for years exercised all the powers contained in the bill before us. At Harper's Ferry, they have purchased land; erected buildings for the manufacture of arms; constructed canals for hydraulic works; and done every act which a State might do, for all such purposes; and it would be extraordinary, indeed, if, while the States might construct roads or canals for their separate defence, the same power should be denied to Congress which is expressly charged with the war-making power, and the defence of all the States. If all which we have done at Harper's Ferry, has been done constitutionally, (and it has never yet been debated or questioned,) he hoped that gentlemen would specify and define the point where the operations of the Government must be constitutionally arrested. If we may, by these means, provide the ingredients of defence, can we not, by the same means, facilitate the movements of an army? Or have we merely power to mould the atoms, but not the mass: to perfect the parts, but not the whole? By this course of argument, we are forbidden to reach the end directly, but must approach it circuitously, through some narrow, tortuous path. We may give an incipient motion to the particles of this great system, but leave its operation to accident or fatalism.

H. OF R.

Navy Peace Establishment.

JANUARY, 1824.

He would detain the Committee no longer. It would be an ungracious tax on their time and patience, at so late a period of the debate, to enter into a minute examination of the subject. He had risen only to express his general views of the question, and, being well satisfied that the power was vested in Congress, should support the measure.

The Committee then rose, and the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, January 30.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, who were instructed "to inquire into the expediency of repealing the 25th section of the act to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States, or so to modify the same, that the writ of error, therein provided for, may be awarded to either party, and without reference to the manner in which the question shall have been decided," reported, that it is not expedient to repeal the said section, nor to modify it in the manner proposed; which report was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the same committee, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to alter the times of holding the Circuit Court of the United States for the district of South Carolina; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of North Carolina, from the Committee of Claims, made a report on the petition of Joseph Smith, of Alexandria, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the same committee, also made a report on the petition of Stephen Brace, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to-morrow.

Mr. McLANE, of Delaware, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making appropriations for certain fortifications of the United States, for the year 1824; which was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the whole House to which is committed the bill making appropriations for the Navy of the United States, for the year 1824.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made a report on the petition of Malachi Burns, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which bill was read twice, and committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The resolution from the Senate, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as it respects the election of President of the United States, was read twice, and committed to the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union.

Bills from the Senate, of the following titles:

1st. An act confirming the claims of the heirs of Nicholas Baudin, and the heirs of Joseph Chastang, to certain tracts of land;

2d. An act for the relief of the president, directors, and company, of the Merchants' Bank in Newport, Rhode Island;

3d. An act for the relief of Hanson Kelly, were respectively read, and referred—the 1st to the Committee on Private Land Claims; 2d to the Committee of Ways and Means; and the 3d to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. TRACY laid the following resolution on the table for consideration on to-morrow:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House what purchases of estate, of any description, by virtue of sales on execution, have been made, on behalf of the United States; also, what estate has been acquired, in any manner, by arrangements with, or assignments from, debtors to the United States, what sums have been paid or allowed on account of said purchases and acquisitions, severally, what charges have accrued, and what income has been derived therefrom; who are the several agents, who now have, or who heretofore have had, the care of said estate, and what compensation has been allowed to them, respectively, for their services.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles, viz: An act for the relief of Hanson Kelly; an act for the relief of the President, Directors, and Company, of the Merchants' Bank in Newport, Rhode Island; and an act for confirming the claims of the heirs of Nicholas Baudin, and the heirs of Joseph Chastang, to certain tracts of land. The Senate have also passed a joint resolution, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as it respects the election of President of the United States, in which three last-mentioned bills and resolution, they ask the concurrence of this House.

NAVY PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

A Message was received from the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 15th of December last, requesting the President of the United States "to communicate a plan for a Peace Establishment of the Navy of

JANUARY, 1824.

Navy Peace Establishment.

H. OF R.

the United States," I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of the Navy, which contains the plan required.

In presenting this plan to the consideration of Congress, I avail myself of the occasion to make some remarks on it, which the importance of the subject requires, and experience justifies.

If a system of universal and permanent peace could be established; or, if, in war, the belligerent parties would respect the rights of neutral Powers, we should have no occasion for a navy or an army. The expense and dangers of such establishments might be avoided. The history of all ages proves that this cannot be presumed; on the contrary, that at least one half of every century, in ancient as well as modern times, has been consumed in wars, and often of the most general and desolating character. Nor is there any cause to infer, if we examine the condition of the nations with which we have the most intercourse and strongest political relations, that we shall, in future, be exempt from that calamity, within any period, to which a rational calculation may be extended. And as to the rights of neutral Powers, it is sufficient to appeal to our own experience to demonstrate how little regard will be paid to them, whenever they come in conflict with the interest of the Powers at war, while we rely on the justice of our cause and on argument alone. The amount of the property of our fellow-citizens, which was seized and confiscated, or destroyed, by the belligerent parties, in the wars of the French revolution, and of those which followed, before we became a party to the war, is almost incalculable.

The whole movement of our Government, from the establishment of our independence, has been guided by a sacred regard for peace. Situated, as we are, in the new hemisphere; distant from Europe, and unconnected with its affairs; blessed with the happiest Government on earth, and having no objects of ambition to gratify; the United States have steadily cultivated the relations of amity with every Power. And if, in any European wars, a respect for our rights might be relied on, it was undoubtedly in those to which I have adverted. The conflict being vital, the force being nearly equally balanced, and the result uncertain, each party had the strongest motives of interest to cultivate our good will, lest we might be thrown into the opposite scale. Powerful as this consideration usually is, it was nevertheless utterly disregarded, in almost every stage of, and by every party to, those wars. To these encroachments and injuries, our regard for peace was finally forced to yield.

In the war to which at length we became a party, our whole coast, from St. Croix to the Mississippi, was either invaded or menaced with invasion; and in many parts, with a strong, imposing force, both land and naval. In those parts where the population was most dense, the pressure was comparatively light; but there was scarcely a harbor or city, on any of our great inlets, which could be considered secure. New York and Philadelphia were eminently exposed, the then existing works not being sufficient for their protection. The same remark is applicable, in a certain extent, to the cities eastward of the former; and as to the condition of the whole country southward of the latter, the events which marked the war are too recent to require detail. Our armies and navy signalized themselves in every quarter where they had occasion to meet their gallant foe, and the militia voluntarily flew to their aid, with a patriotism, and fought with a bravery, which exalted the reputation of their Government and country, and which did them the highest honor. In whatever direction the enemy chose to move with their squadrons and to land their troops, our fortifications, where any existed, presented but little obstacle to them. They passed those works without difficulty. Their squadrons, in fact, annoyed our whole coast, not of the sea only, but every bay and great river throughout its whole extent. In entering those inlets and sailing up them with a small force, the effect was disastrous, since it never failed to draw out the whole population on each side, and to keep it in the field while the squadron remained there. The expense attending this species of defence, with the exposure of the inhabitants, and the waste of property, may readily be conceived.

The occurrences which preceded the war, and those which attended it, were alike replete with useful instruction as to our future policy. Those which mark the first epoch, demonstrate clearly, that, in the wars of other Powers, we can rely only on force for the protection of our neutral rights. Those of the second demonstrate, with equal certainty, that, in any war in which we may be engaged hereafter, with a strong naval Power, the expense, waste, and other calamities, attending it, considering the vast extent of our maritime frontier, cannot fail, unless it be defended by adequate fortifications and a suitable naval force, to correspond with those which were experienced in the late war.

Two great objects are therefore to be regarded in the establishment of an adequate naval force: The first, to prevent war, so far as it may be practicable; the second, to diminish its calamities, when it may be inevitable. Hence, the subject of defence becomes intimately connected, in all its parts, in war and in peace, for the land and at sea. No Government will be disposed, in its wars with other Powers, to violate our rights, if it knows we have the means, are prepared, and resolved, to defend them. The motive will also be diminished, if it knows that our defences by land are so well planned and executed, that an invasion of our coast cannot be productive of the evils to which we have heretofore been exposed.

It was under a thorough conviction of these truths, derived from the admonitions of the late war, that Congress, as early as the year 1816, during the term of my enlightened and virtuous predecessor, under whom the war had been declared, prosecuted, and terminated, digested, and made provision for, the defence of our country, and support of its rights, in peace as well as in war, by acts, which authorized and enjoined the augmentation of our Navy, to a prescribed limit, and the construction of suitable fortifications throughout the whole extent of our maritime frontier, and wherever else they might be deemed necessary. It is to the execution of these works, both land and naval, and under a thorough conviction that by hastening their completion I should render the best service to my country, and give the most effectual support to our free republican system of Government that my humble faculties would admit of, that I have devoted so much of my time and labor to this great system of national policy, since I came into this office, and shall continue to do it, until my retirement from it, at the end of your next session.

The Navy is the arm from which our Government will always derive most aid in support of our neutral rights. Every Power engaged in war will know the strength of our naval force, the number of our ships of each class, their condition, and the promptitude with which we may bring them into service, and will pay due consideration to that argument. Justice will always have great weight in the Cabinets of Europe; but, in long and destructive wars, exigencies often occur which press so vitally on them, that, unless the argument of force is brought to its aid, it will be disregarded. Our land forces will always perform their duty in the event of war; but they must perform it on the land. Our Navy is the arm which must be principally relied on for the annoyance of the commerce of the enemy, and for the protection of our own; and also, by co-operation with the land forces, for the defence of the country. Capable of moving in any and every direction, it possesses the faculty, even when remote from our coast, of extending its aid to every interest on which the security and welfare of our Union depend. Annoying the commerce of the enemy, and menacing, in turn, its coast, provided the force on each side is nearly equally balanced, it will draw its squadrons from our own; and, in case of invasion by a powerful adversary, by a land and naval force, which is always to be anticipated, and ought to be provided against, our Navy may, by like co-operation with our land forces, render essential aid in protecting our interior from incursion and depredation.

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

The great object, in the event of war, is to stop the enemy at the coast. If this is done, our cities, and whole interior, will be secure. For the accomplishment of this object, our fortifications must be principally relied on. By placing strong works near the mouths of our great inlets, in such positions as to command the entrances into them, as may be done in many instances, it will be difficult, if not impossible, for ships to pass them, especially if other precautions, and particularly that of steam-batteries, are resorted to, in their aid. In the wars between other Powers, into which we may be drawn, in support of our neutral rights, it cannot be doubted that this defence would be adequate to the purpose intended by it; nor can it be doubted that the knowledge that such works existed, would form a strong motive, with any Power, not to invade our rights, and thereby contribute essentially to prevent war. There are, it is admitted, some entrances into our interior, which are of such vast extent, that it would be utterly impossible for any works, however, extensive, or well posted, to command them. Of this class, the Chesapeake Bay, which is an arm of the sea, may be given as an example. But, in my judgment, even this bay may be defended against any Power with whom we may be involved in war as a third party, in the defence of our neutral rights. By erecting strong works at the mouth of James river, on both sides, near the Capes, as we are now doing, and at Old Point Comfort and the Rip Raps, and connecting those works together by chains, whenever the enemy's force appeared, placing in the rear some large ships and steam-batteries, the passage up the river would be rendered impracticable. This guard would also tend to protect the whole country bordering on the bay, and rivers emptying into it; as the hazard would be too great for the enemy, however strong his naval force, to ascend the bay, and leave such a naval force behind; since, in the event of a storm, whereby his vessels might be separated, or of a calm, the ships and steam-batteries, behind the works, might rush forth and destroy them. It could only be in the event of an invasion by a great Power, or a combination of several Powers, and by land as well as by naval forces, that those works could be carried; and, even then, they could not fail to retard the movement of the enemy into the country, and to give time for the collection of our regular troops, militia, and volunteers, to that point, and thereby contribute essentially to his ultimate defeat and expulsion from our territory.

Under a strong impression, that a Peace Establishment of our Navy is connected with the possible event of war, and that the naval force intended for either state, however small it may be, is connected with the general system of public defence, I have thought it proper, in communicating this report, to submit these remarks on the whole subject.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, January 30, 1824.

The Message was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SURVEYS FOR ROADS AND CANALS.

The House then again resolved into a Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Foor in the Chair,) on the bill to provide surveys for roads and canals.

Mr. RANDOLPH, of Virginia, rose. He began by saying, that he very much feared that the indulgence extended to him by the Committee, a few days since, might induce them to think that he was, thereby, emboldened to throw himself upon their attention more frequently than was seemly or befitting, and that he should, on too many occasions, offer to their consideration the crude conceptions of his very feeble understanding. But, said he, I can, with the utmost sincerity, assure the Committee that they may lay aside all alarm on that subject; for I do not foresee, at this time, any further occasion, at the present session, when it will be necessary for me to trespass on their attention. I shall not again, unless some very unexpected case should arise, arouse in their breasts the feeling which such a trespass is well calculated to inspire.

During a not very short course of public life, Mr. R. said, he did not know that it ever had been his fortune to rise under as much embarrassment, or to address the House with as much repugnance, as he now felt. That repugnance, in part, grew out of the necessity that existed for his taking some notice, in the course of his observations, of the argument, if argument it might be called, of an honorable member of this House from Kentucky. And, although, said Mr. R., I have not the honor to know, personally, or even by name, a large portion of the members of this House, it is not necessary for me to indicate the cause of that repugnance. But this I may venture to promise the Committee, that, in my notice of the argument of that member, I shall show at least as much deference to it as he showed to the Message of the President of the United States of America, on returning a bill of a nature analogous to that now before us—I say at least as much—I should regret if not more. With the argument of the President, however, Mr. R. said, he had nothing to do—he washed his hands of it—and would leave it to the triumph, the clemency, the mercy, of the honorable gentleman of Kentucky—if, indeed, to use his own language, amid the mass of words in which it was enveloped, he had been able to find it. His purpose, in regard to the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky, was to show that it lies in the compass of a nut-shell—that it turns on the meaning of one of the plainest words in the English language. He was happy to be able to agree with that gentleman in at least one particular, to wit: in the estimate the gentleman had formed of his own powers as a grammarian, philologist, and critic—particularly, as those powers had been displayed in the dissertation with which he had favored the Committee, on the interpretation of the word establish.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

"Congress," says the Constitution, "shall have power to establish (ergo, says the gentleman, Congress shall have power to construct!) post roads."

One would suppose, said Mr. R., that, if any thing could be considered as settled by precedent in legislation, the meaning of the words of the Constitution must, before this time, have been settled, by the uniform sense in which that power has been exercised, from the commencement of the Government to the present time. What is the fact? Your statute book is loaded with acts for the "establishment" of post roads—and the Postmaster General is besieged with petitions for the "establishment" of post offices. And yet, we are now gravely debating on what the word "establish" shall be held to mean! A curious predicament we are placed in—precisely the reverse of that of Moliere's citizen turned gentleman, who discovered, to his great surprise, that he had been talking "prose" all his life long without knowing it—a common case—it is just so with all prozers, and I hope I may not exemplify it in this instance. But, sir, we have been, for five-and-thirty years, establishing post roads, under the delusion that we were exercising a power specially conferred upon us by the Constitution, while we were, according to the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky, actually committing treason, by refusing, for so long a time, to carry into effect that very article of the Constitution!

To forbear the exercise of a power vested in us for the public good, not merely for our own aggrandizement, is, according to the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky, treachery to the Constitution! I, then, said Mr. R., must have commenced my public life in treason, and in treason am I doomed to end it. One of the first votes that I ever had the honor to give, in this House, was a vote against the establishment, if gentlemen please, of a uniform system of bankruptcy—a power as unquestionably given to Congress, by the Constitution, as the power to lay a direct tax. But, sir, my treason did not end there. About two years after the establishment of this uniform system of bankruptcy, I was particeps criminis, with almost the unanimous voice of this House, in committing another act of treachery in repealing it; and Mr. Jefferson, the President of the United States, in the commencement of his career, consummated the treason by putting his signature to the act of repeal.

Miserable, indeed, would be the condition of every free people, if, in expounding the charter of their liberties, it were necessary to go back to the Anglo-Saxon, to Junius and Skinner, and other black letter etymologists. Not, sir, that I am very skilful in language: although I have learned from a certain Curate of Brentford, whose name will survive when the whole contemporaneous bench of bishops shall be buried in oblivion, that words—the counters of wise men, the money of fools—that it is by the dextrous cutting and shuffling of this pack that is derived one-half of the chicanery, and more than one-half of the profits, of the most lucrative profession in the world—and, sir, by this dextrous exchanging and substituting of words, we shall not be the first nation in the world which has been cajoled, if we are to be cajoled, out of our rights and liberties.

In the course of the observations which the gentleman from Kentucky saw fit to submit to the Committee, were some pathetic ejaculations on the subject of the sufferings of our brethren of the West. Sir, our brethren of the West have suffered, as our brethren throughout the United States, from the same cause, although with them the cause exists in an aggravated degree—from the acts of those to whom they have confided the power of legislation; by a departure—and we have all suffered from it—I hope no gentleman will understand me as wishing to make any invidious comparisons between different quarters of our country—by a departure from the industry, the simplicity, the economy, and the frugality of our ancestors. They have suffered from a greediness of gain, that has grasped at the shadow while it has lost the substance—from habits of indolence, of profusion, of extravagance—from an apathy of foreign manners, and of foreign fashions—from a miserable attempt at the shabby genteel, which only serves to make our poverty more conspicuous. The way to remedy this state of suffering is to return to those habits of labor and industry from which we have thus departed.

But, said Mr. R., we have been asked, if, by some convulsion of nature, this Government should be suddenly destroyed, and should pass away, "like the baseless fabric of a vision, and leave not a rack behind," what monument would remain of the benefits derived from it in the West—in other words, what have we done for the West? Sir, let me reverse the question. What have we not done for the West? Do gentlemen want monuments? Unless the art of printing should be lost, posterity will find them in your statute books, and in the journals of this House. They may find them in Indian treaties for the extinguishment of title to lands—in grants of land, the effects of which begin now to be felt in Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee, as they have long been severely felt in Maryland, Carolina, and Virginia; they will find them in laws granting every facility for the nominal payment—and, he might also say, for the spunging, of the debts due this Government, by purchasers of the public lands—in the grants, which cannot be found in the older States, for the establishment of schools, and for other great objects of public concernment, for which nothing has been given to the States of the East. In a word, they would find them in the millions which this nation has disbursed, and is now disbursing, for the acquisition of the navigation of the Mississippi, and for the purchase of Louisiana. If these be nothing, said Mr. R., then indeed we have done nothing for the West. It is true, sir, that these things were done when the names of more than one who now figure on this floor, had not been heard of out of their own parish. In a word, without speaking this in any invidious spirit, without the remotest intention of twitting our Western brethren with what we have done for them, I have stated some of the benefits conferred on the West, for the purpose of repressing the spirit of discontent, which, beginning at home, never fails to lay hold upon any external object with which it meets, as an excuse for complaining. I will not add, Mr. Chairman—from Washington to Milledgeville—for this part of the country, what has been done?

With these few remarks, continued Mr. R., permit me now to recall the attention of the Committee to the original design of this Government. It grew out of the necessity, indispensable and unavoidable, in the circumstances of this country, of some general power, capable of regulating foreign commerce. Sir, I am old enough to remember the origin of this Government; and, though I was too young to participate in the transactions of that day, I have a perfect recollection of what was public sentiment on the subject. And I repeat, without fear of contradiction, that the proximate, as well as the remote cause of the existence of the Federal Government, was, the regulation of foreign commerce. Not to particularize all the difficulties which grew out of the conflicting laws of the States, Mr. R. referred to but one, arising from Virginia taxing an article which Maryland then made duty-free—and to that very policy, said he, may be attributed, in a great degree, the rapid growth and prosperity of the town of Baltimore. If the old Congress had possessed the power of laying a duty of ten per cent. ad valorem on imports, this Constitution would never have been called into existence.

But, we are told that, along with the regulation of foreign commerce, the States have yielded to the General Government, in as broad terms, the regulation of domestic commerce—I mean, said Mr. R., the commerce among the several States, and that the same power is possessed by Congress over the one as over the other. It is rather unfortunate for this argument, that, if it applies to the extent to which the power to regulate foreign commerce has been carried by Congress, they may prohibit altogether this domestic commerce, as they have heretofore, under the other power, prohibited foreign commerce.

But why put extreme cases? This Government cannot go on one day without a mutual understanding and deference between the State and General Governments. This Government is the breath of the nostrils of the States. Gentlemen may say what they please of the preamble to the Constitution; but this Constitution is not the work of the amalgamated population of the then existing confederacy, but the offspring of the States; and however high we may carry our heads, and strut and fret our hour, “dressed in a little brief authority,” it is in the power of the States to extinguish this Government at a blow. They have only to refuse to send members to the other branch of the Legislature, or to appoint Electors of President and Vice President, and the thing is done. I hope gentlemen will not understand me as seeking for reflections of this kind—but, like Falstaff’s rebellion—I mean Worcester’s rebellion, they lay in my way, and I found them.

But, we are asked; what if little Delaware should erect her back, or New Jersey, and should undertake to stop the transportation of the United States mail? It would be something very like the attempt virtually made by another State during the late war, or an attempt to stop the transit of the United States troops through the territory of a State. And this brings me to another branch of the subject, on which, in my discursive way, I mean to touch. I recollect once to have heard, from a gentleman of Kentucky, the power to re-charter the old Bank of the United States called a “vagrant power,” seeking through the different clauses of the Constitution where to fix itself; but, like a man in Kentucky seeking for his land, found the ground shingled over with warrants! Now, said Mr. R., this vagrant power, (of making roads and canals,) after being whipped from parish to parish, is at last seeking a settlement under the war-making power. And under this power to make war, sir, what may we not do? Quarter troops upon you; burn your house, sir, or mine; burn your own ships and your navy yards, that the enemy may not have the pleasure of doing it. But would any man contend that, in time of peace, all the incidents to the war-making power take effect? I have always understood, said Mr. R., that inter arma silent leges—and a man might as well bring an action against the hero of New Orleans—yes, sir, the hero of New Orleans, if I may call him so—by an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, when he marched down to the beach, and gave the enemy a foretaste of what he gave them thereafter—a man might as well do that, as, in time of peace, sustain the power of the same hero—not, sir, that I impute the assumption of it to him—of doing all the things which he might rightfully do in a time of war. When, Mr. R. said, he considered this war-making power, and the money-raising power, and suffered himself to reflect on the length to which they go, he felt ready to acknowledge that, in yielding these, the States have yielded every thing. The last words of Patrick Henry on this subject, though uttered five-and-twenty years ago, were now ringing in his ears. If gentlemen will come fairly out, said Mr. R., and tell us, you have given us the power of the purse and of the sword, and these two enable us to take whatever else we may want, we shall understand them. Thank God, however, that has not yet become the construction of the Constitution.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

I am sorry to say,—because I should be the last man in the world to disturb the repose of a venerable man, to whom I wish a quiet end of his honorable life—that all the difficulties under which we have labored and now labor on this subject have grown out of a fatal admission by one of the late Presidents of the United States—an admission which runs counter to the tenor of his whole political life, and is expressly contradicted by one of the most luminous and able State papers that ever was written—an admission which gave a sanction to the principle that this Government had the power to charter the present colossal Bank of the United States. Sir, said Mr. R., that act, and one other which I will not name, bring forcibly home to my mind a train of melancholy reflections on the miserable state of our mortal being:

“In life’s last scenes, what prodigies surprise!

Fears of the brave, and follies of the wise.

From Marlborough’s eyes the streams of dotage flow,
And Swift expires a driv’ler and a show.”

Such is the state of the case, sir. It is miserable to think of it—and we have nothing left to us but to weep over it.

We have been told, sir, by my friend from New Jersey, over the way, that the framers of the Constitution foresaw the raising up of some new sects, which were to construe the powers of the Government differently from their intention; and, therefore, the clause granting a general power to make all laws that might be necessary and proper to carry the granted powers into effect, was inserted in that Constitution. Yes, said Mr. R., such a sect did arise some twenty odd years ago—and, unfortunately, I had the honor to be a member of that church. From the commencement of the Government to this day, differences have arisen between the two great parties in this nation—one consisting of the disciples of Mr. Hamilton, the Secretary of the Treasury, and another party who believed that, in their construction of the Constitution, those to whom they opposed themselves exceeded the just limit of its legitimate authority—and Mr. R. prayed gentlemen to take into their most serious consideration the fact that, on this very question of construction, this sect, which the framers of the Constitution foresaw might arise, did arise in their midst, and put down the construction of the Constitution according to the Hamiltonian version. But did we at that day dream, said Mr. R., that a new sect would arise after them, which would so far transcend Alexander Hamilton and his disciples, as they out-went Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and John Taylor, of Caroline? This is the deplorable fact: such is now the actual state of things in this land; and it is not a subject so much of demonstration as it is self-evident—it speaks to the senses, so that every one may understand it. On the occasion of that great strife, Mr. Jefferson, then Vice President of the United States, drew, and sent to Kentucky, to be moved by the eminent and worthy man who was afterwards his Attorney General, those celebrated resolutions, generally called the Kentucky Resolutions. These were followed by another set of resolutions, which were called John Taylor’s Resolutions, but which we now, by the public declaration of Mr. Taylor, under his own hand, know were drawn up by Mr. Madison. These gave rise to that very able and masterly Report of the Massachusetts General Court, sustaining the constitutionality of the Alien and Sedition laws. Yes, sir, it was a very able report—and here permit me to say I have not heard a shadow of an argument on this floor—and I do not expect to hear it, because it is unsusceptible of it—as forcible, as strong, in support of the power now claimed for this House, as is the argument of the Legislature of Massachusetts in support of the Alien and Sedition laws—and I say that if you can enact this bill, you can re-enact the Alien and Sedition laws—not, sir, that I am at all afraid of their re-enactment now—they who burnt their fingers with the Sedition law have learnt lessons from experience, and so have those who have had their example before their eyes. For, we learn from high authority here, that, notwithstanding the representations of “venal and hireling presses” to the contrary, the country is in great distress—by which we are to understand that means have been taken to use the press here, like the bayonet beyond the water, for the support of legitimate authority. No, sir, I am not afraid of the enactment of the Sedition law; there is now no occasion to defend ourselves, by such a measure, against the idle bark of every unnecessary cur in the Republic. But, Mr. R. said, he recollected when this vagrant power was first detected by this new sect, like an insect feeling for the soft and pulpy parts of the body politic, &c.

I remember to have heard it said, elsewhere, said Mr. R., that “when gentlemen talked of precedent, they forgot they were not in Westminster Hall.” Whatever trespass, said he, I may be guilty of upon the attention of the Committee, one thing I will promise them, and will faithfully perform my promise—I will dole out to them no political metaphysics. Sir, I unlearned metaphysics almost as early as Fontenelle, and he tells us, I think, it was at nine years old. I shall say nothing about that word municipal. I am almost as sick of it as honest Jack Falstaff was of “security”—it has been like ratsbane in my mouth, ever since the late Ruler of France took shelter under that word, to pocket our money; and incarcerate our persons, with the most profound respect for our neutral rights. I have done with the word municipal ever since that day. Let us come to the plain, common-sense construction of the Constitution. Sir, we live under a government of a peculiar structure, to which the doctrines of the European writers on civil polity do not apply—and when gentlemen get up and quote Vattel, as applicable to the powers of the Congress of the United States, I should as soon have expected them to quote Aristotle or the Koran. Our Government is not like the consolidated monarchies of the Old World—it is a solar system, an imperium in imperio: and, when the question is about the one or the other, what belongs to the imperium

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

and what to the imperio, we gain nothing by referring to Vattel. He treats of an integral government, a compact structure—lotus teres atque rotundus. But ours is a system composed of two distinct governments—the one general in its nature, the other internal. Now, sir, a government may be admirable for external, and yet execrable for internal purposes. And when the question of power in the Government arises, this is the problem which every honest man has to work. The powers of Government are divided, in our system, between the General and State Governments, except some powers, which the people have very wisely retained to themselves. With these exceptions, all the power its divided between the two Governments. The given power will not lie, unless, as in the case of direct taxes, the power is specifically given—and even then the States have a concurrent power. The question for every honest man to ask himself, is, to which of these two divisions of Government does the power in contest belong. And, said Mr. R., while I am on the subject of assumed power, permit me to say that, if my strength allows me, I shall be compelled to state some acts of assumption and usurpation on the part of the States, as well as on the part of the General Government; not that I at all agree with the gentleman from N. York, (Mr. STORRS,) that the danger of this Government is from the State governments; nor can I imitate, while I greatly admire the generosity with which that gentleman, a Representative from the largest State in the Union, would shear her of her strength—to do what? To preserve this Union? No. To reduce her to a level, by possibility, with the smallest State in the Union. And this, sir, reminds me of one other of the nothings we have done for the Western country. We have, among other nothings, given them, in case of an election of President coming into this House, nine votes out of twenty-four. We have erected them, as soon as their numbers would render it possible, under the law, into independent States, and thus given them, in the other branch of the Legislature, a voice to weigh down the voice, or counterpoise it, of New York or Pennsylvania. These are among the nothings we have done for them. This, then, is the problem we have to settle: does this power of internal improvement belong to the General or to the State Governments, or is it a concurrent power? Gentlemen say we have power, by the Constitution, to establish post roads, and, having established post roads, we should be much obliged to you to allow us, therefore, the power to construct the roads and canals into the bargain. If I had the physical strength, said Mr. R., I could easily demonstrate to the Committee that, supposing the power to exist on our part—of all the powers that can be exercised by this House, there is no power that would be more susceptible of abuse than this very power. Figure to yourself, said he, a committee of this House determining on some road, and giving out the contracts to the members of both Houses of Congress, or to their friends, &c. Sir, if I had strength I could show to this Committee that the Asiatic plunder of Leadenhall street has not been more corrupting to the British Government than the exercise of such a power as this would prove to us.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. STORRS,) says, that Congress possesses the power to coin money, and asks if that does not involve a jurisdiction over the whole subject of money? It does, sir; and yet I would, by-the-by, correct one mistake into which that gentleman alone has not fallen. In what does that power consist? In designating the metal, determining the rate of alloy, fixing the weight, directing the impress, and declaring the value of the coin—not in the mechanical act of coining. And if all our coin were struck by Watt & Bolton, at Birmingham, the coinage would be as much an act of sovereignty, if it had due weight, and the proper assay, &c., as if it were coined at the Mint in Philadelphia. But, sir, under this power what have we done? We have erected a bank, which will not redeem the notes of its branches, and the States are deluged with spurious bank paper; while, with this base currency throughout the land, debtors are bound to pay in specie. Sir, the bank note table in New York, in which they do not deign to name the banks of Kentucky, is a politico-economical curiosity; and, instead of one currency of uniform value, we have a thousand different kinds of base money, by ringing the changes upon which, we hear the profits which brokers, and shavers, and stock jobbers levy on the honest industry of the nation. I said, continued Mr. R., that this Government, if put to the test—a test it is by no means calculated to endure—as a Government for the management of the internal concerns of this country, is one of the worst that can be conceived—which is determined by the fact, that it is a Government not having a party feeling and common interest with the governed. I know, said he, that we are told—and it is the first time that the doctrine has been openly avowed—that, upon the responsibility of this House to the people, by means of the elective franchise, depends all the security of the people of the United States against the abuse of the powers of this Government. But, sir, how shall a man from Mackinaw, or the Yellow Stone river, respond to the sentiments of the people who live in New Hampshire? It is as great a mockery—a greater mockery than it was to talk to these colonies about their virtual representation in the British Parliament. I have no hesitation in saying that the liberties of the Colonies were safer in the custody of the British Parliament than they will be in any portion of this country, if all the powers of the States, as well as those of the General Government, are devolved on this House; and in this opinion I am borne out, and more than borne out, by the authority of Patrick Henry himself.

But the gentleman from New York, and some others who have spoken on this occasion, say, What! shall we be startled by a shadow? Shall we recoil from taking a power clearly within—(what?)—our reach? Shall we not clutch the sceptre—the air-drawn sceptre, that invites our hand, because of the fears and alarms of the gentleman from Virginia? Sir, if I cannot give reason to the Committee, they shall at least have authority. Thomas Jefferson, then in the vigor of his intellect, was one of the persons who denied the existence of such powers. James Madison was another. He, in that masterly and unrivalled report in the Legislature of Virginia, which is worthy to be the text-book of every American statesman, has settled this question. For me to attempt to add any thing to the arguments of that paper, would be to attempt to gild refined gold—to paint the lily—to throw a perfume on the violet—to smooth the ice, or add another hue unto the rainbow—in every aspect of it, wasteful and ridiculous excess. Neither will I hold up my farthing rush-light to the blaze of that meridian sun. But, sir, I cannot but deplore, and to my dying day I shall deplore—my heart aches when I think of it—that the hand which erected that monument of political wisdom, should have signed the act to incorporate the present Bank of the United States.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. OF R.

It was not a matter of conjecture, merely, Mr. R. said; but of fact—of notoriety, that there does exist on this subject an honest difference of opinion among enlightened men; that not one or two, but many States in the Union see with great concern and alarm the encroachments of the General Government on their authority. They feel that they have given up the power of the purse and the sword, and enabled men, with the purse in one hand and the sword in the other, to rifle them of all that they hold dear. Among the reveries of that strange and most extraordinary man, the late ruler of France, while he was dying, inch by inch, among the rats of St. Helena, he expressed the thought, that, if instead of Elba, he had chosen Corsica as the place of his retreat, when he was driven by the Allies out of France, he would have been enabled, from the bravery and devotion of the people, and the mountainous passes of the country, &c., to hold it against the combined Powers of Europe—as if a man who could not keep France, could keep any thing else. And we too, sir, now begin to perceive what we have surrendered—that, having given up the power of the purse and the sword, every thing else is at the mercy and forbearance of the General Government. We did believe there were some parchment barriers—no! what is worth all the parchment barriers in the world—that there was, in the powers of the States, some counterpoise to the power of this body; but, if this bill passes, we can believe so no longer.

I have mentioned Bonaparte—and, perhaps history cannot afford another example of such a rise, and of such a fall. We see him giving law in the Kremlin, in the ancient palace of the Muscovite Czars—in three years we see him in the island of St. Helena, enduring—I will not say what. With that example of humiliation before me, it costs me nothing to endure the triumph of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, (Mr. HEMPHILL,) who tells us that a new era is approaching—(not the era of good feeling, I am afraid, for that has come already,)—in which all Presidential squeamishness is to be at an end—when this Government shall enter on a new course, and we are to take a new latitude and departure. With this example before me, I must recall the recollection of three-and-twenty years ago, when that gentleman, who is the father of the present bill, was upholding, or, rather, endeavoring to uphold, the wreck and remnant of that system of policy which its triumphant adversaries had cloven down. I remember his exertions in regard to what has been called the Midnight Judiciary. Sir, at that time, I stood, in relation to this House, and to that gentleman, in a station very different from that which I now sustain, or ever expect—or, if I know myself, would ever wish, to occupy again. If that era arrives, to which the hopes, and wishes of the gentleman seem to aspire, it is a pity we have not some Dryden to celebrate its advent. Another Astræa redux will be hailed—and we shall once more listen to the strain,

“Jam redit et Virgo, redeunt Saturnia Regna.”

Sir, if this bill passes, we shall not only have a midnight, but a day-light, and star-light, judiciary bill. You will have what one of—I was going to say, (I must not call him so, but I will—I know not what else to call him,) the most violent Federalist I ever heard, once said, we ought to have—federal justices of the peace. For, you are told, that all the power that is claimed for Congress over roads, is a conservative power—that if robberies, (except of the mail,) or murders, are committed, or contracts are made on a road belonging to the United States, they will fall under the cognizance, and jurisdiction, of the State government. Sir, I am no lawyer; but this is the first time that I ever heard, that the effects of contracts was limited to the place of signature. I always have heard that they were, in their nature, transitive. But, sir, suppose the power to be conservative only—and suppose some breach is made in the road, or any other injury done to it, are you not to punish that injury? And, if any thing of a trespass is committed on this road, are you to haul a man all the way from the extreme verge of the largest States in the Union—for he must be tried in the Federal court, and not in a court of the State—to answer for having thrown a pebble in the road? and then, if aggrieved by the decision of the court, is he to be left to the remedy of coming here, to the Supreme Court, for his appeal?

But, sir, it is said we have a right to establish post offices and post roads, and we have a right to regulate commerce between the several States; and it is argued that “to regulate” commerce, is to prescribe the way in which it shall be carried on—which gives, by a liberal construction, the power to construct the way, that is, the roads and canals on which it is to be carried! Sir, since the days of that unfortunate man, of the German coast, whose name was originally Fyerstein, Anglicised to Firestone, but got, by translation, from that to Flint, from Flint to Pierre-a-Fusil, and from Pierre-a-Fusil to Peter Gun—never was greater violence done to English language, than by the construction, that, under the power to prescribe the way in which commerce shall be carried on, we have the right to construct the way on which it is to be carried. Are gentlemen aware of the colossal power they are giving to the General Government? Sir, I am afraid, that that ingenious gentleman, Mr. McAdam, will have to give up his title to the distinction of the Colossus of Roads, and surrender it to some gentlemen of this Committee, if they succeed in their efforts on this occasion. If, indeed, we have the power which is contended for by gentlemen under that clause of the Constitution which relates to the regulation of commerce among the several States, we may, under the same power, prohibit, altogether, the commerce between the States, or any portion of the States—or we may declare that it shall be carried on only in a particular way, by a particular road, or through a particular canal; or we may say to the people of a particular district, you shall only carry your produce to market through our canals, or over our roads, and then, by tolls, imposed upon them, we may acquire power to extend the same blessings and privileges to other districts of the country. Nay, we may go further. We may take it into our heads—Have we not the power to provide and maintain a navy? What is more necessary to a navy than seamen? And the great nursery of our seamen is (besides fisheries) the coasting trade—we may take it into our heads, that those monstrous lumbering wagons that now traverse the country between Philadelphia and Pittsburg, stand in the way of the raising of seamen, and may declare that no communication shall be held between these points but coastwise; we may specify some particular article in which alone trade shall be carried on. And, sir, if, contrary to all expectation, the ascendancy of Virginia, in the General Government, should again be established, it may be declared that coal shall be carried in no other way than coastwise, &c. Sir, there is no end to the purposes that may be effected under such constructions of power. I here beg of gentlemen to recollect—I particularly call upon the very few members of this House, who happen to be interested in the navigation of the river on which I reside, (the Roanoke,) to say, whether, after we have, with many efforts and a great expense, with the loss of at least half of our capital, effected the navigation of that river, it would be competent to this Government to seize upon our feeders, to assume jurisdiction of Lake Drummond, &c., and, for the accomplishment of some wild scheme—not more preposterous and ridiculous than some others I could name—drain the waters of that lake into the Atlantic ocean, and abolish our canal. If we should chance to encounter the displeasure of the Government, under these constructions of power, they may say to every wagoner in North Carolina, you shall not carry on any commerce across the Virginia line, in wagons or carts, because I have some other object to answer, by a suppression of that trade. Are gentlemen prepared for this?

There is one other power, said Mr. R., which may be exercised, in case the power now contended for be conceded, to which I ask the attention of every gentleman who happens to stand in the same unfortunate predicament with myself—of every man who has the misfortune to be, and to have been born, a slaveholder. If Congress possesses the power to do what is proposed by this bill, they may not only enact a sedition law—for there is precedent—but they may emancipate every slave in the United States—and with stronger color of reason than they can exercise the power now contended for. And where will they find the power? They may follow the example of the gentlemen who have preceded me, and hook the power upon the first loop they find in the Constitution; they might take the preamble—perhaps the war making power—or they might take a greater sweep, and say, with some gentlemen, that it is not to be found in this or that of the granted powers, but results from all of them—which is not only a dangerous, but the most dangerous doctrine. Was it not demonstrable, Mr. R. asked, that slave labor is the dearest in the world—and that the existence of a large body of slaves is a source of danger? Suppose we are at war with a foreign Power, and freedom should be offered them by Congress as an inducement to them to take a part in it—or suppose the country not at war, at every turn of this federal machine, at every successive census, that interest will find itself governed by another and increasing power, which is bound to it neither by any common tie of interest or feeling. And, if ever the time shall arrive, as assuredly it has arrived elsewhere, and, in all probability, may arrive here, that a coalition of knavery and fanaticism shall, for any purpose, be got up on this floor, I ask gentlemen, who stand in the same predicament as I do, to look well to what they are now doing—to the colossal power with which they are now arming this Government. The power to do what I allude to is, I aver, more honestly inferrible from the war-making power, than the power we are now about to exercise. Let them look forward to the time when such a question shall arise, and tremble with me at the thought that that question is to be decided by a majority of the votes of this House, of whom not one possesses the slightest tie of common interest or of common feeling with us.

When, on a late occasion, it was proposed to this House to give a grant of some ninety pounds, lawful money, to rock the cradle of declining age, to smooth the pillow of an ancient gentlewoman, the mother of a race of heroes—a race to whom some of us seem to have a constitutional and instinctive antipathy—we have been met with a cry of danger to the Constitution! of danger to the liberties of the country! But, when it is proposed to draw the last shilling from the pockets of honest industry, to be laid out, as from the very nature of the thing it must be laid out in jobs, and contracts, and corruption—and if you will trace the execution of all your projects—the Rip Rap, or others, you will find the process is the same in all—you are told that in making roads and digging canals, and spending millions upon them, you are promoting the honor, and interest, and grandeur of the country! And this, Mr. Chairman, for fear that the States, which are all clamorous, burdening your table with daily petitions, to get you to extend your post routes through all the States and Territories, should undertake to stop the passage of the United States mail! Why, sir, if we suppose a case like this, we may suppose a universal madness seizing on the whole population of the country, and argue from that supposition.

JANUARY, 1824.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

H. or R.

And this brings me, said Mr. R., to notice an admission, as it has been called, of my worthy colleague, of the power of altering post roads, after they are established. I cannot understand this as gentlemen appear to do, and I know that my colleague is not correctly so understood. Sir, in the State, one of whose representatives I am, I don't know a single post route that has not been changed from what it was when established as a post road by the statute. Why, sir, you will not, at this moment, on the mail route from the capital of the United States to the capital of Virginia, travel for the first twenty miles on a single inch of the road as it existed when that mail route was first established. What follows from the doctrine of gentlemen on this subject? Why, that if Virginia should do what she ought to do—make a good road between the two points referred to—the mail is yet to continue to go, as now, plunging through the worse than Serbonian bogs, between the Nabsco and Chapawamsic, and we shall do it, because it is treason—not by the Constitution of the United States, to be sure, but about as pretty a case of constructive treason, as a latitudinarian judge could desire to see on a Summer's day, to alter a post road. From the doctrines now advanced on this floor, it follows, that every mile that a post route is changed, whether for the better or worse, the powers of Government are impugned; and (nullum tempus occurrit regi) we do not know what a mass of criminality may not have been incurred, and very innocently incurred, because never, till now, had our people a preceptor learned enough to instruct them in the true meaning of the word "establish."

After a short pause, Mr. R. said, it was to him a matter of painful reflection how utterly inadequate he felt himself to say what he intended to have said, and still more as he intended to say it. But, before I sit down, said Mr. R., permit me to put it to the candor even of those members of this House who differ from me respecting the constitutionality of the power now claimed, to say what there is in the state of this nation, at this particular juncture, that calls for the immediate exercise of this power, supposing it to be possessed.

The honorable gentleman from Delaware tells us we have power to purchase stock, and thus promote objects of internal improvement, where they are commenced by the States or by individual enterprise. Sir, if we have money to spare, let me advise the gentleman, who is chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, to begin with buying our own stock. We can do nothing better with our money than buy our own bonds. I have known many speculators leave their own debts unpaid to purchase the property of others; but I never knew one of them to come to good. Let us discharge our war debt, and no longer put off the payment of it by shuffling evasions, under pretence of a change of stock. Individuals, not inferior to any in the country, and some of the great States, too, also entertain serious doubts of the power of Congress to pass this bill. I should wish, in the course of future discussion, that some gentleman would show the urgency of the occasion to make the plunge at this moment. Are there not already causes enough of jealousy and discord existing among us? Is this the most auspicious time to set up a new construction of the Constitution? Is this the most auspicious time for the exercise of the assumption of a power which the gentleman from New York, with his usual perspicacity, so clearly sees we possess, but which Thomas Jefferson, and James Madison, and others of at least equal authority with the gentleman from New York, as clearly see we do not possess? Is this a time to increase those jealousies between different quarters of the country already sufficiently apparent?

I intended, said Mr. R., to have managed this subject in a different manner; but the exhaustion of both bodily and mental powers calls on me to do what I ought to have done long ago—to draw these remarks to a close. But it is too late in the day for me to speak for reputation. Whatever is to be the fate of this bill—whether this splendid project shall or shall not go into operation now, or be reserved for the new reign, the approach of which is hailed with so much pleasure, my place must be either in the obscurity of private life, or in the thankless and profitless employment of attempting to uphold the rights of the States, and of the people, so long as I can stand—more especially the rights of my native State, the land of my sires, which, although I be among the least worthy or least favored of her sons, and although she may allot to me a step-son's portion—I will uphold, so long as I live.

Let us, then, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, pay our debts, personal and public; let us leave the profits of labor in the pockets of the people, to rid them of that private embarrassment under which they so extensively suffer, and apply every shilling of the revenue, not indispensable to the exigencies of the Government, to the faithful discharge of the public debt, before we engage in any new schemes of lavish expenditure. Sir, we have already paid more interest on the three per cent. stock, than the amount of the whole principal of that debt at nominal par.

Should this bill pass, one more measure only requires to be consummated; and then we, who belong to that unfortunate portion of this Confederacy which is south of Mason and Dixon's line, and east of the Alleghany mountains, have to make up our mind to perish like so many mice in a receiver of mephitic gas, under the experiments of a set of new political chemists; or we must resort to the measures which we first opposed to British aggressions and usurpations—to maintain that independence which the valor of our fathers acquired, but which is every day sliding from under our feet. I beseech all those gentlemen who come from that portion of the Union to take into serious consideration, whether they are not, by the passage of this bill, precipitately, at least without urgent occasion, now arming the General Government with powers hitherto unknown—under which we shall become, what the miserable proprietors of Jamaica and Barbadoes are to their English mortgagees, mere stewards—sentinels—managers of slave labor—we ourselves retaining, on a footing with the slave of the West Indies, just enough of the product of our estates to support life, while all the profits go with the course of the Gulf stream. Sir, this is a state of things that cannot last. If it shall continue with accumulated pressure, we must oppose to it associations, and every other means short of actual insurrection. We must begin to construe the Constitution like those who treat it as a bill of indictment, in which they are anxious to pick a flaw—we shall keep on the windward side of treason—but we must combine to resist, and that effectually, these encroachments, or the little upon which we now barely subsist will be taken from us. With these observations, Mr. R. abandoned the question to its fate.

H. OF R.

Surveys for Roads and Canals.

JANUARY, 1824.

When Mr. RANDOLPH had concluded—

Mr. CLAY rose in reply to Mr. RANDOLPH. It had certainly, he said, been far from his intention again to trouble the Committee on the present subject. He felt restrained, not only by a consideration of the time that had already been spent upon it, but also by the state of his own health; but allusions so frequent, and of such a marked character, had been made to him, (especially by the honorable gentleman who had just taken his seat,) that he trusted it would not be deemed a trespass on the Committee if he should briefly notice some of them.

The gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. ARCHER,) for the general character of whose discussion he felt the highest respect; and whose intelligent mind never led him to say what was not, at least, worthy of serious consideration, had observed, in the course of his speech, (which I regret that I heard only in part,) that he was quite sure I would concede that, in ascertaining what were lawful means to be taken for carrying into effect either of the granted powers in the Constitution, a congruity would be required in such means with the power to be executed. To this I then nodded assent; and I now repeat the expression of my concurrence. But I submit it to the Committee to say, whether there is any discrepancy between roads and canals as a means, and the transportation of troops and munitions of war as an end; between good roads as a means, and the transportation of the mail as an end; between roads and canals as a means, and the regulating and facilitating of internal commerce as an end.

Another gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. STEVENSON,) whose speech I had the pleasure of hearing throughout, alluded to a speech of mine, delivered on a former occasion, and which contained, as he contended, sentiments in opposition to those expressed by me in the present debate. Although I think it somewhat unfair to travel out of the proceedings of this House in search of arguments advanced on a different occasion and in another body, yet, whatever others may say, I, for one, have never felt the slightest difficulty in owning any and every part of the course I have pursued, and in avowing the motives by which I have been actuated. It is true that I was opposed to the renewal of the charter of the old Bank of the United States. My opposition to it arose from various motives, involving not merely the Constitutional question, but the expediency of the measure. I admit that I did not, at that time, believe that Congress could, constitutionally, grant the incorporation. But, on another occasion, after much experience had, in a state of war and in the most perilous times, of the urgent necessity of such an institution, I did, on farther consideration, change my opinion, and, in having done so, I stand in company with some of the best, the wisest, and the purest men of our country, and especially with that man who most deserves the gratitude of this country for the establishment of this Government—I mean the late Chief Magistrate of the United States, and with one not less honest, though less distinguished, the present Governor of Virginia. The conviction was forced upon us by necessity and the lights of experience. But, while I acknowledge this, I must, at the same time, be permitted to say, that I think the gentleman who urged this, has utterly failed of establishing the slightest contradiction between the principles I then held and those on which I advocate the present bill. His failure is most signal. He first assumes it for granted, that if Congress does not possess the power of incorporation, it has no power to make internal improvements; and then he urges my objections against the former power to disprove the existence of the latter. But I am sure that, to do away this assumption. I may appeal not only to his own candor, (for I never admitted what he assumes,) but to the example of his own State, which has, at this moment, a Board of Internal Improvements, sanctioned and aided by the State Legislature, and yet not incorporated; and to the example of this Government, which made the Cumberland road without granting any act of incorporation to effect it. So that, even granting him the full benefit of the opinion I formerly held and expressed in the Senate, and which he now quotes against me, it does not advance him one step in his argument.

